Appointment for Special Work

WAR AIMS OF GOVERNMENT PRESENTED BY COLORED SPEAKERS

Announcement Made Through Office of Emmett Scott, Special Assistant to Secretary of War

Western Reserve 6-1-18

PURPOSE AND SCOPE OF WORK.

Through the office of Mr. Emmett J. Scott, special assistant to the Secretary of War, it is announced that the War Department and the speaking division of the Committee on Public Information, recognizing the importance of enlightening Negro public opinion as to the War aims of the Government, have decided to appoint a special committee of speakers, to be composed of leading colored Americans, who shall, as opportunity offers, seek to create and mobilize public opinion which shall back up the Government in the prosecution of the war.

As has been stated, the issue of this struggle depends to a large extent on the way public opinion in the United States is stimulated and directed. It is indeed only through the united efforts of enlightened and enthusiastic Americans that the full strength of the Nation can be exerted, that victory can come to our righteous cause, and that America can accomplish those things for which she entered this conflict. Upon the leaders of our public opinion, therefore, rests a responsibility heavier than perhaps ever rested upon any group of people in our entire history. It is a task which can be performed only by men and women who themselves are well informed and who co-operate with all patriotic organizations, governmental and private, which are unifying public opinion in support of the national purpose.

The following gentlemen who are representative of Negro thought and opinion, have been requested by the War Department and the Committee on Public Information to render the services above indicated.

THE RED CROSS' ATTITUDE.

The Bee April 13, 1918

We are advised that Mr. Emmett J. Scott has been selected to serve as a member of the Finance Committee of the local chapter of the Red Cross. It is reported his selection was at the instance of Mr. Henry B. F. Macfarland, a local white man. It appears to The Bee, since the local chapter is composed of local people, some colored person in Washington, out of the more than one hundred thousand colored population here, might have been found sufficiently capable of representing the race. Mr. Scott is a citizen of Alabama. He is just here temporarily. The person chosen ought to have been a local colored man or woman. Mr. Scott would do wise to decline to serve. Colored people have been insisting, because of the very large sum the race has contributed to the Red Cross throughout the country, that the organization should give recognition to colored nurses and colored physicians. To date the amount contributed by colored people to the Red Cross is far in excess of what will be spent on deserving colored people by that organization. Rather than recognize colored nurses, although nurses are in great demand, and rather than recognize colored physicians, the Red Cross appoints Mr. Scott on the Finance Committee of the "local" chapter of its organization. We asked for bread, and they gave us a stone. We asked for recognition of our loyalty and contributions, and our abilities justified, and they attempt to camouflage us with a bit of imagination. The Red Cross is a splendid — a beneficent — organization. Mr. Scott is a worthy, an exceptionally creditable man, of high attainments, and a true race man. But neither of these should blind us to the justice of the Red Cross recognizing colored nurses and colored physicians. If this justice—this representation—is to be denied us by the Red Cross; if the Red Cross is to bow, in this great crisis, when loyalty, patriotism and service is being called for, to the South's demand for discrimination and segregation, then the Red Cross should not call upon colored people for contributions, and the race, rather than accept this discrimination at this time, ought to combine to look after its own—separate and distinct.

The Bee is in hopes that the Red Cross will see the inconsistency of calling on us for taxes, but refusing us representation. The Bee is in hopes that the Red Cross will consider that the selection of Mr. Scott on the Finance Committee of the local chapter is NOT a recognition of our earnest plea for a recognition of well-equipped colored nurses and colored physicians, each and all of whom are willing and anxious to serve the country in this the hour of peril.

MORE SOLDIERS TO DIE FOR TEXAS RIOTS

Did Emmett J. Scott Hasten Matters?

The Topeka

Death Penalty Approved a Few Days After Letter to Fred Moore Was Sent to Mr. Scott.

Plain Dealer.

We note with deep sorrow that President Wilson has approved of the findings of the court martial by which six brave colored soldiers are to be hanged for participation in the Houston riots in August, 1917. Death sentence of ten others were commuted to life imprisonment. It will be remembered that these soldiers were acting in self defense from the fact that they had been mistreated and assaulted by the police of Houston and it had been reported to them that a mob of white men had threatened to swoop down upon their camp and drive them out. Acting on this information the soldiers prepared themselves and receiving orders from non-commissioned officers that the mob was descending upon them, they begin to fire and at the same time marching upon the town, which action resulted in the death of several persons.

They were taken to Fort Sam Houston, disarmed and through the policy of Texas officers investigation was started and some weak minded men from the South who had been in the service only a few months were induced to turn state's evidence on a promise of immunity. From what we have read of the trial it seems that this was a kangaroo court and the men were never fairly tried.

There have been three court martials. Sixty-three soldiers were tried in the first which resulted in the hanging of thirteen without their cases ever being reviewed by President Wilson. Forty others were sent to the Federal prison for life and the remaining ten were disposed of in various ways, three or four were sent to military prison and a few were given jail sentences. A second court martial resulted in the conviction of sixteen which sentences President Wilson has just approved with the following statement:

"I commute the remaining sentences," the president said in a statement attached to the record, "because I believe the lesson of this lawless riot will have been adequately pointed out by the action already taken and that now directed and also because I desire the clemency here ordered to be a recognition of the splendid loyalty of the race to which these soldiers belong and an inspiration to the people of that race to further zeal and service to the country they are citizens of and for the liberations of which so many of them are now bravely bearing arms at the very front of the great fields of battle."

It is amusing to us to read this comment when we think that President Wilson has just issued an order against mob violence and here approves of the hanging of six brave soldiers and thirteen have already been hanged for the same offense without his consent which act was in our opinion the same as lynching. The President has at this time under consideration the case of five others who were sentenced to be hanged for participation in the riots. This makes a total of twenty-four brave colored soldiers to be executed for participation in the Houston riots. The President says that the reason he commutes the sentences of these ten is because of the loyalty shown by the colored people and the bravery of the boys at the "very front." We fail to understand how the colored soldiers or the colored race are to gain any consolation from this statement when thirteen soldiers have already been put to death and the cases of eleven more are hanging in the balance expecting at any time to be executed. It seems to us that this would strike constarnation in the hearts of the brave colored soldiers at the front and those at home like wise.

The evidence snows that this riot at Houston occurred in the night when it was very dark and it was impossible to tell who were taking part. These soldiers were convicted upon circumstancial evidence given by soldiers forced to testify as they did on account of fear or promises made them for their own safety. As President Wilson has well said, our colored citizens and soldiers are loyally doing their part in a patriotic way and are bravely bearing arms for the defense of democracy in this country and yet at the same time the President has been informed of the mistreatment of colored soldiers in this country, but as yet no steps seem to have been taken to correct this evil.

It is a shame and disgrace to Christian civilization to have all of these men executed and imprisoned for trying to defend their rights in Texas. The officers who are responsible for starting this trouble have never been punished to any extent.

Was it Moore's Unthoughtfulness and Scott's Anxiety to Make Good?

We desire to call the attention of the public and especially the colored people as to the why we think this approval of the findings of this court martial by the President was rushed through after laying dormant for several months.

Following is a copy of a letter which we sent to Mr. Fred R. Moore of The New York Age. Mr. Moore proceeds to send the letter to Emmett J. Scott, special assistant to the Secretary of War, and Mr. Scott in turn presents the letter to Secretary Baker. We are printing below copy of the letter sent to Mr. Moore by Mr. Scott after the letter written by us had been brought to the attention of the Secretary of War:

Our Letter to Mr. Moore.

Topeka, Kans., July 31, 1918.

Mr. Fred R. Moore,
Editor The Age,
New York, City.

My Dear Sir: I am contemplating a trip East, starting about August 20 and would like for you to arrange a meeting for me that I might get before some patriotic people of the race and make a talk with reference to the Kansas Defense Society, an organization which is raising funds to defend those soldiers of the 24th Infantry who were court martialled for participation in the Houston riots and are now incarcerated in the federal prison at Leavenworth. For this same offense, as you will remember, thirteen were hanged. This case was never reviewed by President Wilson and we have secured three lawyers who are preparing to bring habeas corpus proceedings in the United States court as we expect to take this case to the highest court in the land, if necessary. I shall visit New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore and some places in Indiana; and shall ask the people to donate whatever they feel disposed to give and I am sure every patriotic colored citizen will do something in this matter. Let me hear from you if you can arrange this meeting or get someone to do so. I shall let you know the exact date that I will be in your city.

With kindest regards, I am.

Very truly yours,
NICK CHILES,
President Kansas Defense Society.

Scott Replies to Moore.

Washington, Aug. 12, 1918.

Mr. Fred R. Moore,
247 W. 46th Street,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Moore: I am returning herewith the letter addressed to you by Mr. Nick Chiles. The Secretary of War thinks it would be most inadvisable to have Mr. Chiles undertake such a speaking tour as he suggests. The Secretary says:

"I do not know what lawyers he has retained, but I feel perfectly certain that no cases have ever been examined with as much care as the Houston Riot cases are now receiving. I have substantially completed my examination of them, but the record covers thousands of pages, and when the President is called upon to act he will be fully informed of every circumstances which can in any way be made to operate in favor of the convicted men."

Under the circumstances it seems to me that it would not be unwise for you to communicate these facts to Mr. Nick Chiles. I am enclosing carbon copy of this letter for that purpose unless you care to send the original.

Yours sincerely,
EMMETT J. SCOTT,
Special Assistant, Room 131.

In the first instance Mr. Moore had no business sending the letter to Mr. Scott and Mr. Scott had no business presenting our letter to the Secretary of War. It seems to us that the War Department was sleeping on this matter that the President has just approved and probably intended to leave it until after the war. From the tenor of Mr. Scott's letter it seems that the War Department got busy and rushed this matter through and sent it to the President for approval. No doubt this is the finding of the War Department and the President merely approved what they sent up to him. We are very sorry that Mr. Scott presented this letter to the Secretary of War and it is our opinoin that had this letter been kept from the War Department that these soldiers would have had longer to live.

Appointment for Special Work

HOW THE NEGRO STANDS WITH THE POWERS AT WASHINGTON

Scott and Tyler Alarmed When The Plaindealer Man Called at the White House.

The Topeka Plaindealer.

Colored Nurses for the Army and Other Stories are all Bosh—A Personal Talk With Sec. Baker and Mr. Tumulty.

We have just returned from a trip to Washington, D. C. En route we stopped at Chicago, Gary, Ind., Detroit, Niagara Falls, Albany, New York City, Philadelphia, Baltimore and a few hours at Harrisburg, Pa. We will be for sometime dwelling upon our trip and what we saw and heard and what the race is doing, the good as well as the bad.

Our mission was to see the colored newspaper men in the different cities we visited and solicit their aid in helping us in strengthening the Kansas Defense Society for the Court Martialled Soldiers of the Twenty-fourth which organization will also take up other matters pertaining to the race from time to time. We were in a rush and herefore did not have time to visit all of the colored journals.

At Chicago we visited at the office The Defender, of which, Hon. R. S. Abbott, former member of the Plaindealer staff is editor and owner; The National Defender and Sun, Gary, Ind., our friend, Hon. J. D. Cook, editor; The Detroit Leader, Hon. W. P. Kemp, editor; The Amsterdam News, E. A. Warren, editor; New York Age, Fred R. Moore, editor; The Christian Recorder at Philadelphia, R. R. Wright, editor and also manager of the publishing house; The Afro-American at Baltimore, Col. Murphy, editor and the office of The Daily (Baltimore) Herald, the only colored daily newspaper in the United States; and the office of The Eagle at Washington, Finley Wilson, editor. We were courteously received and assured by these editors that we were on the right track and they would give us their support and make the Kansas Defense Society an organization to be supported by the colored newspapers of the country. We think the time has come when organizations of this character should be managed and conducted by colored people. We are taking the case of the thirty-nine court martialled soldiers as our initiative step and have secured attorneys who will bring proceedings in a few days to test the question as to whether or not these soldiers were fairly treated and are being legally held as we claim they were not.

One of our main objects at the National Capital was to visit some of our congressmen and senators and the President, Secretary of War and Hon. William G. McAdoo, director general of railroads. We are under many obligations to Senator Curtis for making the proper arrangements for us at the White House and also at the War Department and Department of Justice. Arrangements were being made for us to meet Secretary McAdoo but as that gentleman was sick, we had preparations for a conference with him discontinued.

A Talk With Mr. Tumulty.

On our arrival at the White House we were ushered into the private room of the private secretary to the president, Mr. Tumulty and after a few minutes he came in and asked our wishes and when we told him that we desired to see President Wilson, were informed that he was at golf so we took up our matter with Mr. Tumulty with the understanding that he was to submit it to the President for consideration. In a typewritten letter we complained to the President about the treatment of our colored soldiers on Pullmans and that they were not allowed to eat in the dining rooms of railroad trains; the discrimination against colored commissioned officers and the need of colored officers with all of our regiments for the reason that white officers do not understand colored men as they do themselves and as long as we have colored soldiers it is no more than right that they should be officered by colored men. If more colored men were commissioned and promoted there would be a better feeling among the members of the race and better fighting by our soldiers as the recognition of their merit would serve to encourage them. We also told him that we were reliably informed that of all the draft boards in the United States not a single colored man was permitted to serve as a member, and that the colored people of the country were asking that they be given colored nurses to care for our soldiers. We called his attention to the fact that colored surgeons are being commissioned and not being called; and that our young men were barred from the marine and navy departments and never given proper consideration.

We expressed our thanks for what he said to the American people in his appeal to them to stop lynching but we hoped that he would go further and ask Congress to enact a law that will make lynching a crime punisbable by fine and imprisonment and providing for an indemnity to be paid to the relatives of the unfortunate person.

We personally called the attention of Mr. Tumulty to the outrages perpetrated upon a commissioned colored officer en route from New York to Camp Doniphan, Okla., under orders from the War Department who was arrested and taken from a Pullman at Chickasha and fined $24 which he paid. We asked him to have this town refund the money to the officer because this soldier was on a mission for the Government and the Government also had control of the railroads at the time and no civil officer had the right to interfere with soldiers traveling under orders from the Government. His reply was, "Can this be true?" and he looked astonished. We assured him that it was a fact and he asked that we send him the particulars and he would look the matter up. Now we have already written about this matter to this department and also to the secretary of war but we shall inform Mr. Tumulty again of this henious crime against the Government and a brave colored soldier. We do not know how serious Mr. Tumulty is on outrages of this character nor how far his administration will go toward investigating the same but we shall do our duty and await results.

Four Minutes With Secretary Baker.

By special arrangement on the part of Senator Curtis we were permitted to have a four-minute interview with Secretary of War Baker.

After the usual red tape of a colored messenger taking our letter of introduction to the Secretary of War, we were invited into a room and asked to be seated among a large number of other people who were in waiting for the same purpose. At 12:45 Mr. Baker came into the room and from left to right he begin conversing and receiving the visitors, each of whom had business of some nature with him. Mr. Baker is a man who seems to move on the impulse of the moment, is small in statue, weighing about 140 pounds and about five foot five inches in height.

Scott and Tyler Worried as to Our Mission With Mr. Baker.

About the time Mr. Baker was to give us an audience, in stepped Mr. Emmett J. Scott, his special assistant and Mr. Ralph Tyler, and for what purpose we do not know, but it seemed to us that they were there to see what we had to say to Mr. Baker, having been tipped by some of of the "runners" in the hall that a strange colored man was about to approach the Secretary of War, and the colored contingents could not understand how a colored man unannounced and alone could have business with Secretary Baker without coming through Scott and Tyler. Mr. Scott made the first visit alone and we met him and assured him that we would call on him after we were through with the Secretary of War. He then left and in a few minutes he returned with Mr. Tyler.

Our interview with the Secretary of War was not very pleasant for him as we not only submitted to him complaints as given in our letter to the President, but we asked him personally about the case of the commissioned officer who was arrested and fined at Chickasha, Okla., for riding in a Pullman from New York en route to Camp Doniphan under orders from his department and we would like for him to see to it that this soldier was refunded the fine he was compelled to pay. He said that he had no power to do anything, but this soldier could ask redress in the courts to which we replied that this man was in the service of the Government and his time was not his own and that it was the duty of the Secretary of War to issue a general order against discrimination of any kind against American soldiers. Such an order would put an end to all such outrages. Ths seemed to peeve Mr. Baker and he asked us if we wished to do all of the talking. Our reply was that we merely wanted to make suggestions to help him if he desired to do the right thing by the colored soldiers. He said that all complaints concerning colored soldiers should be turned over to Mr. Scott. (This of course tickled Scott and Tyler.) We told Secretary Baker that Mr. Scott could not issue the orders that were necessary but that it was up to the Secretary of War and in answer to this he stepped aside and handed our complaint to Mr. Scott. We bade him goodbye and called at Mr. Scott's office to await his return in company with Mr. Tyler.

On arriving, Mr. Scott joyfully asked if we heard what the Secretary of War said in reference to his authority and we with equally as much joy asked if he heard what we said to the Secretary; and that he, Scott, knew well that these outrages against colored soldiers over the country were NOT being given proper consideration by the War Department and that he could only take these matters up with the Department, but had no power to issue general orders which was the thing needed to put a stop to all outrages.

Scott's Job Carries no Power.

If the Secretary of War would give Mr. Scott authority to issue general orders against outrages that are perpetrated upon colored soldiers, then we would think Mr. Scott had a position of some worth, but as it is he is simply a sort of go-between to keep the colored people from laying at Secretary Baker, but instead they are directed to Mr. Scott, who can do no more about correcting an error than the party who makes the complaint. The case of the colored officer being fined in Oklahoma was handed to Mr. Scott before his visit to Camp Funston which was some three months ago, and he was going to turn things upside down in that case, but investigation shows that the matter is dead—forgotten by the men through whom Mr. Scott was to obtain redress for the humiliated army officer. Special assistant to the Secertary of War sounds big and that's all.

Colored Nurses for Army Service is a Hoax.

All of this stuff that has been sent out through the colored newspapers about the desire for colored nurses is all bosh. We want to give facts. We met the lady who is at the head of this department and we questioned her in reference to colored nurses and she referred us to another officer, Col. Baldwin, in the Surgeon General's department and he informed us that the Government was organizing a trained nurse department for the instruction of white women but no colored would be admitted. He said that there was now being erected small buildings at Funston, Dodge, Grant, Dix, Taylor and Sherman for colored nurses and after these were completed the Red Cross would recommend nurses to be appointed to these places and they would probably number from seven to ten at each place making a total of fifty or sixty. He volunteered the information that a cablegram was sent to General Perishing asking if he could use colored nurses and he replied that he could not and the reason the department gives for such an answer is that there are so few colored soldiers in the different units in the French hospitals that it was unnecessary to have colored nurses, but we said it was because the French had no prejudice and treated all soldiers in their hospitals alike.

The Case of Colored Doctors.

We called upon Lieut. J. S. Coulter in the Surgeon General's department and inquired as to the reason our colored medical officers are not being assigned to duty after being commissioned. He replied that they were only assigned after the orders came from the adjutant general. Since the adjutant general has only assigned white men, our medical officers who have been commissioned cannot expect much encouragement. The following report was given to us in regard to colored officers in the medical department:

Medical officers commissioned 356.
Medical officers in service 95.
Dental officers commissioned 66.

Dental officers in service 33.

Sanitary Corps Officers commissioned 1, recommended by authorities in France and at present serving abroad.

Our advise to the colored people is to write letters to their congressmen and senators and ask that an investigation be held concerning the treatment of our soldiers, including the stevedore regiment at New Port News, Va. We think the War Department should be asked to submit all complaints they have regarding outrages against colored soldiers to a military committee from the Senate and House for investigation. This was done in the instance of the mistreatment of white soldiers in the hospials by white officers who were dismissed from the service and the conditions thoroughly changed so that there are no complaints at this time but colored soldiers are complaining about indignities heaped upon them especially by Southern officers and there should be a united effort on the part of the race and the best white people to see that colored soldiers are not discriminated against and that colored commissioned officers be placed over colored soldiers and that they be promoted as they merit it.

Leaders Send Out False Statements

There is also something wrong with our leading colored men in Washington. There have been too many lies sent out from the seat of government concerning the advancement of nurses and soldiers which are misleading and damaging to the colored people as a whole. There are several hundred young colored girls filling out applications and making efforts to get into the trained nurse departcent when at the same time they are barred. We do not know who is responsible for these false statements but they should be stopped.

Complaints from Over the Country.

Mr. Scott showed us communications from different parts of the country conerning the mistreatment of colored soldiers and such matters should be given to the daily papers of New York and Chicago if the Washington papers fail to give them publicity. There are several camps where soldiers are not given proper athletic exercise and colored officers are not being assigned to duty as fast as commissioned from the schools.

In our next issue we shall give a detailed account of the progress of the race in Chicago and Washington.

EDITOR B. J. DAVIS HIGHLY HONORED

Atlanta Independent April 20, 1918.

Made a Member of the Public Speaking Division.

Washington, D. C., April 5, 1918.

Mr. Benjamin J. Davis, Editor,
Atlanta, Ga.

My dear Mr. Davis:

I am delighted to note your splendid willingness to be of service to our Government, especially in that way and manner for which you are so well qualified—namely, as a member of the public speaking division of the war department, etc. Your assistance in this direction, I am sure, will be vitally helpful and the necessary ammunition will be sent you within a few days.

Any and all suggestions concerning this or any other phase of my work here in the National Capital (that you may have the kindness to make) will always be welcomed and appreciated.

I have been gratified by the tone of your letter and other acceptance thus far received, and, at the first opportunity, I shall bring the same to the attention of the Secretary of War, etc.

Sincerely yours,
EMMETT J. SCOTT,
Special Assistant.

JOHN D. BARRY WRITES ON "NEGROES AND THE WAR."

Louisville News April 27, 1918

Gives a Little Sketch of Emmett J. Scott.

Hon. Emmett J. Scott.

Shortly after we entered the war Emmett J. Scott, Secretary of Tuskegee, for many years closely associated with the late Booker T. Washington, wrote to Julius Rosenwald of Chicago, one of the Tuskegee trustees, suggesting that the Negro soldiers have a counselor in Washington, both to give them guidance and to look after their interests. Rosenwald at once approved and entered into communication on the subject with Washington's successor at Tuskegee, Major Robert R. Moton, who wrote to both President Wilson and Secretary of War Baker. The result was that Scott was detached from Tuskegee for a while and sent to Washington, where he now has an office in the War Department. He has made himself so useful that he will probably stay there till the war is over.

In the first draft, out of one hundred thousand men, eighty thousand were colored. Out of every hundred colored men certified for service thirty-six were accepted. Twenty-five were accepted out of every hundred whites. Perhaps the boards were less regardful of Negroes. On the other hand, the Negroes may have been physically more fit. General Crowder says that fewer Negroes applied for exemption than whites.

In Atlanta virtually all the Negroes were accepted and virtually all the whites were exempted. The board was removed.

In the District of Columbia, though, at this time, the Colored people were about one-third the population, they contributed considerably more than one-third the number of scoldiers.

There were many problems associated with the Negroes in the war. Most of the more intelligent Negroes favored separation. But they were concerned about discrimination. It was natural that they should feel both suspicions and sensitive. For example, when they found themselves in large numbers assigned to battalions for manual labor there was some grumbling among them, though they knew that many of the white soldiers had also been assigned to such labor. One manual laborer in the ranks wrote from France: Our men want to fight and die in the trenchees just as other men want to fight and die in the trenches." According to the first estimate of the War Department three hundred and fifty thousand men were to be put into the service battalions and fifty thousand of them were to be chosen from among the Colored soldiers. Where the Colored were, roughly speaking, about one in twelve as compared with the whites of the first draft, they would contribute one in seven to the manual laborers. Nearly all the stevedores selected were Colored, for the reason that many of them were experienced stevedores from such ports as Galveston, Pensecola, New Orleans, Savannah and Charlestown.

Scott is a pretty busy man. His work obliges him to use several other Colored men in his office as assistants. Whenever a colored soldier wants advice or wants to file a complaint, it is to Scott he turns. And a more tactful counselor than this intelligent, accomplished Negro could hardly be imagined. On looking at his smooth, unlined, smiling face, you would never suspect that he was forty-five years old. He has seen his people do a good deal of traveling in the past quarter century and he has traveled with them. He makesa point of keeping in touch with the feeling and thought of the Colored race throughout the country. A great many of the two hundred newspapers and magazines that now represent them pass under his eye. For the Negroes are becoming articculate. Political, economic, educational and social opportunities, in spite of limitations, are counting in ways that would gladden Abraham Lincoln if he were alive today.

Here is one kind of comment, published in The Advocate of Cleveland, that reaches that office in the War Department, headed: "More Work for Mr. Scott."

"It is regrettable, it is depressing, it is discouraging to learn that a Colored man, wearing the uniform of an American army officer, en route to his post at Fort Sill, where ordered by his government, should be taken from the train, tried and fined by a local court, because he refused to leave his berth in a sleeping car, which he paid for, while passing through the State of Oklahoma, and especially so at a time when the railroads are under government control.

"It is wonderful—a marvel—that our race is showing such splendid loyalty to country—such patriotism—when denied the comforts and conveniences, the rights and privileges enjoyed by others who have offered their services to fight, bleed and die for their country.

"It is to be hoped that Mr. Emmett J. Scott, our only intermediary in the War Department—or any other department of this great government—will cite this case, and have steps taken, if possible, that will prevent other Colored men—officers or privates, wearing the uniform of an American soldier—being arrestel and fined for riding in a sleeping car from the far East to the far West.

"The race—the Colored race—will be one compact unit supporting Mr. Scott in urging that, at least while railroads are under government control, Colored soldiers be not subjected to the humiliation, insult and injustice of being taken from trains, tried and fined for enjoying American rights and privileges."

Scott is now investigating this case. It is only one of many now in his offices, presenting a wide variety of problems.

Those publications of the Colored people are very interesting. It's a pity they are almost wholly read by the Colored people alone. They might be read with great profit by the whites as well. Some of them, however, it is only fair to say, are helped by the whites, both of the North and of the South.

In the South white leaders of the Negro race are emerging.

In Dalton, Georgia, Mrs. L. H. Hammond has formed what she calls "The Southern Publicity Bureau," to enlighten and educate Southern public opinion. On the committee working with her she has Southerners of distinction.

The world is moving fast and the American Negroes are helping it to move in the direction of a genuine democracy that they count on sharing.

Food Conservation Movement Being Pushed Among Negroes

Chicago Defender Sept. 28

The colored people very generally are planning through the agency of their state administrators, negro state directors, county representatives, organizations and churches to secure promptly the New Home Card to be distributed the week of December 2 throughout the nation. Conservation Sunday on the first of December, is to be celebrated at one of the church services of every denomination. Every fraternal, educational and religious society, lodge, woman's club and war workers' organization will unite in the effort to reach their membership with the new message of food thrift to be given out during conservation week beginning Monday, the 2d.

The director of the negro section of the U. S. Food administration, Ernest T. Attwell, with headquarters at Washington, in discussing the special appeal to his people to assist in the campaign, said:

"Every negro in this country—and they are all American—desires to feel when this great world strife is over that he has contributed his full share in all the efforts looking toward the winning of the war since the United States entered the conflict. No racial group will benefit more if the ideals for which we are fighting are achieved; therefore, we ought not to let any other people do more in any direction in proportion to our means and opportunities. The program of the United States food administration with its doctrine of food economies, saving, production, conservation, offers our race a larger opportunity to contribute in real service toward helping to secure victory for the great cause which includes the ideals of world democracy, of freedom and liberty than in any other direction or activity.

"The immediate need is for our people to help in the distribution of the New Home Card of the United States food administration which every negro home should have as a guide for personal conduct as long as the fight against Germany goes on, and which is valuable as a food conservation code for the future. This New Home Card carries the food message by Mr. Hoover to the American people, emphasizing the need and importance of observing the food regulations so that the "common table" at which we and 120,000,000 allies must eat may be amply supplied."

For next year the American food program will be a direct reduction in the consumption of all food, particularly the staples, rather than a series of emergency regulations such as meatless and wheatless days and meals, and the substitution of one food for another. Stress is laid, however, upon the fact that the food administration does not wish curtailment in the use of milk for children.

Niagara Falls, N. Y., Sept. 13.—Samuel Dean, well known post office clerk, has been appointed special assistant to the chairman of the executive committee, Niagara Falls Chapter of the American Red Cross. His duties will be to look after the welfare of the colored people of this city, La Salle, Sanborn, Ransomville, Lewiston and Youngstown, who have entered the service of the U. S. The appointment was made by Field Director Girard, of the American Red Cross.

EMMETT SCOTT TAKING CARE OF HIS BLACK SOLDIERS

Expires 6-15-18.

Investigates Rumors of Discrimination By Red Cross. Answers Various Inquiries. Red Cross Makes No Distinction As To Color of Soldiers. Serving Whites and Colored Alike Both At Home and Abroad

Washington, D. C., June 13.—Many inquiries are coming from the colored people of every section of the country as to what the American Red Cross Society is doing to relieve the needs of the Negro soldiers in the camps and cantonments of this country and what species of aid and comfort is being given to the colored warriors who are battling on the fields of France.

The subjoined letter from Mr. Joseph R. Hamlen, of the National Headquarters of the American Red Cross Society, in answer to an inquiry sent out from the office of Emmett J. Scott, Special Assistant to the Secretary of War, describes somewhat in detail the character of the work the organization is doing, and declares, among other things of vital importance, that the services of the Red Cross are being "rendered to white and colored officers and enlisted men alike, and without distinction." The letter of Mr. Hamlen follows:

THE AMERICAN RED CROSS
National Headquarters
Washington, D. C., June 5, 1918.

Mr. Emmett J. Scott,
Special Assistant, War Department,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Scott—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 29th, in which you ask for information as to what the Red Cross has already done in the war zone or at the cantonments of this country for the Negro soldiers.

I am glad to be given this opportunity to tell you of our work in this respect. The Red Cross is rendering the same service to colored men that it is to white troops. No distinction whatever is being made because of the color of the enlisted man. Sweaters and other knitted goods and comforts have been distributed to white and colored alike. We are rendering the same service to the families of white and colored alike. Emergency supplies are furnished at the request of colored officers, and in the hospitals, our men who do communication work, write letters at the request of enlisted men, without distinction because of color.

Nearly 10,000 Sweaters to Colored Draftees in Ten Days.

I remember a specific instance of service rendered to a large number of colored drafted men last fall. They arrived at one of the large army camps during a period of intensely cold weather. The General in command of the Division appealed to us and we were able to furnish him with 2,500 sweaters within a few hours and a total of 10,000 within ten days. Practically all of the first 2,500 of these sweaters went to colored troops, and a great majority of the ten thousand went to them.

I hope you will state with as much emphasis as possible that our constant efforts in behalf of the soldiers and sailors on duty in the armed service of the United States, both of this country and in Europe, are rendered to white and colored officers and enlisted men alike, without distinction.

Very cordially yours,
(Signed) JOSEPH R. HAMLEN,
Assistant to the Vice-Chairman.

The above communication will doubtless be read with the deepest interest by the colored men and women of this country, who have been and are in perfect accord with the aims of the Red Cross Society, but who had not been informed through any reliable source as to what the organization has actually been doing to supply the wants of the 150,000 colored soldiers in the army establishment. Thousands of these gallant men are under fire on the battle-fields of France, and many more of our brave and patriotic colored Americans are in camp in our own land, preparing to join their brethren in the deadly conflict "over there."

As to the Use of Colored Red Cross Nurses.

The situation with regard to the use of colored Red Cross nurses is a matter which also is now receiving the attention of the War Department. The Secretary of War, Mr. Scott advises, will soon announce through the Office of the Surgeon-General, the decision with reference to the utilization of the many competent women of the race who have so cheerfully registered their willingness to aid in the winning of the war by serving as nurses in the military hospitals at home and abroad.

ADVISORY BOARD OF NEGROES TO PLAN WAR WORK IN STATE

Montgomery Advertiser 6-18-18

Major R. R. Moton of Tuskegee Heads the Committee; Montgomery Men Named

Seven well known negro citizens were named yesterday by the Alabama State Council of Defense, as an advisory committee for the purpose of organizing the negroes of the state into an effective force for war work. Major R. R. Moton of Tuskegee, was named president, and Dr. W. S. Buchanan was named vice-president. Dr. Buchanan is president of the colored normal schoool.

This committee will act in an advisory capacity with the State Council of Defense in all matters relating to the negroes of the state and will be charged with the duty of making plans for the complete organization of negroes and the co-ordination of their efforts in the war.

Each County Council of Defense will create an advisory committee of negroes similar and in addition to the state advisory committee and will assist in handling local problems and in organization work for the carrying on of industries essential to the conduct of the war.

The action was taken at the request of the national government and the organization is perfected for the purpose of handling problems peculiar to Alabama. Members of the committee in addition to Presdent Moton and vice-president Buchanan are Victor H. Tulane of Montgomery, R. B. Hudson of Selma, Dr. Eugene Mason of Birmingham, Dr. C. F. Johnson of Mobile, and Prof. E. T. Atwell of Tuskegee. Dr. Moton for some time has assisted the State Council of Defense in creating among the negroes full sympathy for all war work. Prof. Atwell has been connected with the State Food Administration in work among negroes, while Dr. Buchanan has enlisted for service in the United States Employment Department under George B. Tarrant, state director.

Some of the duties which will come before the advisory committee at once are:

To plan meetings among negroes which will be addressed by white and negro speakers.

To encourage negro farmers to increase their acreage of food products and to grow more and better crops.

To present the need of co-operation among all classes of citizens, emphasizing that the nation rather than the army is fighting Germany.

To emphasize the fact that they are rendering a patriotic service by remaining on the farm.

To encourage conservation in the cities and on the farm.

To encourage thrift and economy and urge support of the government by ubying Liberty Bonds and supporting war organizations.

Two Notable Additions to the Big Achievements to the Credit of Recent Conference of Coloured Editors at Washington

Ralph W. Tyler Named to Report Military Happenings on Western Front in France—United States Agrees to Loan $5,000,000 to Aid Republic of Liberia

Washington, D. C., Sept. 16.—Two notable additions have been made within the past few days to the list of big achievements that may be justly credited to the influence of the recent conference of colored editors and leaders in Washington.

One of the direct requests of the Editors' Conference in June was that a reliable colored news-writer be sent to France to report the doings of the coolred troops on the Western front in France, for the information of the anxious millions of coolred Americans in this country and to the end that the correct story of the valor and patriotic devotion of their brethren might be told fully and in a sympathetic vein by one of their own blood and kindred.

In compliance with this request, the Committee on Public Information has resignated Ralph W. Tyler, of Columbus, Ohio, former Auditor for the Navy Department at Washington, as a regularly commissioned war correspondent, to specialize on the conditions surrounding the colored troops in France and to make daily reports of the activities and engagements in which the coolred soldiers are prominent. He will be on the staff of General Pershing, commander-in-chief of the American Expeditionary Forces overseas. Every facility has been provided by Mr. George Creel, director of the Committee on Public Information, for the prompt and accurate gathering of all facts that may be of interest to the colored people.

$5,000,000 Loan to Liberian Republic.

The second of this series of editorial conference achievements is the authorization by the Government of a loan of $5,000,000 to the Republic of Liberia, in enli witthegerhqusH, i Liberia, in line with the request of the Conference. This fund is allotted to aid in the rehabilitation of that country's public financee, which have been reduced to a dangerously low ebb by the cessation of trade, and to develop production of rice and other foodstuffs for the allies, as well as to place on the market many of the greatly-needed products with which the little overseas republic abounds. Much of Liberia's commerce was with Germany, and this has been totally cut off since the former's declaration of war against the Teutons.

The granting of $5,000,000 credit through the United States Treasury had its inception several months ago when Dr. Ernest Lyon, the Liberian Consul-General, made application on behalf of his Government for same, and was helped forward quite perceptibly by a meeting at the White House later, when a committee laid before the President the peculiar needs of Liberia and made plain the faithfulnes sof her people to the cause of the allies, emphasizing the fact that Liberia is the natural ward of this powerful Government and that its welfare must be safeguarded by America in her hour of peril.

The members of the committee, who joined in the appeal to the President were Dr. Rubert R. Moton, Principal of the famous Tuskegee Institute; Emmett J. Scott, Secretary of Tuskegee Institute, now serving as Special Assistant to the Secretary of War; Dr. Ernest Lyon, former United States Minister to Liberia and now Liberian Consul-General in this country; Dr. James H. Dillard, of the Slater and Jeanes Fund Boards; Dr. Thomas Jesse Jones, of the United States Bureau of Education, and Hon. William H. Lewis, former Assistant Attorney-General of the United States.

FOUR-MINUTE MEN TO ADDRESS NEGROES

Montgomery Ad.

Four minute men are to invade the negro churches and gathering places of members of this race in Montgomery, city and county, to stir up interest in America's war, just as the four-minute speakers have been carrying on among the white people. Beverley

Arrangements are being made for a speaker to appear at each negro church every Sunday and at the Pekin Theatre daily. During the next three weeks speakers will visit shops, factories and other places where negroes are employed and speak on "Mobilizing America's Man Power." The speakers will be from the negro race. 7-24-18

An important meeting of the negro four-minute men will be held Thursday night at which time white four-minute men will explain the work.

Negro four-minute men interested in the work are:

100 Prominent Negroes Will Voice Government Wa Aims, Instead of 60—A Campaign of Education

WASHINGTON, District of Columbia, July 10.—The War Department and the comitteee on Public information announce through office of Emmett J. Scott, special assistant to the secretary of war, the expansion of the list of speakers to present the war aims of the government to the colored people of the United States from sixty (60) to one hundred (100).

Hereafter this group of speakers will be known as "committee of one hundred", and will be found active in the aproaching campaign of education, planned to cover every community in the country, where colored people abide in appreciable numbers. They represent every notable element of the race and will doubtless exert a potent influence in enlightening the colored people as to their duty toward the Government and pointing out to them in a definite and practical way how they may be of the greatest service to the nation in the winning of the present struggle for liberty and democracy.

The following well-known men constitute the additions to the list already annaounced:

A Renewed Impetus to Negro Patriotism.

Zones of activity have been worked out and it is expected that speakers will accept assignments as near their homes as possible to avoid the expense incident to long journeys. Except in special cases, expenses connected with speaking appointments should be borne by the local auspices under which the speakers appear.

The loyalty of the 12,000,000 Negroes of America is not doubted, but it is believed that their natural patriotism will be stirred anew and their helpful activities will be given a livelier impetus through the eloquent reminders voiced by leaders of thought and opinion who enjoy in the fullest measure their confidence and esteem.

WAR AIMS OF GOVT. TO BE PRESENTED BY SPEAKERS

Chicago Defender 5-26-18

Announcement Made Through Office of Emmett Scott—Purpose and Scope of Work

Washington, D. C., May 24.—Through the office of Emmett J. Scott, special assistant to the secretary of war, it is announced that the war department and the speaking division of the committee on public information, recognizing the importance of enlightening public opinion as to the war aims of the government, have decided to appoint a special committee of speakers, to be composed of leading Colored Americans, who shall, as opportunity offers, seek to create and mobilize public opinion which shall back up the government in the prosecution of the war.

As has been stated, the issue of this struggle depends to a large extent on the way public opinion in the United States is stimulated and directed. It is indeed only through the united efforts of enlightened and enthusiastic Americans that the full strength of the nation can be exerted, that victory can come to our righteous cause, and that America can accomplish those things for which she entered this conflict. Upon the leaders of our public opinion therefore rests a responsibility heavier than perhaps ever rested upon any group of people in our entire history. It is a task which can be performed only by men and women who themselves are well informed and who co-operate with all patriotic organizations, governmental and private, which are unifying public opinion in support of the national purpose.

The following gentlemen, who are representative of thought and opinion, have been requested by the war department and the committee on public information to render the services above indicated:

A selected group of prominent physicians and surgeons will have charge of this campaign.

Moton Is Chairman of Negro Committee of Council of Defense

Birmingham Age-Herald 7-28-17

Steps were taken for the enlistment of Alabama's negro civilian population in the work of the Alabama Council of Defense at a conference held at the capitol yesterday by a sub-committee of the executive committee of the state council and a committee of leading negroes of the state. A resolution was adopted recommending that a committee of five to seven negro citizens be appointed in each county charged especially with the responsibility of promoting war relief work financial campaigns and other war activities in the respective counties.

The conference was attended by Governor Henderson, Lloyd M. Hooper, chairman of the state council, George B. Tarrant, federal director of labor, and R. M. Hobbie, state food administrator, composing the subcommittee of the executive committee, and by the following committee of leading negroes: Major R. R. Moton, Tuskegee, chairman; W. S. Buchanan, Normal, vice-chairman; Victor H. Tulane, Montgomery; R. B. Hudson, Selma; Dr. Eugene Mason, Birmingham; Dr. C. F. Johnson, Mobile; Prof. E. T. Atwell, Tuskegee.

The negro committee will meet upon the call of the chairman, Major Moton, using the offices of the state council at the capitol, and will act in an advisory capacity to the executive committee of the state council in all matters pertaining to work among the negro race of Alabama. They all manifested a splendid spirit at the conference, expressing keen appreciation of the responsibilities placed on them and pledging their best efforts.

"The negro citizenship of the state, in a large degree, have evidenced the keenest appreciation of their obligations and responsibilities in the present world crisis," said Chairman Hooper, of the state council, "and, with but few exceptions, are intensely loyal and devoted to the nation's cause."

WILL TRAIN A MILLION WOMEN FOR WAR WORK

WASHINGTON, D. C.—One of the largest and most ambitious schemes undertaken by a colored woman is that of Nannie H. Burroughs, president of the National Training School for Women. She wants to train a million colored women to replace the men withdrawn from the various industries for war work. She is planning to begin the training in August, when 200 women will begin the education, to be followed by other 200, until a million are properly trained. Ten weeks have been fixed upon as the training period. The necessary money to carry out the plan is being pledged. In a statement of the proposed work, Miss Burroughs said:

"There is not in all America any provision for the training of colored women for war emergency work. Special courses are being offered other women. We must not lose sight of the fact that the colored woman is a most valuable ally. Her power and influence reach from the kitchen to the castle—from desk to ditch. She handles the food for 10,000,000 of her own race, as well as millions of tons for other Americans. The country needs her intelligent co-operation in its food conservation work and other war activities. America needs every woman, black and white, to help win this war. It is as necessary to provide for the training of colored women as it is to provide for the training of other women to release men for service overseas."

HON. EMMETT J. SCOTT

The popular, capable and acknowledged leader of 12,000,000 American Negro citizens who has most satisfactorily demonstrated his peculiar and special fitness for the exalted position he holds as Special Assistant to the Secretary of War. Eighteen years the intimate associate and private Secretary of the immortal Booker T. Washington, and Special Commissioner of the United States Government to the Republic of Liberia has given him a diplomatic standing and ability that no other Negro in America enjoys. The Negroes of the West admire and believe conclusively in Emmett J. Scott and our slogan out here on the broad rolling prairies of the great West is "Where he leads, we will follow."

GETTING THE "BREAKS"

New York News — 8-3-18

In baseball, usually, the club getting the "breaks," as baseball fans describe that fetish called luck, wins. However, the winning team MUST "play ball," even when getting the "breaks," to win.

Emmett J. Scott, the uncommunicative but effective wizard who represents his entire race in the War Department as Special Assistant to the Secretary of War, appears to be getting the "breaks" these days.

First, that unfortunate editorial of Dr. DuBois in a recent issue of "The Crisis," faintly suggesting that our grievances might be "selfish, and that we should "bury" them, brought down upon his head such an avalanche of criticism within his own house as to seriously handicap him as a "headliner." Then the Department of Labor's indefensible, insulting advertising for 250 white men ONLY as watchmen put a crimp into Dr. Haynes' (its recently appointed "Director of Negro Economics") aspirations, if he had any, to be a headliner on the National colored circuit.

We do not exault over those two worthies' misfortune—we rather regret it, both for themselves and for the race. However, we cannot help but admit that Emmett Scott is getting the "breaks," and at the same time is playing a whaling good game of big league ball.

He seems to have the penant cinched.

Race Man Named

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Aug. 2.—Milton Wayman Guy, Negro attorney, was appointed director of Negro education work for the state food administration by Bishop Williams, federal food administrator for Arkansas, yesterday. Guy will name a well-known Negro to be appointed as county chairman in each county by Mr. Williams. Each Negro chairman in the respective counties will have his special committee, as have the county food administrators. All violations of rules and regulations by the Negroes will be reported to the county food administrators through these chairmen.

WHY EMMETT SCOTT SUCCEEDS.

Anyone who has watched the course of Mr. Emmett J. Scott since he has occupied the position of Special Assistant to the Secretary of War, if they are just, must acknowledge that he has measured up to the position in every way. Mr. Scott has not accomplished all he would have liked to have accomplished, and he may not accomplish all he hopes to achieve, but that he has achieved far beyond the hope of all is an undisputed fact.

Any man who is loyal to friends usually succeeds. Mr. Scott is loyal to his friends. He does not, however, make loyalty to friends his first consideration, and he does not make friendship to him the price of his efforts put forth. The first consideration with him—at least, it has been so for the period we have known him—is the interest of his race. If aiding a friend militates against aiding the race, the friend must nurse his ambitions, and he is not a true friend if he will not.

In striving to help the many—in taking up every case where it has been claimed injustice has been done—Emmett Scott has not stopped to ask the question, "Is the suppliant for justice a friend of mine?" It matters not to him whether the suppliant for justice—

WHAT ARE THEY DOING?

The Washington Bee

There are two representative colored men—one in the War Department and another in the Department of Labor—who were appointed as the representatives of the people. Just what they are doing to break down race discrimination in their respective departments The Bee has failed to see as yet. Both men are high strung and cultured men who are entitled to the respect and confidence of the people, but race discrimination continues to reign, and, if anything, it is on the increase.

The Bee hopes to see some abatement in these many acts of injustice toward colored Americans.

ASSISTANT TO SECRETARY OF WAR A WONDERFUL MAN

FOUR EXPERT MALE STENOGRAPHERS ARE SEATED AT DESKS PILED WITH CORRESPONDENCE

(By Robert A. Travis, in The Newark (N. J.) Daily Ledger, October 6, 1918.)

Some months ago, or, to be exact, on Friday, May 17, George Creel, director of the National Bureau of Information at Washington, D. C., said to the writer, in speaking of Emmett J. Scott, Special Assistant to the Secretary of War: "A wonderful man, a remarkably efficient man, brilliant, of inestimable value to the War Department."

These words were in our mind as we were being led by a marine Thursday morning through the lobby and down the aisle of the west side of the first floor of the War Department building to room 131, in which Mr. Scott has his office.

Entering the main entrance of the War Department building, one is immediately impressed with the air of business-like bustle. Here there is no loafing. Every one is on his or her job with 100 per cent energy.

Entering the office of the Special Assistant Secretary, one realizes that here is a work shop. Four expert male stenographers are seated at desks piled with correspondence and printed matter in orderly array, pounding typewriter keys at a high rate of speed. We are greeted by one of these. Our errand being stated, we are advised that Mr. Scott has stepped out of the office for a moment, and we are introduced to Private Secretary Davis. One glance at Secretary Davis, the shape of his head, the alertness of his eye, the air of high efficiency which seems to be all about him, and it is quickly realized that one of the things which has contributed to Mr. Scott's success is his ability to pick men.

A five or ten-minute wait, and Secretary Scott enters. Even in the formalities of greeting one could not resist the temptation to seek to study the sub-conscious man while gazing into the face of the visible. Here is he upon whom the hopes of 12,000,000 black Americans rest. In appearance, youthful. In demeanor, quiet; cultured, rather than dignified, with a total absence of ostentation. Quick in speech. Precise in action and word. A master of details, as was demonstrated by his giving attention to and rendering decisions on four separate matters, without even a noticeable break in his words of greeting.

Truly, the President has wrought wisely and well in the selection of Mr. Scott, and the race is justified in feeling proud of the fact that it possesses as one of its own a man of the high caliber and remarkable abilities of the Special Assistant to the Secretary of War, Emmett J. Scott.

COLORED WOMEN SPEAKERS MAKING FINE RECORD.

Birmingham Reporter 8-17-18

That the colored women, organized as Four-Minute speakers, are meeting with wonderful success, is demonstrated by the reports shown in their first week's activities. During last Sunday they spoke at the various churches of the city, and during the week they have filled many engagements at theatres and other public places. All of the committees are actively at work and the organization has gone beyond the expectation of its leaders. The Chairman, Mrs. A. W. Harney, and the Speakers Committee, headed by Mrs. J. S. Jackson, together with the other committees, are constantly at work on the plans making the features of the organization attractive. Last Tuesday, Miss O. D. Kennedy, Chairman of the Church Committee, together with other members of the organization sang at the theatres in the down town district the song, "We Will Lick the Kaiser If It Takes Us Twenty Years." When they had finished the song, they did not only sell them but they attracted such attention that they were encored again and again, and people passing the theatres rushed in to see what was going on. These songs were sold at the People Drug Store, Diffay's Barber Shop, Dunbar Hotel and on the streets of the city, both white and colored bought them.

TYLER NAMED AS WAR CORRESPONDENT

Chicago Defender

Washington, Sept. 30.—Ralph Tyler is the first man of the Race to be named as a regular war correspondent by any government in the world. He is a native of Ohio. For seventeen years he served in various departments on the Columbus Evening Dispatch and the Ohio State Journal, which gave him experience in the technique of the newspaper craft and afforded him opportunity for association with many influential newspaper men. This intimate contact with such forces will be invaluable to him in his labors as a war correspondent. The fact that he has a wide acquaintance with correspondents now at the front will make it possible for him to get news concerning our troops which perhaps no other correspondent could secure.

NEGRO COUNCIL OF DEFENSE.

The Mobile Forum 8-24-18

Hon. Jos. C. Rich, Chairman of the Mobile County Council of Defense, has named the following committee of well known citizens of the race to organize a Mobile County Negro Council of National Defense: Hon. Jas. T. Peterson, president and manager of The Forum and until recently chief of carriers in the Mobile postoffice; Mr. E. S. Peters, of the Union Mutual Aid; Prof. W. A. Caldwell, principal of the A. F. Owens High School; Prof. I. J. Whitley, principal Mobile County Training School, Plateau; Mr. F. A. Jackson, for many years an employee of the Athelstan Club (white), the leading organization of its kind in this city; Mr. Napoleon Rivers, a contractor, and Mr. C. W. Allen, of the Allen-Johnson Undertaking Co. A meeting will be called when full details of the work to be undertaken will be outlined.

Tuskegee Institute, Ala., 7/19/1918

Ernest T. Attwell, business agent of Tuskegee Institute, Ala., was in the city several days of last week, called here for an important conference with the food administration at the suggestion of Director Herbert C. Hoover. Mr. Atwell was named as food administrator for the State of Alabama some months ago, to supervise the work of food conservation among the colored people of the various counties. The vigor which he put into this work and the successful organization he built up throughout Alabama attracted the favorable attention of the conservation leader all over the South and comments touching his methods and plans reached the ears of the authorities at Washington.

While here Mr. Attwell gave a complete survey of the work he has been doing among the colored farmers, housewives, gardeners, and food handlers of every description in Alabama, and it is understood that steps have been taken to introduce his system in other states of the South, with Mr. Attwell's supervisory jurisdiction largely extended. His original ideas as to the value of enlisting the thousands of colored cooks, butlers, housewives and buyers, as well as regular farmers and gardeners, in the Southland, were eye-openers to many who have been scouting the policy of organizing the Negro scientifically into the food conservation movement. Mr. Attwell is an enthusiast in the work and is getting results that will go far to aid the nation in winning its war for democracy.

Appointment for Special Work.

Indicatios are For Monster Gathering

Louisville News 6-15-18

Mr. E. T. Attwell, Leading Speaker Has Built Himself up to a Point Where he is Considered an Authority in His Work.

HOW TO GET TO PHOENIX HILL.

Take Walnut or Jefferson St car going east, or ask for transfer to these lines from cross town conductors. Walnut street cars will go within half block of the Phoenix Hill gate. Jefferson Street cars will stop at the illuminated entrance.

Phoenix Hill Park promises to add to its fame as a place of popular assemblage when the colored patriotic meeting planned for next Monday night passes into history. In fact, the meeting which has been projected by the Federal Food Administration under the management of its new director of colored activities has aroused more interest than any event of colored interest that has presented itself in years. The plans have gone forward with every consideration for an opportunity for open expression of the colored people of the State of Kentucky in the war activities.

Women Especially Active.

All of the war societies in which the local women are engaged are to have strong representation at the big meeting. The cooking organizations, which have grown out of the necessities of our army and the war conditions will be present, and will be allowed an opportunity to give an account of their work in the matter of food conservation. Platform seats have been provided for a large number of prominent people throughout the State who will come to Louisville to take part in the important conference, from which will emerge a statewide organization of colored people prepared to engage in the various home activities designed to support the American and Allied armies in the field.

During the week many of these patriotic organizations have signified their intention to co-operate with the management of the Phoenix Hill meeting and thousands of women will be in attendance.

Seats For Seven Thousand.

Seating facilities have been provided for seven thousand people. The Boy Scouts will act as ushers and it is assured that whosoever may desire to add their presence to the most significant meeting of colored people that has been brought together in this state for years, will not have any degree of discomfort.

It has been decided to have the meeting upon the pavilion, which is quite out of doors. While this part of the famous Phoenix Hill Park is in the open air it is under complete cover and their will be no trouble in case it should rain. It was generally supposed that the great meeting would be held in the big hall on the hill, but the sultriness of the nights and the inviting coolness of the pavilion has decided the matter with the management.

Colored Soldiers to March.

Two or three companies from the colored contingent of the national army now stationed at Camp Taylor will march through the streets of the city and to Phoenix Hill Park. This will be first time that Louisville has had opportunity to see the class of men upon whom the race must depend for its accounting in the world's conflict. The military contingent will be led by a band through the western part of the city, and will proceed to Phoenix Hill to take part in the meeting.

Will Open at Eight.

Director Brown announces that the meeting will begin promptly at eight o'clock, and urges all of the colored peope who shall compose the audience to be present at that hour. Requests will be made to those who are employing colored servants to make the patriotic sacrifice in allowing them to get away from their places of employment early in order to be in attendance upon all of the features of the big meeting. The league of public information has agreed to photograph the meeting, and as this picture will be taken early in the evening, it is urged upon all of the people to be early upon the ground to the end that a creditable showing will be made in the photograph.

Not Stiff Nor Stuffed.

It is promised that there will be nothing stiff about the great meeting. It has been said that the process and plans of food conservation, while being the most important department of the war work, is vastly prosaic. Mr. E. T. Attwell, who has been selected for the principal address of the evening, has the reputation of making his subject superbly interesting. He has been voted to be one of the best informed men of the race and has spent a large part of his life in the work of food conservation. It was for his fine abilities in this regard that he was selected by Mr. Hoover for the important work of organization of colored people into working units for the salvage of food for the struggle for liberty.

Mr. Attwell is essentially a race man. For more than seventeen years he has been financial agent of Tuskegee Institute, and many of the practical economies now being suggested by the food administration were suggested by him. He is an executive officer in the National Negro Business League, and has a fine discrimination and discernment.

Mrs. Semple and Mayor Smith.

Mrs. Patty B. Semple, noted war working woman, will appear upon the program for a short talk. Mrs. Semple has shown a very great and

NEGRO COMMITTEE HOLDS MEETING HERE

Pledges Support to State Council to Develop War Sentiment in Race

The Montgomery

An important meeting of the Advisory Committee on Negro Organization of the State Council of Defense was held at the Capitol at 3 o'clock Thursday afternoon. In addition to the chairman of the State Council of Defense, Lloyd M. Hooper, there were also present Dr. R. R. Moton, Prof. M. N. Works, Tuskegee; V. H. Tulane, Montgomery; Dr. G. F. Johnson, Mobile; and Prof. R. Hudson, Selma; Profs. Atwell and Buchanan, and Dr. Eugene Mason, of Birmingham, were prevented from attending the meeting.

The above committee was created several months ago and was organized by a sub-committee of the State Council of Defense composed of Governor Henderson, R. M. Hobbie, George B. Tarrant, and Lloyd M. Hooper, all members of the executive committee. The Advisory Committee on Negro Organization is to act in the capacity of advisers to the Executive Committee of the State Council of Defense in matters relating to the colored population of the State. After routine matters were disposed of, Mr. W. S. Stallings, State Campaign Director of the United War Work Campaign, formally requested the committee on colored organization to direct the war work campaign in Alabama among the negro population.

The committee unanimously decided to conduct the work, pledging its support unreservedly to Chairman Hooper. State Campaign Director Stallings in developing public sentiment among the negroes of the state in support of the war relief organizations will have the distinct approval of the Federal government. In the various counties of the state, the county councils of defense have appointed county advisory committees on negro organization and the state committee will, through these county committees, develop the necessary organization to arouse the interest of the colored population in behalf of these war relief measures and secure during the drive in November liberal financial response for these worthy organizations which are serving the American army in such a substantial way.

WILL DIRECT FOOD WORK AMONG NEGROES OF STATE

Phil H. Brown Appointed By F. M. Sackett To Urge Conservation Principles.

F. M. Sackett, Federal Food Administrator for Kentucky, has appointed Phil H. Brown, colored editor, of Hopkinsville, Ky., to be director of negro activities for Mr. Sackett's department. Brown will have immediate control under Mr. Sackett of the work of food conservation and salvage among the colored people of the State.

Mr. Sackett made the selection with especial care on account of the importance of the instruction of colored people in the observance of the food laws. Colored people do the greater part of the cooking in the State, and the Food Administration will make a special effort to organize and interest them in the patriotic work of the department.

The director will have an office in Louisville, from which an intensive campaign of education will be inaugurated that will reach the forty counties in the State where there is considerable negro population. Plans were completed yesterday to have a monster patriotic meeting of the colored people of the State in Louisville. It will be held at Phoenix Hill Park.

NEGRO FOOD ADMINISTRATOR.

Federal Food Administratoin Selects James B. Coleman for Work Among the Members of His Race.

Elliot Marshall, food administrator, has received advice from the state food administration at Columbia, that James B. Coleman (negro) has been appointed state director for Missouri, under the federal food commission, for work among the negroes.

In counties having sufficient negro population to warrant, one or more negro deputies are to be appointed whose duty will be to distribute literature and furnish information to members of their race, as well as to investigate and report infractions of rules governing food consumption. Deputies will serve under county food administrators. Marshall said today that if the negroes of St. Joseph and the county would suggest a capable man of their race, he would appoint him.

Permission has been accorded wholesalers in the state who have stocks of brown sugar which are in danger of spoiling to supply retail dealers on the basis of 125 pounds in lieu of 100 pounds of white sugar. Retailers are likewise permitted to sell 2½ pounds of brown sugar instead of 2 pounds of white sugar to customers under this ruling.

A meeting full of thrills and patriotic fervor marked the annual powwow of the Oldest Inhabitants' Association Tuesday night at the Catholic Benefit Hall. After the regular business had been transacted, Mr. Eugene Brooks, president of the association, introduced Mr. Emmett J. Scott, special assistant to the Secretary of War, as the principal speaker of the evening.

Mr. Scott delivered a telling speech. He told of the work he is doing in behalf of justice for the Negro soldiers in the various camps and cantonments, and how numerous instances of unfair treatment had been investigated and conditions greatly improved by a sturdy insistence that the black soldier enjoy the same privileges, immunities and opportunities as are allowed to others.

A recent victory which evoked enthusiasm was the announcement that colored men, 3,500 or more, will be admitted to the technical training schools, where they will be made proficient in mechanical and industrial arts, leading to advancement and superior opportunities for constructive service in the United States Army here and abroad.

Friction between the races, noted Mr. Scott, have been reduced to a minimum and the judicious distribution and adjustment of colored and white troopers in the various camps has brought about a keener sense of comradship and national unity than existed at the outset of the mobilization for war. Warmer weather is making it possible for many colored units of draftees to enter northern camps, and colored officers are getting more and more desirable assignments as the increments of colored men are being received into these camps. The speaker paid a merited tribute to the Amer- and declared that this 100 percent patriotism of Secretary of War Baker trio is doing all that any official can possibly do to make the lot of the Ne-

NEGRO SOLDIERS WIN LASTING FAME DESPITE THE "WHISPERING GALLERY"

By ROBERT R. MOTON
Principal of Tuskegee Institute

During the late summer and early fall of 1918, there were a great many rumors in and out of official circles in this country, to the effect that morally the Negro soldier in France had failed, and that the statement sometimes made that "the Negro is controlled by brutal instincts," was justified.

The report was current in France that the committing of the "unmentionable crime" was very common, and according to the rumors, Negro officers, as well as privates, in all branches and grades of the service, were guilty of this crime.

HOW THE RUMOR SPREAD

A letter that I saw written by a lady overseas to another lady in the United States, stated that the writer had been told by the colonel of a certain unit, whose guest she was, that he would not feel it safe for her to walk, even with him through this camp of Negro soldiers.

Another letter from a high official in a very important position with the overseas Negro troops, written unofficially to a very prominent official on this side, stated, that, in the 92nd Division alone, there had recently been at least thirty cases of the "unmentionable crime."

Another rumor, equally as malignant and damaging, was to the effect that the fighting units which were commanded by Negro officers had been a failure. In other words, "the whispering gallery," which was most active in France on most phases of life overseas, said that the 92nd Division, in which Negroes in America took special pride, and with good reason, had failed utterly; that, wherever they had been engaged, the Negro officers had gone to pieces; that in some cases the men had to pull themselves together after their officers had shown "the white feather," etc.

At the request of the President and Secretary of War, I went to France with authority to go anywhere and get any information from any source, so far as the American Expeditionary Force was concerned.

MEETS DR. DUBOIS

It so happened that I went on the steamer assigned to the newspaper correspondents—a steamer which was one of the convoy ships for the President's party—on which Dr. W. E. B. Du Bois, Editor of the "Crisis," was a passenger. Mr. Lester A. Walton, of the New York Age; Mr. Nathan Hunt, of Tuskegee together with Dr. Du Bois and myself, in the same very comfortable stateroom. We had many frank but pleasant talks, both on the ship and in Paris, where we had opposite rooms in the same hotel. The subject that we discussed most often was, of course, some phase of the Negro question, always with a view, so far as our judgment went, to help the situation.

I purposely planned to have with me on the trips out from Paris, as well as at many interviews in Paris, two colored and two white men—one white newspaper man, Clyde R. Miller, of the Cleveland Plaindealer, and Lester A. Walton, of the New York Age. I also asked to go with me, Dr. Thomas Jesse Jones, of the United States Bureau of Education and Phelps-Stokes Foundation, and Mr. Nathan Hunt, of Tuskegee Institute.

I realized that the mission was a delicate one, and that questions which I might ask, and things which I would say might probably be misunderstood or misinterpreted. My purpose, however, was to get at the facts and to allay untruthful rumors. In order to ascertain the facts, I made extended inquiries of those with whom I came in contact, from the highest officials down. I asked many questions with reference to the conduct and character of the colored soldiers as compared with the white soldiers.

When I reached the General Headquarters of the American Forces, I found that two days before my arrival, a young white soldier had been sentenced to be hanged for the "unmentionable crime," but, because of his good record in every other way, the sentence was finally commuted to life imprisonment. The opinion at General Headquarters was that the crime to which I have referred was no more prevalent among Negro soldiers than among white soldiers, or any soldiers.

From Chaumont we went immediately to Marbache, the Headquarters of the 92nd Division. I asked the Commanding General of the 92nd Division about the prevalence of the crime in question. He said it was very prevelent, and that there had been a great many cases over which he was very much disturbed. This statement was substantiated by conversation with two of his white staff officers, who were present. I courteously asked if he would mind having one of his aides get the record. I said that I thought general statements were often very damaging, and, that, inasmuch as the reputation of a race was at stake, I was very anxious to get the facts in order to make an accurate report, and if possible, to stop the rumors which were becoming more and more prevalent in America and were already prevalent in France, especially in American circles, including army officers, Young Men's Christian Association, Knights of Columbus, Red Cross, and other organizations.

When the records were brought in and examined, only seven cases charged could be found. Of those charged, only two had been found guilty and convicted, and one of the two convictions had been "turned down" by General Headquarters. Afterwards, I saw the Judge Advocate of the 92nd Division, who told me that there had been eleven cases charged. Two of them were men who did not belong to the 92nd Division, but to other organizations. Out of the eleven, only three had been finally approved as guilty by General Headquarters, and one sentence out of three had been reduced from life imprisonment to taking half the man's pay for twelve months.

In other fighting units, as well as at Bordeaux, St. Nazaire and Brest, where many of the Service of Supply Troops were located, and at many other places, I made the same investigations. I interviewed American and French Commanding Officers, I talked, as well, with scores of American and French officials of lower rank. When the records were taken, as was the case with the 92nd Division, the number of cases charged were very few. I likewise spent much time with members of the Peace Conference, and with Americans engaged in various branches of war activities, in an effort to disprove and set at rest this awful slander upon the Negro race. I spared no pains or effort to do this, and it would appear from subsequent investigations on this side of the water and from reports which have come to me from overseas, that the momentum of these damaging rumors had preceptibly lessened

NEGRO OFFICERS AND THEIR CRITICS

There was apparently no doubt in anybody's mind in France, as far as I was able to find out, among the French or Americans, as to the qualities of the American Negro as a soldier, when led by white officers. There was also little question about the fighting record of the four regiments, the 369th, 370th, 371st and 372nd which had been brigaded with French Divisions—but when it came to the 92nd Division, there was a subtle and persistent rumor in Paris and in other places in France, as far as my travels, observations, and investigations went—substantiating the rumor which was also prevalent in America—only in France it was much more generally accepted as true; namely, that the Negro officers "had been practically a failure," and that it was a mistake to have ever attempted to have a division with Negroes as officers.

A SINGLE FAILURE MAGNIFIED

I took a great deal of pains and care, as did also the gentlement with me, to run down every rumor. We spent much time in and out of Paris ferretting out every statement that came from the "whispering gallery." We finally found that, so far as the 92nd Division was concerned, only a very small portion of a single battalion, of a single regiment had failed.

Later, in talking with the highest American Military Official in France, regarding this story of the failure of Negro officers, he said that the possibilities were that any officer, white or black, under the same adverse circumstances that these men faced, would have failed, as the very few did. About a dozen officers of the battalion were sent before a board for trial for having shown cowardice. They were not, however, all found guilty; and to offset this, some of the other colored officers of this regiment, for conspicuous bravery in the same engagement were promoted and decorated with the Distinguished Service Cross.

It would appear that this small part of a battalion whose failure was so widely reported, had never before been under fire, and had been taken from a quiet sector and brought forward with the expectation that they would not be put into the fighting for several weeks; but it so happened that the Germans were much stronger than the French behind whom this unit was placed. When the French troops were badly cut to pieces, the Negro unit in question had to go into the fighting within twenty-four hours after reaching the front, which was much earlier than expected. In connection with this alleged failure, there are also some other very important considerations that will later probably be brought out officially.

It was gratifying to find that the Commanding General, who knew all phases of the affiair, did not take this failure anything like as seriously as the rumor about it seemed to warrant. The facts in the case in no sense justified the common report.

In talking with the Commanding General at Le Mans, I referred to the fact that something like fifteen Negro officers had been sent back as "inefficient." He said to me: "If it is any comfort to you, I will tell you this: we sent back through Blois to America in six months, an average of one thousand white officers a month, who failed in one way or another in this awful struggle. I hope, Dr. Moton," he added, "that you won't loose your faith in my race because of that, and certainly I am not going to loose my faith in your race because of the record of a few colored officers who failed."

We talked with Colonel House, Ray Stannard Baker, Capt. Walter Lippman, and leading Y. M. C. A. workers, and many, many others. Everybody assured me that they, so far as they were able, would stop the slanderous rumors concerning our Negro soldiers, and were glad to get the facts. I spoke to white officers in a number of places—at one place, to two hundred of them, and candidly stated the facts in the case. I raised the question, if they did not think it was a good and a fair thing to stop this rumor of the "whispering gallery," which was defaming a race, which might cut down the efficiency of the Negro troops, and was, of course, putting America in a bad light before the world.

Many of the difficulties and troubles among the officers and men of the 92nd Division, as well as other colored units, could have been avoided, if we had had at General Headquarters in France, a colored man to have rendered the same wise, dignified and efficient help such as Mr. Emmett J. Scott, Secretary of Tuskegee Institute, had so splendidly rendered in the War Department at Washington, to both races, and to the Nation. President John Hope, of Morehouse College, Atlanta, Georgia, who under many and trying conditions had done fine overseas work in connection with the Y. M. C. A., felt this need very much. General Pershing would have gladly had such a man if it had occurred to any of us to suggest it.

COMMANDING OFFICERS OPEN TO SUGGESTIONS

In almost every instance I found the commanding officers open to suggestions regarding relieving the needless embarrassment of the colored soldiers. I found in the Service of Supplies, that colored stevedores were working twelve and sixteen hours a day, and sometimes more, which made it impossible for the Y. M. C. A. to do any effective work along educational lines with the thousands of colored soldiers in the Service of Supplies. I took this matter up with the commanding general, and within three days, orders had been given to reduce the time of work to eight hours. At several places the quarters of the colored men seemed unfortunately located. In many of these places, changes were soon made.

I took up with care, also, the matter of excluding colored women from France, going to the source of the trouble, or at least where it started. Here again, I found that there seemed to be no justification for wholesale exclusion of the women of our race from overseas service. This I took up with proper authorities, military and otherwise, and before I left, arrangements had been made to send for more of our colored women, and men also, and some have already gone over. The best Y. M. C. A. hut I saw, from every point of view, was the one where Mrs. W. A. Hunton, Mrs. J. L. Curtis and Miss Katherine Johnson were located. There was here a very fine spirit of co-operation between the white and colored workers. Mr. Wallace, the Manager of the District, whom I later met in Paris, was loud in his praise of Secretary Nichols, Secretary Whiting, Chaplain Oveltrea and and other colored workers.

REMARKS TO THE SOLDIERS

Just what did I say to the Negro troops? I said: "The record you have made in this war, of faithfulness, bravery and loyalty, has deepened my faith in you as men and as soldiers, as well as in my race and country. You have been tremendously tested. You have suffered hardships and many privations. You have been called upon to make many sacrifices. Your record has sent a thrill of joy and satisfaction to the hearts of millions of black and white Americans, rich and poor, high and low. Black mothers and wives, sweethearts, fathers and friends have rejoiced with you and with our country in your record.

"You will go back to America as heroes as you really are. You will go back as you have carried yourselves over here—in a straightforward, manly and modest way. If I were you, I would find a job as soon as possible and get to work. To those who have not already done so, I would suggest that you get hold of a piece of land and a home as soon as possible, and marry and settle down. Save your money, and put it into something tangible. I hope no one will do anything in peace to spoil the magnificent record you have made in the war."

APPEAL TO WHITE SOLDIERS

In all fairness to those who are vitally interested in some of the questions which have arisen on account of my mission to France, I am quoting from an address which I delivered to white officers and soldiers at one place:

"These black soldiers, officers and men, have with you, willingly and gladly placed their lives at the disposal of their country, not only to make the world safe for democracy, but equally important, to make democracy safe for mankind, black and white. You and they go back to America as heroes, brave and modest, of course, but there is a difference: you go back without let or hindrance, with every opportunity our beloved country offers open to you. You are the heirs of all the ages. God has never given any race more than he has given to you. The men of my race who return will have many unnecessary hardships and limitations, and along many lines. What a wonderful opportunity you have therefore, and what a great responsibility for you to go back to America resolved that as far as it in your power lies, you are going to see that these black men and the twelve millions of people whom they represent in our great country, who have stood so loyally by you and America in peace and in war, shall have a fair and absolutely equal chance with every other American citizen, along every line—this is your duty and sacred obligation. They ask only fair play and as loyal American citizens they should have it."

I cannot conclude without again mentioning the heroic record of all of our men in France, especially the Negro officers, who in spite of hardships and discriminations from sources which should have accorded them most encouragement, went to into battle with dash, courage and an absolutely unshaken and undisturbed morale. I do not believe that men of any other race, under similar trying circumstances, could have retained more self-possession and made a more glorious record than did our Negro soldiers, officers and men.

PROTEST TO BOSTON HERALD BRINGS RESULTS

LEON A. SMITH OBJECTS TO "SOUTHERN DARKIES" AS HEADLINE FOR COLORED DRAFTEES FOR WORLD DEMOCRACY—ROBT. LINCOLN O'BRIEN ORDERS SUCH HEADLINES STOPPED.

April 29, 1918.

Dear Sirs:

As has been my custom for a number of years and is still my custom at the present time, I take your paper daily. In looking through the columns on this morning (Saturday morning, April 13, 1918) on Page 14, it gave me great discomfort and displeasure to see the Colored draftees at Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass., that arrived from Florida termed as "Southern Darkies."

This is a war of democracy. Our boys are in France fighting to uphold America and the good old Stars and Stripes as are the men of the other race. Our boys are in camps training to go to France to do their equal share and bit as are the white boys. If relying on Lincoln's Statement that "All Men Are Created Equal," then why should degrading and insulting statements be cast at us on account of color. We are American citizens as well as the white man and are proud of it. Whether we be from the South of the North or the East or the West we are still American citizens and our boys in uniform are American Soldiers.

An early reply from you on this matter will be very appreciative

Yours truly
(Signed) LEON A. SMITH.

"COON SONGS" AND "GAMBLING CHIPS" ODIOUS TERMS.

March 16, 1918.

To the Editor of the Transcript:

In your issue of the 13th instant you published a picture of a band. Under it were the words—"Colored Band of the 15th Infantry awaiting Yankees from the Trenches," with the further explanation in regard to Aix-les-Baines" that "The band was famous in New York" and "was well known as Europe's Band and the men enlisted in a body."

The picture with such wording would have been a tribute to the patriotism of these Colored men, and a source of pride and encouragement to members of their race here at home. But you printed above the cut in much larger type these words—"Coon song supplants gambling chips at Famous Aix les Bains."

The Boston Branch of the National Equal Rights League asks space to protest against such an incongruous and disparaging, if not positively insulting head-line. We are at a loss to imagine the reason for such ridicule and insinuation on a Colored regiment and Colored soldiers fighting against Germany for the honor of this their country.

Camp Logan and Ellington Aviation Field, Houston

Bap DALLAS TEX BAPTIST STAN
MARCH 14, 1918

B. A. Copass.

3-14-18

AFTER visiting Fort Worth, Waco and San Antonio, we wondered whether anything distinctive could be found in the army situation at Houston. The city of Houston is different from other Texas cities. It has the air of Philadelphia. Near the sea-coast, with deep water facilities, and yet not on the coast. Near historic places that appeal to the imagination. The business is of the seaport kind, which means that business men think in big terms.

The industries partake of the same nature. For example, twelve ships are now being built at Houston under rush orders, to meet war conditions. Texas is so large that the cities are very different from one another. El Paso is different; San Antonio is different; even Dallas and Fort Worth are very different. The city life near the different camps has its influence in a measure upon the camps themselves. Then, the troops from different states have their characteristics, and that gives an atmosphere to the camps where they are being trained. The Illinois troops are being trained at Camp Logan, Houston. They give one the impression of solidity and restless energy both. They have the solidity of a Northern climate, and the energy of Chicago.

The religious affairs are making steady progress. The Y. M. C. A. leaders are emphasizing evangelism more and more all the time. Baptists are active in their work. The First Church attracts many of the boys, and special efforts are being made to reach them. All of the churches help the West End Church. That church is near the two main entrances to Camp Logan. The church has a large tabernacle with many conveniences, such as writing rooms, bath rooms, a lunch room, etc. The place is popular with the soldiers and many are being saved and baptized.

The pastor of this church is Brother D. L. Griffith. He literally took us in charge. We have never been treated with more kindness. The soldiers love and respect him. He is being blessed of God in his work.

Ellington Aviation Field is at Genoa, about twelve miles from Houston, on the Galveston road. There is a Y. M. C. A. building. The religious director is Brother Thomas Beaston, a Baptist preacher, and a godly leader. We had met him at San Antonio, and were greatly impressed with him. There are about 3,500 boys at this field, with 1,500 others to come. It would seem that Baptists should have a camp pastor here, and yet Beaston is evangelistic and aggressive.

In order to show the impression that Baptists are making on army men and army life, we give two or three instances.

A lieutenant who has been in several camps in different sections of the country, said: "Baptists are rendering more genuine service for the soldiers and doing them more good religiously than all the other denominations combined." We venture to remark that we know one reason why this is so. Baptists have a clear-cut definite program. They utilize every channel of approach, as for example, the Y. M. C. A., but they reach further than such combined efforts that must sink many of a man's deepest and most sacred convictions.

A Jew, a sergeant, attends Griffith tabernacle, and is reading the New Testament. He admits that he is seeking light. A Catholic also attends regularly. He recently said: "I am tired of the candle business and want to find Christ." Let Baptists move forward resolutely and be unafraid. "He that hath my Word let him preach my Word faithfully."

It was our privilege to see several things of unique interest. For example we went to the rifle range where Negro soldiers were practicing rifle shooting. The quality of their marksmanship did not impress us, but some of their other qualities did. One thing was their imperturbable good humor. They were just jolly Negroes. Then, they were really trying to learn to shoot well, and were very proud if they received the commendation of their officers. All the time they were gambling in a small way on their shooting. The crap shooting disposition was showing itself. They impressed me that they would be formidable with the bayonet. Our prediction is that the Huns will not stand before their rushes. Lincoln once said, "The NEGRO race will one day help to keep the torch of human liberty in the hands of the HUMAN race." Already they are doing it, fighting as they are in the British, French and American armies. What a pity that that riot ever took place! It would not have come but for the white man's whiskey, and the white man's saloon. Of course the rioters ought to be punished to the full extent of the law, but let us give the Negro justice. We saw the path that the rioters followed to the city; saw where they shot into the houses; shot people; and heard the stories of that dreadful night.

Rifle practice is done in different ranges, one, two, three hundred yards. Sharp shooting is practiced up to 700 yards. The targets are set over a trench. Men are in the trench and signal the results by wig-wagging, or phone it to the score keepers.

We also went to the artillery practice range, where the Seventy-eighth Field Artillery, regulars, and a battery of new men were practicing with three-inch guns. The practice distance is from 2,500 to 6,500 yards. The range is level, so we could see the shells bursting over the targets. The accuracy of such shooting is marvelous. They can plant a shell in a space of six to ten feet square, and rarely miss. The guns are marvels of exact mechanism. The system of signalling from look-out posts looked to us to be well-nigh perfect. It was our fortune to meet two of the officers, who extended every courtesy and showed us all that military caution would allow them to show. Capt. L. W. Chilton was born at Albany, Ky., but enlisted in the medical reserve corps from Oregon. He stood at attention during the firing with a first-aid service of men and equipment also at attention. He would not allow us to stand behind in range of a possible faulty breech lock, although the guns were new. His friendly precaution showed how full of risk artillery service is. Captain Sprinkle is from North Carolina. He has been a soldier of fortune, having served in the British Army in the Boer War. Since 1904 he has been in the regular army and served two and one half years in the Philippines during the time our half brother was there. Both of them are now expert artillerists. It might interest our readers to know that two of our half-brothers are in the service. One of them is now on the high seas; the other is training artillerists at Fort Sill, Okla. If we were of proper age we would be there, too.

Captain Sprinkle told of parting from his father recently. He said: "The old man was game and told me that he would go himself if he were a little younger." Then the officer's voice broke, tears stood in his eyes and he looked into the distance for a time, saying nothing. Many such things are witnessed. Somethings are mightier than guns. This man could face or direct a battery without a tremor, but his voice trembled when he thought of loved ones. He told us that an expert recently told a group of officers that this war would be won with small artillery and the bayonet.

From the artillery range Griffith, Brother A. S. Allen and I went to the Ellington Aviation Field. The adjutant, when he learned who we were, gave us a pass and sent a cadet with us to see the field and the flying. About fifty planes were in the air at one time. Our wonder grew as we watched them. Our guide, Cadet McIver, from Vermont, told us many things about learning to fly. He says it is easier and has less risks about it than driving an auto. We can believe that. If we had thousands of young men now learning to drive autos at the speed of from 100 to 150 miles an hour we would have more accidents. We told him of a Frenchman who said that he once lost all sense of vertical direction and could not tell whether or not his machine was bottom side up. He replied, that the only way to know "up and down" when one is high above the earth is to feel it. He then told of a flyer who flew into a cloud. When he got out of the cloud he was flying with the machine bottom side up.

Like birds, the flyers have to leave the ground facing the wind. It is also safer to descend in the same direction.

It is our judgment that the American flyers will play a large part in winning the war.

From the aviation field we went to the San Jacinto battleground. We stood by the tree, now fallen, but still living, where Santa Anna was brought to General Sam Houston. We also walked over the battlefield, saw where our brave men fell or triumphed; and lingered by the grave of some of them. Just then an aeroplane passed over, and the modern artillery was booming in the far distance. What a contrast between then and now. These old heroes fought with flint-lock guns at a range of about fifty yards. Their successors in fighting for liberty will fight from and in the air or at a range far greater. The men of both eras were and are heroes. They felt and feel their fighting to be for God and righteousness. They fought and do fight with the resolute valor of the Crusaders of old. All honor to the memory of those who fought and are now gone.

We can and will follow those who are now fighting with prayers for their ultimate victory. Some of them will not return. Their blood will make more sacred the soil of a people who have fought, suffered, and are now fighting and suffering much in the same cause.

Along that battle line in France and Belgium will lie the bodies of a host of valorous men—French, Belgians, English, Scotch, Irish, Italians, Russians (yes Russians, too), Canadians, Australians, East Indians, Africans, Americans, and a host of others. Some of them will have loved ones. We must provide for them if they need help, and we will. Those soldiers will win their fight for God and us. What manner of people ought we, who are left behind, to be, in all high resolve, in all holy living, in all sacrificial service?

Fifty colored men of Portland and eight from the state at large composed the first contingent of colored men who have left Portland in a body since the selective service system has been in operation.

The men entrained Friday noon for Camp Lewis after a public reception and dinner given by the city at the Public Auditorium. The Multnomah Guard Band, members of the Police Bureau, members of the City Council and women identified with Mayor Baker's selective farewell committee accompanied the men in the line of march to the depot.

Mothers, wives, sweethearts and friends of the colored boys marched by their sides and 30 young women composing the Rosebud Study Club aided in the celebration and reception. The men went to Camp Lewis.

DISCREDITING THE COLORED SOLDIER

We may look for a good many efforts in the near future to discredit the reputation which the colored soldiers have made in Europe. These efforts will come mainly from those who have all along been opposed to the Negro's participation in the war as a soldier.

We are going to hear that the Negro makes a pretty fair soldier, that is, if he has white officers. We are going to have told us that the Negro is no good as an officer, and even if he is a good officer, the men have no confidence in him and will not follow him.

Of course, it is harder for a Negro to be a good officer than it is to be a good private soldier; not only because it requires greater ability, but because so often his superior officers are all against him, they conspire to make him a failure, whereas, they do all they can to make their troops successful. A good many interesting stories of that sort of thing in this war could be told by our commissioned men.

So we had just as well be prepared to hear the statement made and repeated that the colored officer is no good. But it seems that some of our Southern friends are going so far as to try and discredit the colored private. We see that Ned Brace, the name under which the editor of the Birmingham (Ala.) Age-Herald conceals himself, writing from Chaumont, France, on November 1, says:

> Negro soldiers have no confidence in Negro officers, and as a rule are non-fighters under such. They are only fit for labor troops. Even under white officers it is difficult to handle them in engagements of modern warfare, where they don't have actual vision of their opponents. They can't stand the gaff of such fighting methods, any more than they can go into a fight after being encamped over night beside a cemetery. In open warfare, under white officers who have gained their confidence, they are veritable hell-hounds, but as all-around soldiers they have been a failure and the great mass of them have been put into labor battalions. There are exceptions, of course. I only speak of the average.

"Negro soldiers only fit for labor troops," "can't stand the gaff," "as all-round soldiers they have been a failure." We suppose it was for these reasons that the French army authorities cited the entire old Fifteenth Infantry, the only Negro regiment of the New York State Guard, for the Croix de Guerre. If any other entire unit in the whole American army has been similarly cited, we have not heard of it.

We should like Mr. "Brace" to tell us if he knows of any unit in the Alabama State Guard that has made such a record as all-round soldiers and men who could stand the gaff as the old New York Fifteenth. The greatest notoriety won by the white troops of the Alabama State Guard was when some of them tried to shoot up this same Fifteenth regiment when it was encamped with them down on Long Island.

ON BOAT WITH NEGRO TROOPS

Lieut Littlejohn Gives Picturesque Description of Interesting Voyage

ON THE WAY TO FRANCE

Georgians Carry White Lily and Rabbit's Foot to Guard Against Danger

Springfield friends of Lieut C. M. Littlejohn, a former member of The Daily News editorial staff, and now with the American expeditionary forces in France, have received an interesting letter from him. Lieut Littlejohn left newspaper work as soon as the call of war sounded and later went to Plattsburg where he earned his commission. He is now in France. The letter follows:—

"Thanks very much for the book. I had always been intending to get a copy and your Christmas present was enjoyed very much aboard the good ship that safely brought us over to the beautiful verdant shores of La Belle France, by myself as well as my stateroom mates.

"Mon Dieu! Those stormy days—to say nothing of those stormy nights—at sea! On board were a number of drafted Georgia Negroes and when they got seasick and the boat struck a heavy sea, they became a sorry crew. They thought sure the ship was destined for the bottom and they were consigned to Neptune, and perpetually wore their life preservers.

"I had an early morning watch over a compartment filled with these men, and the following morning after the Negroes had had their little church services in the hold to pray for the safety of the ship, I went down to get them up on deck. I called the Negro sergeant (who reminds me of the sergeant drilling his men and caught saying, 'When I says, "Night dress," I wants to see the whites of dem eyes, and when I says, "Front," I wants to hear dem eyelide snap,' and told him to blow his whistle and get the men up. He blew a blast and in this manner told them that it was reveille.

"'Boys, boys, histe you'se'ves. The good Lawd has seen fit to spah us to see daylight once more,' and several half-awake voices came down from the bunks together, 'May de Lawd be praised.'

Wear Their Life Preservers All the Time

"When they finally arrived on deck with the boat still sailing in a heavy sea, they were discouraged as human beings only could be. One said, leaning against the rail: 'One leedle pine tree, Lawd, jes' one leedle pine tree lemme see 'fore I die. I'd radder see lan' dis mawning dan my wife's mos' beautiful face. Sam, I dun wrote my wife that she can go ahead and marry anybody she choose, cause I ain't never coming back. I dun been a United States nigger, but from dis time the United States is a foreign country to me until they builds a railroad.'

"Another Negro in the compartment above mine furnishes another anecdote to a field artillery lieutenant from Plattsburg. He was a long time subsiding after the storm and a load of dynamite wouldn't have pried him loose from his life preserver, which he wore all the time, even before we neared the danger zone.

"The Plattsburger said: 'Look here man, what's your worry? Don't you know I got a white lily in my pocket?'

"'You got a what lily?'

"'Yes, I got a white lily right here in my breast pocket.'

"The Negro stared for a moment, and then fished in his pocket.

"'And, boss, I got a rabbit's foot, too.'

"'What," said the Plattsburger, you got a rabbit's foot and you're afraid?'

"The Negro meditated a moment and said pensively, 'Well, well, you got a white lily and I got a rabbit's foot,' and then breaking into a happy grin: 'Say, boss, why don't you all tell me before that you all had that what lily?'

"But near the end of the voyage we had a lot of amusement with them and when they forgot their illness and the sea grew calm, they began to 'roll dem bones' and have their little game of African golf. And one night a quartet of them took us way back to Georgia when they began their harmonious plantation melodies.

Visit to a Wonderful Old Chateau

"Well, I have been in France almost a week. About long enough to pull a couple of breaks in talking to the population. I went into a French pastry shop (Lord, what pastry they have here!) and after making her understand, I said, 'depechez-vous," without the 'S. V. P.' and it seems that this was a faux pas. She never said anything, but I could read in her countenance, 'Oh, those mad Americans!' But I was only in that town a few minutes and had to run for the train again, so that was all I could say at that time.

"Yesterday I was having my daily big cup of chocolate in one of the burette shops of this little city. There was a very pretty young girl who had formerly waited on me, and another woman serving me in this wine shop, a very dingy place, told me that the girl was her sister. She spoke proudly and I assured her that I thought the sister was a very pretty girl. She elevated her eyebrows, drew in her chin, and sizzled back at me, 'Elle a une bonne caractere,' and it seemed that my simple remark had hurt her a little. But I mustered up what little French I knew and tried to apologize and make her understand.

"Yesterday also I was glad I had the chance to visit a moldy old chateau, a famous old place, whose greatness I can't pronounce because you, 'severally and jointly,' would know from your college education through what place I had passed and this information I can't convey. But there were wonderful coats of arms on the ceilings, walls, and tapestries, and awful dungeons and secret poison cabinets for ridding France of suspected traitors."

STILL BURLESQUING NEGRO SOLDIERS.

HERE ENDED FIRST LESSON.

Negro Rookies Relieved Of Their Dice By Sergeant With a Pail.

(Mary Roberts Rhinehart, in the Saturday Evening Post).

"When the Negroes first came to the cantonment they came, many of them, without enough clothing to cover them adequately. But in one particular they were wonderfully well equipped.

On the first day they were lined up in company front, a long line of rather worried-looking boys; and at the first order of "Fall in" they almost went into hysterics with glee. "Fall in!" Fall into what? They thought the officer was being facetious.

"However, at last they fell in, and a Negro officer with great dignity, his waistband thrust a bit forward with his magnificent erectness, delivered himself somewhat as follows:

" 'We's all gathered heah togethah to fight this heah wah. Now they's lots of things which you ain' done at home that youse goin' to do heah. And they's lots of things you done at home which you ain' going to do here. The first rule is: They ain' goin' to be no crap shooting.'

"A sort of low wail went up from the troops, but the officer fixed them with a grim eye and sent his first sergeant for a pail. Then the inexorable pair went down the line.

There was a hold-up here and there when some defiant soldier stonily professed innocence. But the officer did not weaken.

"All right. Shell out them dice!"

"I ain't got no dice, cap'n. Honest I ain'."

" 'Shell out them dice!'

"Eventually search would be made by the sergeant, and the dice found. And with excellent psychology, as each man delivered the contraband the others shrieked with joy. Only when their own turns came was the joy turned into mourning.

"The lettering on their uniforms puzzled some of them at first. The letters are U. S. N. A., for United States National Army. But one of them was overheard explaining to another bewildered darkey that the letters stood for Uncle Sam's Negro Army."

The above article, copied from the Saturday Evening Post from the pen of Mary Roberts Rhinehart, is illuminating and informing to Negroes. To the average whiteman or woman it may be a simple and truthful description or picture of Negro life, and the author, knowing the ignorance which her people labor under as to the intelligence, education and morals of the Negro, uses such ignorance to fix permanently in the minds of the members of her race an ignorant, degraded, unmoral race of Negroes incapable of advancement, and totally unfit for service requiring the exercise of intelligence, responsibility and obligation.

Officers of the Army are selected with the greatest care, and men so chosen are selected because of peculiar fitness, which includes not only educational training equal, at least, to that given in the best high schools of the country, but character, poise, courage and ability to command men. And yet the uniform of the United States Army, bestowed only after severe tests proved that its wearer merited it, is held up to ridicule and is made a jest and a butt for fools by this woman because its loyal and patriotic wearers have black skins.

Nor is the journal which publishes such dirty misrepresentations of men who are willingly offering their lives for their country wholly blameless. It seems that the time has fully arrived when editors of newspapers should use the pruning knife on all such stupid and senseless lies against Negroes.

If they will not desist, it is hardly too much to expect the government to suggest to newspapers and its writers that soldiers and sailors of the republic are not expected to be made the subject of ridicule, and victims of those who may wish to humiliate them.

If Negroes cannot be protected in civil life, they most certainly deserve and should be protected in the uniform of the soldier.

MISPLACED HUMOR PROVES OFFENSIVE TO COLORED PEOPLE

CHEYENNE (WYO) TRIBUNE
AUGUST 3, 1918

CONSPICUOUS PART PLAYED BY NEGRO TROOPS IN EVERY AMERICAN WAR A MATTER OF HISTORY

They Fought With Washington, Jackson and Grant and Will Distinguish Themselves Over There

There is nothing more wholesome or enjoyable than humor that is timely and on the other hand humor that is misplaced or inopportune is usually offensive. It is a great art to know when to distinguish as to timeliness and untimeliness. Unfortunately, so far as a newspaper is concerned, however innocently joking may be intended, if it is exercised at the wrong time and in the wrong place, the effect is about the same as if it were malicious.

Yet most people who will stop to think must realize that very few newspapers are intentionally disagreeable or malicious. There is nothing to be gained by it.

The newspaper business, like every other business at this time, is dependent upon inexperienced help and mistakes nearly always accompany inexperience. Young reporters who are strangers to a community are much more likely to make mistakes than more experienced ones familiar by long time residence with their surroundings.

In recording the departure Friday of Cheyenne's colored drafted men, one of our young reporters without any intention of being offensive, but only trying to make a good story, with some humor in it, very apparently made use of certain terms and statements which were not only very much out of place but in bad taste.

In these strenuous times the heads of newspapers as well as of other organizations are engaged in so many things including war activites, they do not have the opportunity to supervise everything that goes into the newspaper.

It is also pretty well understood nowadays that any newspaper is glad to make corrections of mistakes. Any other policy is the sheerest folly. There is no such thing as "forcing retractions and apologies." A newspaper is an impersonal institution, just as a railroad or a hotel, and is just as quick to correct a mistake as the proprietor of a hotel is to make good any error caused by misunderstanding or carelessness. The statement about dice games and such was merely a play of imagination. The going away was orderly in every particular.

The Tribune is sure its large number of colored subscribers do not believe there was anything willful or intentionally offensive in the bit of misplaced humor reeled off by a young reporter Friday.

A colored soldier going away to do his bit is entitled to the same consideration as a white soldier, and the sisters and mothers of colored boys feel just as deeply the absence of the sons and brothers who may not return.

In this connection it may be interesting and instructive to recall some of the things the colored race has accomplished in the American wars.

There was an average of thirty-five negroes in each white regiment of the revolutionary war. In August 1778 there were under General Washington's immediate command seven hundred and seventy-five colored men. This does not include the negro troops furnished by Connecticut, New York, and Rhode Island. Altogether three thousand colored troops participated in establishing American independence.

In the war of 1812, colored men played an important part and Commodore Perry spoke highly of those under his command at the battle of Lake Erie. He said, "They seem to be absolutely insensible of danger." Several thousand took part in the war of 1812 and five hundred served with General Andrew Jackson in whipping the British at New Orleans.

The figures of the Civil war are even more striking. Approximately 180,000 colored men fought with the Union army. They made up 161 regiments of which 141 were infantry, seven cavalry, twelve artillery and one light artillery. Almost as many men as President McKinley called out in 1898 for the Spanish-American war.

These colored troops distinguished themselves in many bloody battles.

After the Civil war the Ninth and Tenth cavalry and the Thirty-eighth, Thirty-ninth, Fortieth and Forty-first infantry were organized, and became part of the standing army.

The part played by colored troops in the Spanish-American war is so recent that every school boy is familiar with it. Four negro regiments were among the first ordered to Cuba where they played a conspicuous part. At the first severe engagement in Cuba, namely at Las Guasimas, the dashing Tenth cavalry, organized way back in '66, distinguished itself by coming to the support of Col. Roosevelt and the rough riders.

The Twenty-fifth infantry fought at El Caney, while the Ninth and Tenth cavalry and Twenty-fourth infantry rendered really heroic service in the famous battle of San Juan Hill. They fought side by side with the white soldiers, over Spanish trenches, through barb wire entanglements, and past block houses on that July afternoon, 1898, when the American troops entered San Juan singing, "There Will Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight."

Three negroes have graduated at West Point and several have held commisions in the United tSates army prior to the present war. Major Chas. Young, of the Ninth cavalry, was well known and highly respected in Cheyenne. The Tribune merely reviews this record in order to refresh the memory of the present generation as to the colored man's loyalty, his qualities as a good soldier and how gallant he may be expected to serve "over there."

GENERAL FOCH REFUSES TO DRAW THE COLOR LINE

The St. Louis Post Dispatch

Paris, France—The story is told how certain Southern influence attempting to get Marshal Foch entangled in the web of race prejudice, seeking to segregate Colored officers and soldiers in France, received from the great field marshal the following:

"Gentlemen: When General Pershing came) to France he found a black man at the head of the French army. France has no color prejudice and persecutes no man on account of color or creed."

General Dodds, to whom Marshal Foch referred, was stationed in Cochin, China, for many years in command of the Oirental armies of France, where his military and diplomatic skill were so great that France named him to take charge of the Allied armies in their march to Pekin at the time of the Boxer insurrection.

He speaks many languages and dialects and his familiarity with the Chinese language and literature contributed largely to his pre-eminent success in the Orient.

STRIKING FOR DEMOCRACY

DR. W. SPENCER CARPENTER'S LETTER TO "THE OUTLOOK"

The Christian Recorder Mar. 21, 1918

Brooklyn, N. Y., March 13, 1918.

To the Editor of The Outlook, 381 Fourth Ave., New York:

Dear Sir:

Having just finished reading the current issue of The Outlook, I wonder if your article, "Mobilizing 'Rastus" could not be called more appropriately "Stigmatizing American Citizenship at the Army Cantonments."

I am in no sense a pessimist, but I cannot help wondering if articles such as "Mobilizing 'Rastus" are not more damaging than beneficial.

As a reader of The Outlook I am certain that your publication aims to assist President Wilson in "Making democracy safe in the world." And I know The Outlook has blown the trumpet for a real democracy among the drafted men in our army camps. Yet, in the face of these facts, you allow to be published and spread broadcast through the columns of The Outlook Lieutenant Lynde's castigating and unnecessary reflections upon thousands of loyal Negroes, who, like the men of your race, are in training to serve their flag on the battlefield of France.

As is usual in most cases where publicity is to be given, this article, "Mobilizing 'Rastus" selects for its hero "Potassium Acetate Smith," and, holding him up as the type of Negro recruit, conveys the impression that the majority of Negroes in the camps are of the "Potassium" kind. Of course "Potassium" is there and he is "Potassium Acetate" because this chivalric Southland of ours believes implicitly in the type of Negro he represents. But, on the other hand, there are thousands of Negroes in our camps whose intellect and adaptability measure equally with the men of any and every other race variety called to the colors. Why then, in seeking a feature article on the work of the Negro soldiers, is the minority rather than the majority held up for ridicule and example.

In this article such phrases as "Many of the darkies," "One Darky gave his age," "The darkies watched in tong-tied silence" and "Cap'n Boss." are found. Naturally such phrases could not have escaped your attention during the make-up of The Outlook. Yet they have been brought before the public. Should The Outlook allow itself to be the voice of an officer who feels it to be within the scope of his military training to speak of us as "Darkies?"

Again, in "Mobilizing 'Rastus" the Negro soldiers are accused of falling to "the lure of the bones." Surely that weakness belongs not to the black soldier alone. Why, Mr. Editor, I have in my desk a pair of bones, so called, which, as a non-commissioned officer in the Spanish-American War, I took in raiding a crap game in which hundreds of white soldiers only were engaged. Basing this statement on an experience of sixteen years as a private, non-commissioned and commissioned officer in military service I dare to assert that the "Lure of the Bones" is no more a "'Rastus" weakness than the weakness of any other set of men in the service.

Lynde portrays the cleverness of an officer in detecting the guilty purloiner of a bottle of vanilla extract. How carefully worded is the author's insinuations that "'Rastus" can learn best by imitation rather than by instruction. Twenty years ago and later, when as a drill sergeant for the regimental recruits, it was my duty to teach men the fundamentals of drill, and time and time again I had before me white recruits who also could best learn by imitation rather than by printed instructions. And many times as an officer of the guard in encampments I observed sentry duty on the part of white soldiers which parallels the work of "'Rastus" in his "Mobilization."

May I ask if men now called to the colors and who, under the laws of their states, are denied the benefits of a public school education—are they to be expected to spell other than in phonetics? The credit is theirs, I should say, that they do so well.

Maybe many of the Negro recruits were unacquainted with shower baths when they entered the camps. But is not the blame for such a condition squarely upon the unsanitary housing conditions under which the Negro, because of the white man's prejudice, is obliged to live at his home.

As a Negro, and not being ashamed of the fact; as one who holds a certificate of merit from his state for service in the Spanish-American War; as an humble preacher of God's Word, I condemn to the uttermost the unwarranted reflections, the stigmatizing attitudes, the biased, prejudiced ridicule and the undeserved slurring of thousands of black men now awaiting the call to do or die for the Flag under which they were born, the Flag which they love, but under which discriminations are forced upon them perhaps unlawful for me to designate.

I doubt very much that The Outlook would select the weakest type of any other distinctive race variety found in our army camps and hold it up as the best such a race were producing as soldiers. I doubt that The Outlook will illuminate the thought of America with articles on "Mobilizing Pat" or "Rube" or "Tony" or "Percy." Holding such a doubt may I ask of you, as one out of many of my race feeling the sting of your "'Rastus" article, may I ask that holding high the principles of the democracy which you advocate, you will not in the future make us hold our heads down in regret because of "'Rastus" articles in your publication which hurt us even though they prove to be amusing to those who support your publication.

And, Mr. Editor, may I advise you that at Camp Sherman, Ohio, where white and black recruits are in training, the motto of that camp is: "Only One Color and That Is Olive Drab."

Respectfully,
W. SPENCER CARPENTER.

THE COLORED COOK'S THRILLING STORY OF A U BOAT'S VISIT

NEW YORK TIMES
JUNE 14, 1918

He Didn't Need Ten Minutes to Get Off the Schooner, Two Was Enough.

Daniel Giro was the colored cook of the schooner Edward H. Cole, which was sent to the bottom by a U boat off the Jersey coast; but there'll be no sons of sea cooks in the Giro family—not if Daniel Giro knows it, and Daniel's "gwine ter keep fah, fah from de oshun fo' evahmo'."

Daniel has gone to Maine, the home of his ancestors. Not on the rugged coast, does Daniel and his family abide. He comes not from a family of the sea. He comes from a family of cooks and has always lived in the interior. Daniel went to the Barge Office to get his discharge after he, with the rest of the crew, had told his story to the United States authorities. He said to a reporter:

"Boss, what am de best way to get to Maine? Mah folks don' all live dere and dey may have heard aboot mah accident and be worried."

"Why, by way of Boston," was the answer.

"Sure, I know dat; but what am de bess way ter get to Boston?"

"Go on one of the Fall River boats."

"Bowt!" And a greenish hue overspread the bronze of the Giro frontispiece. "Did yo' say bowt, boss? Nevah no bowt, no mo' for muh."

The cook gazed reflectively out of the window toward Battery Park, where a squad of Naval Reserve sailors were drilling. A new light came into his eye.

"See dem sailors?" he asked. "Over dere in de park. I'll nevah see sailors on de oshun any mo'. Dem sailors dey know sumfin. Ahm gwine to Boston same way dey go. I'm gwine in de cahs."

"What were you doing when the U boat hove in sight, Daniel?"

"'Twas on a Sunday aft'noon, aboot fo' 'clock, boss, an' ah was gettin' dinnah ready for de crew. I done kill fo' chickens and was gwine ter hev fried chicken fo' de sailors. De stove in de galley was red hot. An' de cap'n put his face down in de companyun way, and sez to muh: 'Yo' done got ten minutes ter leave de bowt.'

"De cap'n don used ter kid me offen; but when I don look up dey was no lie on dat face in de do'. I see de cap'n he ain't kiddin muh dis time, an' Ah clumb on deck. Suah nuff, boss, dere was de U bowt right off our bow, an' a little rowboat a-comin' fo' us. I just don couldn' berlieve muh eyes, dat's all. I don run down de ladder quick again and Ah shut muh eyes and put muh finger on de red hot stove.

"Den Ah know 'twasn't no dream. I run up de companyun way to de deck, and den de rowbowt came 'longside and de cap'n he jumped on deck, and says to muh in English just as good as I spoke: 'Yer done got ten minutes ter get off de bowt,' and he held up his ten fingers.

"'All I want is two, mistah!' Ah done tole him, an' I held up two fingers. Den de sailors came over de side and dey all hed bomms. Dey tols muh ter go down in de fo'castle and get mah duds. I looked at dem bomms, and I done tole 'em ah hed all de close I needed right dere on de deck. I didn' go in de fo'castle no mo.' You can just 'magine, boss, what might a happen ter muh 'f one of dem fool German sailors let one of dose bomms fall in de fo'castle while ah was down below. Ah'd nevah see de folks in Maine no mo.'

"No, suh, I done get right in de lifeboat wid de cap'n, and de German sailors put de bomms down on de deck—two in de front of de schoonah an' two in de back. We was right between de schoonah and de U bowt. Say, boss doan let 'em tole yo' dose U bowts am little. Dat U bowt was suah the biggest thing Ah ever saw in my life. Ah nevah pulled a oah in mah life. We doan hab no Yale and Harboard crews up in Maine; but we suttinly did row dat bowt. When de U bowt went dis way, we went dat way; an' when she went dat way we went dis.

"We was off de schoonah 'bout five minutes when de bomms went off and de schoonah, wit' all her sails up, sailed right to de bottom uv de oshun. Den we knowed we was gwine ter get it nex', but we jess ken' pullin' on de oahs. Den we see smoke on de horyzon, and de U bowt he seen it too. Fo' de fust time we felt safe. De U bowt put right fo' de smoke, an' twenty minits later, by de Cap'n's watch, we saw de steamer turn up an' go down, jes like our own schoonah.

"We was picked up by a steamah about 8 o'clock dat night, an' we was mighty happy when de Cap'n don tole us we was bound fo' New York. Den he tole us dey was sho't of stokahs. Say, boss, Ah doan nevah shuvvel coal in all mah life, but Ah was the fust ter volunteer mah services. An' de whole crew follered muh to de stokehole. 'An' ever' time I don open de funnace do' Ah don see that U bowt, an' Ah shuvveled coal like coal nebber was shuvveled befoh.

"No mo' bowt fo' me, boss. I wanna get back to Maine ter see mah folks pow'ful bad, but not by de bowt, boss, not by de bowt. Ah wanna go by de cahs. An' Ah nevah want to see no mo' sailors on de sea, nevah no more. I like de sailors on de land, like dem sailors ovah dere. Dey know sumfin, boss; dey know sumfin."

REAL SOUTHERN NEGRO IS STILL WONDERING WHY WAR WAS DELAYED IN ARRIVING

"Say, boss, gimme a nickel to buy a cigar."

One of Topeka's charitably inclined citizens was lounging around the Union Pacific station one day last week, when he heard the above remark. He turned to see a man, black as a moonless night, looking in his direction, and was about to "move on," when he noticed a small white card tied to what were once a pair of suspenders. He recognized that he was being "touched," but that little card, which signified that the Negro was a select on his way to Camp Funston, won the coveted "jitney" for the wearer.

A glance at the card told the business man that the wearer was from an isolated point in southern Oklahoma. The Negro's wearing apparel, what there was of it, told a livid story of a backwoods resident, who is but little acquainted with the ways of the outside world. The Negro's actions bore out the impression more forcibly than words can describe. His trouser legs were torn off at the knees, and from there down his legs were bare. His shirt was old, dirty and torn.

"Does this 'ere guv'ment treat all his soldiers like this?" said the embryo "kaiser chaser," by way of opening a conversation with his benefactor, after he had lighted the cigar and was peaceably smoking. A red rose was sticking in the band of a tattered hat, thanks to the canteen women.

"Sure it does. Don't you like th treatment you are receiving?" returned the B. M.

"Say, bo, if this is the way everybody who fights gets treated, why in the debbil didn't that there kaiser start this war ten years ago," said the Negro as he climbed back into the special car which was carrying his contingent to training camp.

Colored Troopers Roll Out and Give Barrack to What They Think Is Ghostly Visitor.

(Special Dispatch to The Morning Telegraph.)

CAMP MILLS, L. I., Nov. 24.

For a half-hour last night a labor battalion kept the camp awake here, and it was thought for a time that a riot had broken loose. The trouble arose from a labor battalion, made up of colored troops, being quartered for the night in one of the buildings that was used for a hospital during the influenza epidemic. As soon as the colored men, who had seen many bodies carried from that building, learned that they had to sleep there last night, there was a great rolling of the whites of their eyes.

When inside the building each sought a bed near the door. At the sounding of taps lights went out and every man in that barrack went under cover, head and all. Everything was all right until about three hours later, when the guard noticed something moving across the floor and called it to halt. There was no response except a ghostly sound, and he fired. Then there was a squawk that could be heard all over the camp, and the men came tumbling out of that barrack as though it were infected by the plague.

No one would go back to see what caused the trouble. The men were frightened and would have no more of that barrack. Finally Captain Callan, the transportation officer, came along, and learning what was the matter entered the barrack and found a dead cat shot squarely through the head. Even then the men would not return to their barrack, but built a big fire and sat around it for the rest of the night.

OUR COLORED HEROES IN

The New York Age, 5-18

(BY [illegible] A. WALTON)

SEVERAL evenings ago I saw a picture at the movies entitled "America's Answer" Uncle Sam's soldiers who had been awarded medals for extraordinary valor under fire and our boys in khaki over here as well as over there were flashed on the screen amid salvos of applause. I, too, took an active part in the handclapping; but when it was all over deep down in my heart there was an aching void—because of all the hundreds of soldiers I had seen not one was a colored American.

There are sins of omission as well as sins of commission. Since our entry into the great conflict motion picture concerns and other agencies engaged in keeping the American public informed as to the movements of our troops have been notoriously guilty of the former sin so far as the colored soldier is concerned.

The consistent manner in which the colored soldier has been completely blotted out has not been due to an oversight. Far from it. The moving picture camera has failed to gaze momentarily on the faces of brave, black Americans because a tacit understanding exists among certain would-be Americans to keep the colored soldier in the background as much as possible.

"America's Answer" and without a colored soldier! Statistics will impart the information that more than 400,000 colored Americans were called to help give the answer! The records of the War Department also will show that many race men have been decorated for distinguished service in action. But we would be wholly in ignorance of these pleasing facts if left to motion picture people to make them known on this side of the water.

Henry Johnson of the old 15th from New York was the first American doughboy to be awarded the Croix de Guerre for conspicuous bravery by the French. But has his picture been shown in the United States from Coast to Coast by the movies? The old 15th Regiment is said to have been cited more times by the French for acts of valor than any other regiment from this country. But have we been permitted to see on the screen this courageous body of colored soldiers who have made it possible for the old 15th to receive so many regimental citations?

One of the important functions of the Committee on Public Information at Washington during the war was to direct the presentation of war pictures with a view to keeping the American public educated about our soldiers. So far as colored Americans are concerned the Committee on Public Information has failed miserably in its aims and objects. The committee's failure to keep us in touch with what thousands of colored troops are doing overseas through the Hearst-Pathe people has been nothing short of criminal.

It has come to my knowledge that arrangements now are being made to show colored troops in France by the Committee on Public Information, but that these pictures are to be put on view for the express benefit of colored people only. If this "Jim Crow" method of introducing our heroes to the public is to be adopted there ought to be such a howl raised that those directly interested in the scheme will be forced to give it up. It savors too much of circumscription.

If our colored heroes have proved so highly acceptable as fighting men, if, as is admitted, they have helped "to save the white man's civilization," they should be exhibited on the screen to the white public over here and given credit for their good work in the trenches. Does the Committee on Public Information harbor the absurd opinion that white Americans are only interested in the movements of white soldiers and in no way concerned about the colored soldiers?

The colored people of this country are extremely anxious and desirous of seeing race soldiers on the screen, for this has been a rare privilege denied them. However, they vigorously dissent from any plan to label such pictures: "To be seen by Negroes only."

It seems that we have much to learn yet from the French about democracy. The French people do not hesitate to admit that the winning of the Battle of the Marne was largely due to the timely arrival of thousands of black French troops. Pride is taken in showing the pictures of the Senegalese and Soudanese over there. Of course, very little has been said about these African fighters over here.

"America's Answer" or any other motion pictures purporting to give to this country the full and correct account of the achievements and doings of our soldiers would be a rank misrepresentation and unmistakably unfair if the colored soldier was not included. We know this to be a fact and want those involved in these acts of vicious suppression to know that we know they are doing the American Negro and the United States a great injustice.

AMERICAN NEGRO SAMMIES FURNISH FUN IN FRANCE

Mrs. H. B. Achuff, 906 Thirty-ninth-st, has received a letter from her son, Sergt. Fred W. Achuff, who is in France, in which he relates a humorous dialogue between an American negro and a racial brother from Africa.

BERNARD JANSEN.

"There is no great excitement around my station, but there is a great deal that is interesting," he writes. "For one thing, today a large detachment of plain, ordinary, noisy negroes arrived on the scene. The funny part of it was their attitude toward the black African soldiers of France—something like a couple of strange dogs meeting and talking it over out in the middle of the road. One American negro shouted at an Algerian comrade, 'Hello, nigger, how are you all?' The French dinge came back at him, 'Bon jour, monsieur.' The American hollered back, 'Bon h—. I asked you how you was.' Another one said that 'them niggers with the tin hats couldn't talk their own language—funny lot.'"

In France.

Bernard Jansen, 2428 Burleigh-st, has been with the American forces in France since November. He was born in West Bend, and at the time of his enlistment was employed at the Hoffmann-Billings Manufacturing Co.

Miss Victoria Siborski, 631 Grove-st, has received a letter from her brother, Tony, who is serving in Gen. Pershing's army. He writes:

"I do lots of woodmen's work, digging six-foot holes. My next experience is going to be training mules and digging sewers, but I don't mind it a bit. I just love to work, for we have such nice officers, and they just teach us fine."

Describes War-Time New York.

Durward B. Wright, formerly of The Journal and who is now abroad, writes:

"The trip down the Hudson awoke an interest in me that will never be satisfied until I make it again in the summertime. Broadway, with its lack of lights, plenty of chorus girls' shows and old men with young girls, was a sight never to be forgotten."

THE NEGRO IN THE NATIONAL ARMY

By HENRY C. NEWELL.

THE national draft means more, perhaps, to the American negro than anything that has happened to him since his release from slavery. At no time since the Civil War has so great a degree or wide a variety of opportunity come to him as in these strenuous days of war training.

Attached to all the big cantonments in the Central Military Department are regiments of negro troops a little less in the public eye, perhaps, but engaged, nevertheless, in just as earnest a programme of preparation as any of the white troops. These units have been recruited from the South and the North and they form pretty much the same conglomerate of literate and illiterate, well-to-do and poor, traveled and untraveled, that the white contingents do.

Measuring Up.

Thousands of the men have come away from cotton and sugar plantations for the first time in their lives. Other thousands have been called from their homes in Northern cities for the first time. All, however, are getting an experience, discipline and training that amount to a distinct contribution to their lives. The chance to grow and develop mentally, physically, socially and morally has come to these men at a time when they least expected it, but from an observation covering all the big military centers in the Central Department the writer can state unhesitatingly that the negroes are measuring up to their new opportunities.

Many of the negro recruits had no notion of what they were being called upon to do. In fact, some of them were totally ignorant of the wages they were to receive as soldiers.

A short time after he arrived at Camp Dodge, a negro boy from an Alabama plantation asked a white soldier when pay day was coming and how much would be paid the negro troops. The answer was what might be termed an "impressive surprise:"

"Thirty dollars a month."

"Thuhty dollahs, sar?"

"Yes; thirty dollars a month."

"Ehv'ry month?"

"Sure; thirty dollars every month."

"Phew—ee!"

Fifteen dollars a month was the most he had ever earned on the Alabama plantation where he was born and had spent his entire life. Double that amount for service in the army, besides board and clothing, seemed enormous in the negro trooper's eyes. Even after sending home $15 each month he has as much or more than he ever had earned picking cotton.

Another story is told of a negro boy who one day asked a Y. M. C. A. secretary:

"Say, boss—what's dis heah Kaisah Bill stuff? Jes' show him to me an' Ah'll shoot him, so we all kin go on back t' Alabam'."

Seventy-five per cent. of these negro troops have never had an opportunity to learn English well enough to read or write or to study even grade school subjects. It was soon found that so many negroes could neither read nor write that their illiteracy was seriously interfering with their becoming good soldiers.

Some men hardly knew their right foot from their left and many could not understand military orders though they were given in the simplest language. When it came to filling out questionnaires or blanks of any kind the men were nonplussed and were compelled to call upon some literate friend or the Y. M. C. A. secretaries to help them.

Writes Letters For Men.

In a moment of real necessity and almost wholly unequipped, the secretaries set about to relieve homesickness and anxiety by writing letters for the men, though they knew that in many instances not even the men's families would be able to read them. In this connection the story is told of a negro boy who asked a secretary to write a letter to his sweetheart. With much painstaking the boy dictated what he wanted to say to his girl down in Alabama and the secretary carefully noted it down.

When it had been finished the boy surprised the amenuensis by asking:

"Would you-all mind writin' 'nother lettah, boss?"

"No," said the secretary, "not at all. Who shall we write to this time?"

"'Nother gal," said the boy.

"All right," agreed the secretary, ready for any queer turn. "What shall I say?"

The negro boy scratched his head for a moment before he said, "Well, boss, jes' copy de first lettah."

Improving Opportunities.

In the midst of the letter-writing demand in this same cantonment a secretary came upon a number of English leaflets that had been used to instruct foreign-speaking men in barracks which the negroes now occupied. He eagerly seized upon these and immediately organized a class in English, using this same phonetic system devised by Dr. Peter Roberts. Several days later, in reporting his work to headquarters, he declared that more lessons were imperative, as the men were simply "eating them up."

Such a demand had not been anticipated by the Y. M. C. A., and in the absence of anything better the Roberts leaflets were used, with the result that hundreds of negroes became inoculated with the germ of ambition and engaged eagerly in learning to read and write the common tongue of the country.

Whereas, only a few weeks before there had been only several hundred letters written daily in the Y. M. C. A. hut for negroes at Camp Dodge, there now began to be written literally thousands. It was estimated that nearly 5,000 letters were being written by the negro troops during the Christmas season just passed.

One day a secretary in charge of English instruction for negro troops appealed to the camp educational director:

"We must have pens and ink for these men now; 1,000 of each."

"But the men have pencils," said the educational director, "why should they have pen and ink?"

"Because they have to sign the payroll in ink—hundreds of them can't use a pen to save their lives."

The idea was a new one in Y. M. C. A. experience, for no one had any idea that one who wrote with a pencil could not also write with a pen. But some of the signatures of the negro troopers were examined and what appeared to be perfectly legible in pencil was nothing less than a hen scratch in ink.

So the Y. M. C. A. provided 1,000 penholders, 2,000 pen points and 1,000 bottles of ink and set the men to work with their new weapon. The weapon proved in many cases to be somewhat of the nature of a squirt gun, for those who tried it for the first time almost covered themselves with ink; some of them looked as if they had been taking a bath in it.

But the difficulty was overcome by patience and practice, and to-day a majority of these negro troops can write as well with a pen as with a pencil.

Must Sign In Ink.

At Grant the Y. M. C. A. campaign in writing was given the slogan: "Every Man Must Write His Name," and the response was immediate. Some of the men had been told the story that they could not draw their pay unless they could sign their names to the payroll in ink, but a majority of them entered the campaign because they were interested in being able to communicate with their folks at home.

Camp Sherman has quartered nearly 4,000 negro troops, practically all of whom have been enrolled in one or more phases of Y. M. C. A. activity. Educational lectures of various kinds have attracted a large attendance and English classes for illiterates have been popular. Captains of negro companies have insisted that their men learn to read and write, and that they go even farther in their studies and take up mathematics and French. In a number of the cantonments the Y. M. C. A. French classes have included large numbers of negro officers.

The work for the negro troops at Camp Custer and Camp Funston is of much the same nature and results as in the other Northern centers. Throughout the Central Military Department the English and letter-writing campaigns have produced widely beneficial results. The men are by no means so lonesome as they were or as they would be without their present knowledge; they are now in closer touch with their homes and friends and as a whole are a much more contented lot of national defenders. Also, their ambitions have been whetted and they are ready to enroll in other educational classes whenever they shall be organized.

Falling Off In Profanity.

Other changes are being observed among these same troops. The men are getting a new attitude toward immorality and diseases incident thereto just by answering the appeal that comes to them from the recreational or social or religious activities promoted by the Y. M. C. A. In several divisions of negro troops the secretaries have found a distinct falling off in profanity and gambling as a result of their evening and Sunday afternoon evangelistic meetings and of their provision of letter paper and envelopes for them to use in writing home.

From the physical standpoint these same men are being helped perhaps more than any others in the entire enlistment. Not many negroes have had an opportunity to indulge in outdoor recreation; they have the play instinct, but they have never known how to give expression to it except by means of the buck-and-wing and a few other crude and simple play movements.

Naturally, they have responded eagerly to the athletic games and general recreational features of the Y. M. C. A. programme.

"They all have to be taught how to play," said one of the physical directors in a big cantonment, "but they are really quick to learn and get lots of good from their participation in games of all sorts. We even follow them up into the field or in the trench, or wherever they happen to be stationed, and put on various games and recreational activities. The negro branch of the army Y. M. C. A. in each cantonment is equipped with plenty of athletic paraphernalia and it is all in constant use. By means of the athletic programme of basketball and volleyball games and other outdoor activities it has been possible for us to help the military build a contented body of negro soldiers and at the same time help the soldiers physically."

RIDICULE FOR OUR SOLDIERS IN FRANCE.

THE AGE has received the following letter from a private soldier in France:

The New York Age

To the Editor of THE NEW YORK AGE:

Perhaps the enclosed clipping will interest you or your readers. It sounds like Louisiana or Georgia to me. I am glad to read in THE AGE of our people getting more of their rights and hope to read more of their progress. Your editorial on Cole Blease was a bear. Keep it up.

The clipping sent us is evidently cut from an English or American paper, with a Paris place of publication, and the article is entitled "Uncle Sam's Negro Soldiers," by Fullerton L. Waldo, associate editor Public Ledger, Philadelphia. The writer starts off by saying that he has just been chatting with one of "our American Y. M. C. A. secretaries, who is a real expert on the subject of the American Negroes in the war. Mr. Edward B. Schumacher is from the South."

The quality and veracity of this expert and his reporter may be gauged by the following extracts:

They asked one man if he had been inoculated. This was his answer: "I'se been assassinated (vaccinated); I'se done had de celluloid (varioloid), and now dey tells me I'se a mute (immune)."

Another Negro said: "I wants to claim 'ceptions." "Exceptions? Exemptions, you mean," answered the officer. "Yes, boss, dat's it—exemptions." "Well, have you any dependents?" "Yes, boss." "Who?" "De butcher, de grocer, and de saloon keeper."

A Negro officer was having a desperate time getting his men to turn and march in the right direction.

Finally he called out in accents of anguish, "It's a mighty good thing you all is goin' in de cavalry. De horse'll know which way to turn when you don't!"

"Niggah!" said a captain to an exceptionally stupid though pathetically earnest and willing private, "you is suttinly the biggest bonehead I has evah seen in all mah sperience. I'se done told you all I know an' you doan know nothin'!"

The absurdity and incongruity of having a man commissioned as captain using the language quoted above should be evident to the most unsophisticated. The effect of publishing such ridiculous stuff in Paris, where the Americans flock whenever possible, cannot but be injurious to the morale of the class of soldiers thus made butts of ridicule. It may be good stuff as German propaganda, as the name Schumacher would suggest, but as a means of instilling and cultivating self-respect in the soldiers thus misrepresented it leaves a great deal to be desired.

Mr. Waldo and Mr. Schumacher seem to have entered upon a campaign to arouse race and color prejudice in the face of the enemy.

WORLD WAR MEANS NOTHING TO THEM.

Simple-minded Colored Men From South Carolina Cotton Fields Fit Only to Cut Wood for Camp.

The Richmond Planet

Ashville, N. C., August 31.—They will never return from the war, because they are never going to where the war is—these eleven hundred South Carolina cotton field darkies the Government dressed in uniform and after drilling them a bit sent to Pisgah National Forest near Asheville to cut firewood for Camp Wadsworth. They were culled from the Negro selected men because of mental or physical defects.

In fact, the war is a vague and remote thing to these simple minded, grown up children. Possibly it is only some tale white men have got up for some unknown and devious reason. They were working and they are still working; the only difference being that they have a new set of bosses and a new job. Why should they believe in any war when the only signs they have seen of it are the uniforms?

And the uniforms are not very convincing—quite the contrary. Why, the lodges at home make a heap bigger show; green and scarlet cloth, gold and silver braid; yellow stripes down the pants; gorgeous epaulets and cocked hats with long black feathers. The plain tan colored suits are not much more striking than overalls and they prefer to wear their overalls because then people who come into the forest are more companionable toward them. And they want to be companionable for they are simple and kindly men whose chief aim in life is to loaf and laugh, eat and sleep.

JUST SUITS THEM.

The "soldiers" like their new job pretty well. They have plenty to eat and some one to cook it and do not have the onerous task of thinking for themselves. Their new bosses are "easy marks" some of them dry goods clerks who have lived all their lives in New York far easier for such expert work shirkers to deceive than the cotton field overseers. It is no hard job to slip into the woods and go to sleep or play craps.

But on the other hand they are pestered by senseless regulations. Why do dentists insist on meddling with their teeth when they have no tooth ache? Why do officers want them to take frequent baths? Under threat of extreme punishment, they resisted for several days from drinking river water that flowed down from a camp above but innocently continued to wash their tin cups and plates in the contaminated water. Unless constantly watched they will drink from the most convenient water supply, whether it is a branch or ditch.

TERRORS OF THE WOODS.

Mischievous employees of a lumber company operating in the forest tell these soldiers strange tales of dangers lurking in the lonesome woods. There are stories of rattlesnakes, galore of bears and panthers of the devilish "hoop snake" that can roll faster than an automobile and of a "monstrous bell snake who has a bell attached to its tail. There are "hants" and spectral Indians—Indians make a specialty of killing darkies—and the horrible "donkey devil" that can change from a mule to a man or any other animal in the twinkling of an eye.

The darkies inseparable companions, the mules, several hundred of them are with them, as always. The mules job is supposed to be the hauling of the wood the soldiers cut but as the darkies have so far cut little wood the mules do not do much except eat Government provender. One can detect a camp before he can see it through the woods. The mules are braying, the soldiers singing and laughing and a combination of odors comes from afar

ALL GROW FOND OF THEM

Everybody who meets the soldiers grow fond of them. It may be that there are more simple minded people somewhere but that somewhere is not in this country. One camp of darkies was located in an old field grown up in weeds and the men were so afraid of snakes that their officers told them to cut down the weeds within a wide radius. Going later on to inspect the work of clearing he found the men chopping down weeds with big wood axes. They had been told to have been much easier work to pull up the weeds with their hands, but cut down the weeds and as they had no hoes they used the axes. It would this did not occur to them.

"Would these men fight?" was asked one of their officers."

It all depends on their mood, said he. I don't think bullets would scare them and if they were tired they would go to sleep regardless of bursting shell. But if some one told them the Germans would spit on them and turn them green they would probably want to keep at a distance from the Boche."

Colored Women Served Own Draftees

PORTLAND, ORE. JOURNAL AUGUST 3, 1918

Members of Rosebud Study Club in Charge of Work at Friday's Affair.

By Vella Winner

PORTLAND women play an important part in the success of the draft dinners, which are given from time to time in The Auditorium under the auspices of the war emergency committee, of which Mayor George L. Baker is chairman. Mrs. R. D. Inman is general for the dinners and has under her three majors, Mrs. C. B. Simmons, Mrs. S. M. Blumauer and Mrs. Philip Gevurtz, each of whom has four captains, each with 10 workers, making a large and highly efficient organization.

At the draft dinner given Friday for the colored inductees, a particularly pleasing feature was introduced, the colored women of the city being asked to serve, which they did in a splendid manner. The tables and stage were beautifully decorated under the direction of Mrs. Philip Gevurtz. The serving was in charge of the Rosebud Study club, of which Mrs. Bonnie Bogle is president, with Mrs. Lillian Morrow chairman of the committee. Other members of the club serving were: Mrs. Helen Davis, Mrs. Ruth Flowers, Miss Clifford Freeman, Mrs. Lulu Gragg, Mrs. Emma Stanley, Mrs. Elia Morton, Mrs. Barbara Merriman, Mrs. Emma Allen, Mrs. Jessie Grayson, Mrs. Ethel Isaacs, Mrs. Catherine Lewis, Mrs. Lillian Morrow, Mrs. Lottie Rutherford, Mrs. Bertha Dickerson, Mrs. Anna Payne. Those assisting the club were: Mrs. H. Hicks, Mrs. G. H. Holliday, Mrs. J. Cage, Mrs. E. J. Minor, Mrs. W. H. Lewis, Mrs. B. J. Fuller, Mrs. A. L. Landcaster, Mrs. L. A. Goodwin, Mrs. G. W. Kenny.

This class will teach the theoretical and practical side of the mechanics as well as driving. The first class arranged for by the league is nearly completed and all who are in this course are very enthusiastic about the work and feel that their time has been very profitably spent. The following women are enrolled in this first class: Miss Ida Arneson, Miss Rita Banfield, Miss Bera Carrick, Mrs. E. Cassel, Mrs. Cooley, Mrs. A. V. Dunn, Mrs. Davis, Mrs. Mabel Hansen, Mrs. L. M. Behind the Line

By Wilbur Forrest

ON BOARD SECRETARY BAKER'S SPECIAL TRAIN IN FRANCE, March 13 (By mail).—Secretary of War Baker and General Pershing are both expert narrators of negro stories. Visiting a great port, where large American docks are building, the Secretary and general were much interested in the welfare of enlisted negro workers. Consequently the experiences of the day caused Secretary Baker to relate some of them later at dinner.

"I walked up to a very black negro," said the Secretary, "and asked him if the food was all right. He said: 'Yas, sah, boss, but I ain't quite satisfied with this yer bread.'

"'What's the matter with the bread?'

"'Wal, boss, dey gives all these otha niggahs two and three slices of bread, and me, I can't get ovah one slice, and it's so thin dat when I holds it up to mah eyes I can see de moon rise right through it.'

"This man," continued the Secretary, "was having lunch at the time and I asked him to show me his 'moon-rise' bread. It was at least two incnes thick, and real fine, white, army bread at that."

This story reminded General Pershing, across the table, of a negro who was working some time ago at another French port.

"This fellow," related the general, "insisted on being sent to the hospital to have his head treated. He said there was something the matter with it. He was finally allowed to enter the hospital, where the surgeon questioned him about his malady.

"'Reason I knows they's somethin' mattah wah head is that I'se over here in dis wah—and any niggah dat's ovah here now sho must have somethin' mattah with his head.'"

Then Secretary Baker thought of another one.

"There was a traveller in West Virginia who had occasion to hire a negro driver for a trip.

"'What's your name?' he demanded.

"'Mah name, suh, is George Washington.'

"'That's a very distinguished and well known name.'

"'Yas, suh,' responded the negro; 'I've been a-drivin' 'round these parts now for 'bout thirty years.'"

General Pershing told the last one:

"A negro stevedore working at one of the ports had heard a lot about the submarine warfare. He began to get a little nervous about getting home. He approached one of my officers when he had worried quite a bit and said:

"'Mistah Officer, I wants t' ask eff you'll give me some advice 'bout a very important mattah. What I wants to know is this: Is they any way to get home—walkin', I mean—besides goin' on one of them boats? I'se pos-i-tive-ly worried.'"

And then the dinner conversation drifted to the topic, "How to Speak the French Language."

CHICAGO ILL. NEWS
FEBRUARY 13, 1918

COLORED MEN ABROAD.

THEY ARE WORKING EFFICIENTLY IN FRANCE.

"Could you'all lend a gen'man in need a quatah?"

For five minutes I had been standing on one side of the hospitable Y. M. C. A. stove in a rainy and cold seaport town of France. The fire felt good, for the chill had penetrated to the bone. During five minutes two chocolate brown eyes had stared at me out of a face as black as ebony. The owner of the eyes had on an army slouch hat—which, though recently new, was already wilting, perhaps from much turning between the owner's thumbs—an old blue civil war overcoat with brass buttons and an unbelievably huge pair of army shoes. Evidently the shoes were properly proportioned to the wearer's feet, for he shuffled them with clumsy grace as he put the question to me again, "Could you'all lend a gen'man in need a quatah?"

This time the request was accompanied by such a whole hearted expansive smile that a Scotch banker could not have refused; much less a fellow American.

The negro was a southern soldier in the stevedore regiment which was unloading and loading the American ships coming to this French port.

"Impossible to give you a quarter," I replied, "because I have been in France a long time and all my quarters have been spent, but here is a franc." I handed the stevedore a French local note good for one franc. It was a slip of paper given out by the city as local currency. The man took the worn piece of soiled paper, opened it up and read, "Chambres de Commerce de—— Bon de un Franc." "What's dat thing, un franc?" he asked.

"That's French paper money," I replied. "It's worth about 18 cents. Take it over to that canteen counter and they will sell you something for it."

He sidled up to the counter and purchased the "makings." Soon he was back to his place beside the fire smoking and expanding under the triple influence of the fire, tobacco and somebody to whom to tell his troubles.

"How did you happen to come over here?" I asked.

"Well," he replied, "I was working on a farm in South Carolina when we all were mobbed [mobilized]. Then some men came and took us in a train down to the shore on a dock. There was a big house alongside of that dock and a man said to me, 'Get inside of that house and find yo' place!' So I got inside of the house and we came the ocean over."

"Do you like it here?" I asked.

"Hain't nothin' like Carolina," said the colored man. "But it ain't so bad. Only thing is they don't pay us very often and it's mighty hard to see all them enticin' things go by and no money."

The day following I walked along the docks and watched the stevedores handling casks, crates, sacks, rails and all the rich merchandise that the American ships are bringing to France for both American and French use. Some broken sacks and crates revealed their contents of dried beans and canned meats.

Among a group that was unloading lorries from a big steamer I saw my stevedore of the night previous. He was leading a song which made the work go with a dash. As I paused a moment and watched them a sergeant came up and said, "They are sure fine boys; we can certainly snake the cargo out of a ship with a few of our stevedores. They are hard to beat. The other day that little one there, who is holding the slack of that line, went up to the colonel's office and walked right in. He saw a captain and, putting his hand on the officer's arm to attract his attention, said, 'Scuse me, suh, but where am the big boss?' The captain was somewhat amazed, but he managed to reply: 'I guess you must mean the colonel. He is sitting over there before the rolltop desk.' The man then walked up to the colonel and was greeted with a gruff but cheery, 'What do you want?' 'Boss, can you spare me a dime for some tobacco?' said the stevedore. 'I'm just dying for a smoke.' I think he got his dime."

It was quitting time when I next walked by the groups of workers. They were piling into lorries as many as could stick aboard. Then with much splashing of mud they hurried past the marine who was standing guard and up the hill to their barracks. A French Senegalese soldier, as black as themselves, stood on the corner and watched them meditatively.

NED BRACE SAYS NEGRO TROOPS GIVE MOST OF THE HUMOR FOR A

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN THE FIELD, NOVEMBER 3.—The humor of the American army is largely supplied by the negro troops. Up here at the American front story after story is told about them by the old newspaper men in the service.

There is the story of the negro troops coming across the Atlantic in a transport. A submarine was sighted. The six sharp blasts from the whistle shrilled out and the order was given to the colored troops to fall in on the deck. The negroes stood in line at attention, waiting, silent and scared, while the passengers gathered in the saloon. Then the silence was broken by one big black man in the rear rank who, in a small, quavering voice, asked, "Does any nigger here want to buy a gold watch and chain?"

Then there is the story of the craps-shooting negro in the artillery regiment, whose job it was to feed the shells to the big gun. Each time he drove the shell into the breech and the gun boomed, this ebony artilleryman jumped high in the air and with a characteristic craps-shooting crack of the fingers, shouted, "Count your men, Mr. Kaiser, count your men." Then as another shell was driven home and the gun fired, another jump, another shout of "Count 'em again, Mr. Kaiser, count em again."

There is the story of the Mississippi draft of cotton plantation negroes, brought up from camp by rail to Newport News, and loaded on board the transport about 6 o'clock in the evening, after dark. Next morning when at daylight the troops woke up, the ship was well out to sea, and there was not a sign of land to be seen. One negro soldier who had never seen or heard of the ocean, leaned against the rail and looked awesomely at the vast stretch of water. "Oh, Lawd," he ejaculated, "de levee am bust."

A few days out when the boat began to toss and the waves became mountainous and menacing, a sensick negro soldier looked up to the sky from where he lay on the wet deck miserable and terrified, and groaned, "Oh, Lawd, please make dat ocean come to attenshun."

Still another sea story is about the negro soldier for some reason or another being sent back to America. The boat he left England on was torpedoed and he with others picked up and taken back to England. Again he sailed, and again the boat was sunk and again he was saved and taken back. The third time the ship made the trip all right. As she entered the New York harbor and the Statue of Liberty hove in view, this nigger looked her over from the rail, and said: "Lady, lady, yo' sure do look good to me, but if ever youse wants to see me again, youse will have to turn aroun'."

A negro soldier in the trenches showed up with a new pair of shoes.

"Where did you git dem shoes, nigger?" asked his mate.

"I gotten dese shoes from a Boche" was the reply.

Soon after this the first negro disappeared. He was gone about four hours, but when he reappeared, he had a new pair of shoes for himself, too.

"What kep you so long, nigger?" asked his friend.

"I had to kill 20 of dem Boches befo' I got a pair to fit me," he answered.

A captain to a company of negroes: "Now, I want you fellows to learn this game thoroughly. Suppose our company is holding the line here and the Boche makes a direct charge at us across this field, what would you boys do?"

"Well, captain," came from one member of the company, "We sho would spread the news over France."

On the transport coming over, one negro trooper said to another and very seasick boy, "Look out dere and see dat sail boat."

"Don't you call me for no sail boat, nigger," came from the sick fellow lying with his head on his arms, "don't you call me atall unless you sees a tree."

These are only a few of the hundreds you hear at the front about the negroes. A few negro regiments under white officers in whom they had confidence have done good work in the war. They were the ones who had had long preliminary training. The old negro regiments in the regular army did splendid work. But the newly drafted regiments were utter failures and in several cases had to be taken out of the lines. In one of the fights in the Argonne woods they left their posts and huddled about their white officers and consequently were mowed down in great numbers by Boche machine guns. Their losses here were very great, largely due to their panicky state.

A Kick Against The Herald's Rotten Reference To Colored Soldiers

The Louisville News April 27, 1918

Louisville, Ky., April 22, 1918.

Editor Louisville Herald:

Dear Sir: I am sending you this personal letter to say that the Colored citizens of Louisville resent the very ugly and sarcastic article regarding Colored soldiers at Camp Taylor, taking place in your paper last Sunday. It seems that a few of our daily papers are offering continued insults to our colored soldiers at Camp Taylor. Those Colored soldiers have always been found on the firing line whenever called by their country to do their bit. In spite of the fact that we are being lynched, segregated, jim crowed, etc. No where in the annals of history can the name of a Colored traitor be found. In every battle known to this country, the Colored man has played his part. When the call came to defend this country against Germany, our boys with one accord, stood at attention and answered at roll call.

Why is it that your reporters cannot find some redeeming feature in these Colored boys who stand ready to be transported to France. Your paper is constantly filled with items of interest concerning soldiers of the other race; why play the part of a scavenger when it comes to the Colored soldiers?

A number of these boys have been here ever since the opening of Camp Taylor, yet, it is seldom, if at all, that we ever see one word of commendation.

When this war has been settled and terms of peace have been agreed on, it will be found that the Colored soldier will stand out prominent.

Again, I wish to state that we resent the article in the bitterest terms. We are sending a copy of this letter to weekly papers. Yours very truly,

LEE L. BROWN.

This letter has not been answered by private correspondence nor publication in the Herald.

Negroes Bring Glee to Yankees

Regiment of Stevedores and Laborers Provide Unending Amusement for Pershing's Fighters Behind Lines.

EVENING SUN
MARCH 27, 1918

By THOMAS M. JOHNSON,
Staff Correspondent of THE EVENING SUN.
(Copyright, 1918. All rights reserved.)

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, March 2.—The regiments of negro stevedores and men of all work who have come to France have contributed to the wellbeing of the army more than the product of their toil. They have enriched its humor by the addition of that naive drollness that seems particularly to distinguish their race.

Throughout the American zone, from the sea to the trenches, their white comrades in arms are chuckling over innumerable anecdotes of the newcomers, of which the following are examples:

Just a few days ago the first detachment of negroes reached the American sector northwest of Toul. They were put to work behind the lines, principally at cutting wood and repairing roads. They were well out of harm's way, unless some Boche airplane should drop bombs near them, but they could hear the gunfire plainly and see at night the flashes of cannon or rockets.

They could talk, too, with soldiers just from the trenches. All this made a deep impression.

"I done took out $10,000 of dis yere Guv'ment life insurance," announced one negro to another as they started to work one day.

"What y'all want with all that money?" asked the second.

"Well," said the first, "gettin' pretty riskisome round yere; $10,000 be pretty good t' have if one of them shells should knock a leg offen me."

"Knock leg offen you?" repeated the second. "Why, say, you don't think you'se ever gwine to de trenches, do ye? Don't talk foolish. Uncle Sam ain't gwine risk no ten-thousand dollar nigger in de trenches. He got plenty white soldiers for dat kind of business."

Colored Men With French.

In the French sector adjoining ours there are also colored gentlemen employed—the tall, lanky, coal-black Senegalese from Africa. On the first day that he arrived, an American negro met one of these gentry, clad in faded French horizon blue, standing in front of a little village wine shop. He greeted the Senegalese like a long lost brother.

"Hello dere, nigger," said the American, slapping the tall figure on the back. "How y'all come 'long?"

The Senegalese stared at him blankly.

"Ne comprawn paw," he said, in the French patois all Senegalese speak.

The American negro was flabbergasted. He drew back in amazement.

"My Gawd," he said. "You been over here fightin' so long you done fergit yer own language?"

Here is another negro story, the authenticity of which is vouched for by two army officers and a naval officer. When they were coming over, after the first few days out in the transport, the dark skinned voyagers began to long for a sight of land. One of them in particular, a native son of the sovereign State of Georgia, came to the naval officer the fourth day out. He pointed to all the waste of surrounding water with not a sign of a sail.

"Cap'n, Where Is We At?"

"Cap'n," he asked. "Where is we at?"

"Why, we're out in the Atlantic Ocean," replied the officer.

The next day the same negro presented himself.

"Cap'n," he asked again. "Where is we at?"

The captain told him the ocean was the same.

That night was rough and the passengers lined the rail, given over entirely to their emotions. Next morning a much bedraggled negro appeared before the officer. The sea was still tumbling as far as the eye could reach. Nowhere was there anything but water.

"Cap'n," he asked plaintively, "Where is we at now?"

"Why, we're still on the Atlantic Ocean," said the officer.

The negro's eyes rolled.

"Lordy," he ejaculated, "ain't we done pass that place yit?"

And when the ship finally reached port and the negroes crowded the decks to get a glimpse of the long lost land, some of them got in the way of the sailors and hampered their work of getting the transport safely to her moorings.

"Hey, you nigger," shouted a sailor to one of them who was standing upon some of the machinery," get away from that winch!"

"Winch? winch?" cried the negro. "Where am dat woman?"

THREE NEGROES KILL FIVE GERMANS

Union Farmer 5-7-18

A very interesting feature of this great world war, in which the men of every country are being called upon to make the supreme sacrifice for Democracy, is the absence, except in a very casual way, of any news relating to the part the American Negro is playing in the safeguarding of this same "Democracy."

It is absolutely impossible to glean a single item of interest from the papers of the city, the Nashville Banner and the American and Tennessean, and we suppose this condition exists in all the papers throughout the south, as to just how these Negroes are acquiting themselves. We have been very patriotic as a people, first from a feeling of real patriotism and secondly because we feel that the world would be safe for democracy for one man, will be the world safe for democracy for all men; and yet we have not been sufficiently schooled in preparing for the reception of democracy as to thoroughly appreciate it when it seems to have appeared. We can not concede the fact that probably the war correspondents have become so enthused with the democracy idea that black men and red men and all other men look alike to them when the shells begin to burst and men begin to do valliantly; nor are we prepared for the time when a black man's name can appear in print in a white man's newspaper without the qualifying adjective "Negro or Negress" behind it. We are willing for Democracy to advance a pace, but just now when our sons and brothers are spilling their blood across the seas, we are perfectly willing to read of their deeds of valor and will be proud of the fact if the papers will only casually mention the fact that they are Negroes.

We are reliably informed that the wounded survivors of an Illinois regiment of Negroes sent over at the beginning of the war have been returned to an Atlantic port, blind maimed, legless and armless. This news however has not been as yet forwarded to such leading papers as the home papers, though the men landed some time ago.

We have no doubt of the fact that our men are doing valiantly. Uncle Sam has as a part of the great army of Negroes he has recently sent abroad, representatives of the same class of men, who have been alleged in the past, to have opened fire from flimsy unprotected shacks, on possees numbering as high as twenty or more men (innocent men in legal pursuit of an indicted criminal) whose barbarism, badness and boldness have been emblazoned from one end of this country to the other by the press whose aptness in handling guns is so well known that many of them have been shot dead on the spot, because in an argument with another man, they made a move to their pocket, for either their handkerchief or a chew of tobacco or because it is the characteristic of the average young male animal, white or black, to put his hands in his pocket as he waxes warm in an argument and yet in the news reaching the south, these very same natural warriors are strangely silent and docile in their attitude towards the offending Germans.

We are indebted to the Commercial Daily for an interesting item concerning the conduct of the Negro soldiers in general in France and of the bravery of three Negroes in particular. In the same article we are also enlightened as to the epidermal characteristics of the black man since his transportation abroad. The leading magazines in speaking of the average soldier have often remarked that deeds of brilliancy have been done by the soldiers on French soil for the preservation of their "skins" but in this article printed in the Commercial Daily we learn with chagrin that these three Negroes killed the Germans in the shell hole mentioned to "save their own hides." It is to be regretted that with victory so near, because of the shortage of leather in the German empire the Negroes sent over should develop "hides" because if many of them are killed the German's may be able to remedy the shortage and greatly prolong the struggle.

The story of the three Negroes is as follows: Three Negroes finding themselves cut off from their party in No Man's Land made a dash for their trenches and came near running into a returning German raiding party of many men. They lay quietly till this trouble was past and made a dash for a nearby shell hole only to find it occupied with seven Germans. They retreated and took council among themselves. That shell hole was absolutely necessary for their safety, so they advanced quietly and surprised the Germans killing five. Two escaped. Finally they made it back to their own trenches and reported the matter. Their veracity was questioned and the next night a party was sent out to investigate and found the five dead Germans just as the men had said.

THE NEGRO IN CAMP.

A Member of the Race Thinks He is Singled Out Too Often as Object of Humor.

To the Editor of The Observer:

Please allow space in your valuable paper for the following article:

In one of your recent papers, I noticed an article titled "The Colored Man in the Camp." Several articles of similar nature have been in the papers concerning our colored soldiers. I feel that the purpose for which any soldier is in camp and the shortcomings which might be manifested are altogether too sacred to be an object of humor.

We ought to feel sorry for their ignorance, and, if our sympathy does not run in that direction, we could at least refrain from putting their ignorance on exhibition. This war means as much to the negro as to any other race, nation or people. We may not be able, financially, to support it as such, but every father and mother of a negro soldier boy have done as much as any other father or mother of any race or people; they have lain their all upon the altar of sacrifice, possibly to be consumed by the horrible fumes of the Huns. It cost the negro parents just as much heartache and pain as any other parents.

There are as many humorous happenings among the soldiers of corresponding races, but the negro soldier seems to be the one held up for ridicule and sport.

Our boys in the camps are striving to do their bit and we would censure them if they were not. We consider that soldier brave who stood at his post longer than was necessary. At least he was not a deserter. It is very humiliating to us as a race to see our negro soldiers burlesqued in such a fashion. We that are at home are trying to do our bit by buying thrift stamps, Liberty bonds, observing the various wheatless, meatless and other days.

From this town we have 14 boys in Camp Grant and 10 in Camp Jackson. We feel proud of them. Our hearts are with them, not only them, but every soldier, for we know they are all being trained for a common cause and to fight the same battle. If victory is achieved, it will be as much for one as for all.

On next Thursday, the day which has been set for prayer by our great President, we, as the negro race, through whose prayers our foreparents prayed the shackles of slavery off, mean to pray to God as they did, that democracy might be established and autocracy be forever abolished.

ALBANY NEGRO BOY TELLS OF BIG FIGHT

Corporal Johnson Vividly Describes Killing of 24 Germans.

LOUISVILLE KY COURIER JR
JANUARY 20, 1918

RECOVERS FROM WOUNDS

Insists He Is All Right and Will Not Return Home Until His Company Does.

How Corporal Henry Johnson, Albany's negro hero, together with his "partner," killed and wounded twenty-four Boches during a bit of fighting which made him the fighting idol of the negroes in America, is told in Johnson's own words in a letter sent to America by Corporal J. Rush Norwood, of Sylvia, Kansas, who met Corporal Johnson and heard the negro soldier's own account of the fight. Corporal Norwood's letter, which first appeared in the Hutchinson Kansas News and was later reprinted by the Literary Digest, says, in part:

Corporal Henry Johnson himself, who is convalescant at a near-by base hospital, rather unexpectedly dropped in at the field headquarters of the press section here and very willingly gave a vivid and awesome story of the event. I am going to try to offer it to you as I heard it. Quite contrary to the well-known newspaper phrase, "told his story blushing and stammering as a schoolgirl," Johnson gave a rapid and vivid story, inserting all gestures of the fray.

"Yah must a read all about Johnson and Robinson, shure you did, it was in all de papers.

"Dere's a silver plate right dere (pointing to his left foot), yessir, right dere, they pushed a baynet through ma laig an' shot me in de right arm. Day want to send me home but Ah ain't goin' home. Ah gonna stay here till ma company goes home. I'm a good a man as any of 'em. Dose Germans can't fight.

"'Twas a cloudy an rainy night and me and ma pardner was at this here outpost. Bout two in da mornin' we sees a bunch a Germans comin' at us. Ah figured myself as good as any of em an ah says to ma pardner, we's going to stick right here." he says, "I'm with yah to de end." Instead of treating to our lines we cut loose grenades and fixed way all our ammunishion. Robinson was wounded in da laig at de start and fell to de ground still throwing de grenades at de Huns. Two of 'em tried to carry way ma pardner on a stretcher. Ah took ma rifle, a French gun, just like dis and hit a dude right on de haid and broke the rifle right here.

"Ah went after de dudes carryin' way ma pardner. Ah reached for ma bowie (trench knife), and hit one feller right in de haid. I pulled it out and bout faced all round and give it to nudder in the guts.

"I took ma pardner way from 'em and brought 'em back to de post. Den one of de dudes comes at ma hollering "kumrad." Kumrad, you say, I'm kumrad all right. Ah'll show ye kumrad. Yessah, and den de Germans, what was lef of em, beat it. I bandaged ma pardner with me first-aid kit.

"Den de lootenant comes runnin' in an says, 'Johnson, what's happened?'

"I says, 'It's all over, lootenant.'

"Ah had sixteen automatics and mo stuff piled in front of ma.

"I says, 'Go out dere an count dose dudes.'

"The lootenant takes his pocket light an' looks over the ground and comes back.

"For heaven's sake, Johnson, there's twenty-four of 'em!"

"Yessah, and if dey hadn't a got ma pardner here, dey would a been a lot mo.

"The lootenant says, 'Johnson, are you hurt?'

"Ah says, 'no sah.'

"'Yes, you is' he says, 'look, youse all bloody.'

"Oh, I says, dat's from de dudes.

"Yessah, I figured maself as good a man as any of dem and if dey hadn't got ma pardner we'd a cleaned up."

At this point one of the listeners inquired:

"Johnson, where are you from?"

"I'm from Albany, sah."

"I'm from Albany, too," was the reply.

"Yah ought to know me. I'm Henry Johnson, the boy who used to drive a horse for Hartman's on —— street."

This ended the dramatic offering and Mr. Johnson was warmly congratulated by his attentive audience.

Daily as Corporal Johnson strolls the streets of the village on his convalescent limp he is stopped by both French and Americans who congratulate him and inquire as to his heroic deed. He is becoming a popular character about the place and many await the appearance of his partner, Robinson, to see the pair which scored such an extraordinary win against heavy Germans odds.

RAGTIME QUICKLY CURES SICK NEGRO SOLDIER

He Just Couldn't Stay on His Cot When He Heard It.

PARIS, Dec. 2.—"Jim" was a big black patient in the Red Cross hospital at St. Denis. He was a "mighty sick nigger," as he said, his illness being a combination of machine gun wound in the leg and shell shock. He couldn't even turn over on his cot, much less walk.

But that was before he heard Europe's orchestra. Europe and his famous musicians were in Paris on their way from one assignment to another, for they are more in demand at camps in France than ever they were in New York cabarets. The American Red Cross got permission for them to play at its St. Denis hospital. And you should have heard the boys cheer when syncopated strains from Europe's instruments swelled through the wards!

As for Jim, he not only could move; he could hop, and hop he did, from his cot to a station so close to the big bass drum that the dusky drummer had to cut out some of his customary gyrations.

After it was all over the Red Cross hospital representative from Chattanooga, Tenn., who had arranged the concert, saw Jim sitting on the edge of his cot, an ebony picture of content and comfort.

"Jim, you rascal," she said, "I thought you were so sick?" "Yes'm," replied Jim, "I certainly was a sick man, and my leg troubled me mighty much, but nothing ain't bothered me since I heard that band, no, ma'm."

Next to ice cream nothing makes so big a hit with the boys in the hospital as do the band concerts that are a regular feature of the Red Cross programme in France to make a stay in a hospital as happy as may be for Yank wounded.

Pickaninny's Idea Much Better

(Special Correspondence of the New York Times.)

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE.—Of the two threads out of which this yarn is spun one started in a little village situated about 16 miles inland from Savannah, Ga., and the other started in the office of the German high command in Berlin. In the Georgia village—I don't recall the name of it now—a pickininny developed the idea that the best kind of a dog to chase a rabbit was a long legged dog, and that if a long legged dog could be had with an attenuated nose he was a doubly valuable dog because not only could he be used to chase rabbits with an enviable degree of success, but in addition was the best kind of a dog to root a 'possum out of a hollow stump, where 'possums have a habit of going. In the office of the German high command there developed the idea that a dog, having considerable intelligence, would make a better messenger than a German soldier on the battle field, and also that if a dog had long legs he would be a faster messenger dog than a messenger dog with short legs. Such was and is the acumen of the German intellect.

So the threads of the story started far apart and stretched a long ways back. They have met at a certain point on the French front, where the erstwhile pickaninny is a first class private in the army of his Uncle Samuel, and where a short ways off the German military dogs carry messages back and forth to the boche pill boxes and advanced posts. Abraham (Lincoln) Davis—his pals all call him Ike—has dodged a lot of German bullets and gas grenades. He has killed two boches and hasn't done a thing to make the French think any less of the Americans. Yes, Ike has had considerable excitement since he landed at ——— some months back. Ike has seen lots of things he would never have seen if he hadn't enlisted to the American army. But he hasn't forgotten that the best dog to chase a rabbit is a long legged dog.

Saw Dogs Through Peephole.

Ike hadn't been in the trenches long before he began to hear about the German messenger dogs. Every now and then, through a peephole in the top of his trench, he caught sight of one of the messengers although they generally did their work at night. He developed a respect and an admiration for these dogs, and he could scarcely choke down a fight when a sniper picked off one of the animals. A corporal told him one evening, after chow, something of the training and the great intelligence exhibited by the German messenger dogs and of their bravery, which kept them on their path often in the face of shell fire, and sometimes after they had been wounded. When one of the dogs was brought in after a German raid, Ike made up his mind that he had to have one of those dogs to chase rabbits down in Georgia. I don't believe he realized that he was to have a kennel of them.

It was an evening in early spring when Ike was seated by the edge of a deep French well on the outskirts of a dilapidated little village, where he was billeted during a rest period. Smoking a potbellied cigarette he had made from poor papers and some worse tobacco he saw something leaping along the top of a hill a mile away. A second sight told him it was a fox, and then he forgot about it. The next night and the day after Ike saw the fox, and then there flashed through his mind the remembrance that a dog that chased a rabbit chased a fox when he got a chance. To make this part of the story short, when he went back to the trenches a few days later Ike had the fox, dead.

On the next two or three nights Ike volunteered regularly for patrol duty in No Man's Land. The third night he got permission and took the dead fox with him. The next night he was also on patrol duty. In the section in which he happened to be stationed the German defenses were not well organized trenches, as they are up on this sector, but the Germans were using what they call their "elastic defense;" that is, the first line was weakly held from the standpoint of trenches. The trenches consisted for the most part of scattered shell holes in lines connecting with more or less system a series of pill boxes. It was possible for patrols from the American held lines to penetrate sometimes back to the shell holes and even behind the pillboxes without being detected. As I said, Ike succeeded in making the trip on several such patrols taking his dead fox along, which by this time was getting sweet.

Gets Results at Last.

On the third night after he started patrolling with his dead fox he got results. But let the next part of the story be told by Ike's commanding officer. I wish I could mention his name, but the censorship rules forbid.

"It was along about 4 o'clock in the morning," this officer said, "just after one of our patrols had come in. I remember it was raining slightly. The patrol reported it had encountered no Germans and that things seemed rather quiet. I was about to go away when there was a scrambling underneath our wire and a German messenger dog popped over the edge of the trench and right into the arms of one of our big buck privates named Davis. The dog had a message around his neck directed to one of the pill boxes, telling the gunners there that American patrols were out. I took the message and started to lead the dog away to have my orderly take care of it when Ike begged for it so eagerly that I told him to watch it while I got some sleep.

"I forgot all about the dog and was thinking of home and mother some hours later when one of the lieutenants reported that during the night six other German dogs had come into our trench at about the same place and that Ike had been near enough to grab each one of them, I went to look for Davis and that darkey had those seven dogs corralled in a ready made dugout as neat as you please and was feeding them his own chow and all that he could beg, borrow or steal. I'm darned if I can explain it, but I know that if the gunners had got the instructions those dogs carried all our patrols wouldn't have come back.

"Come on, I'll show you the circus."

He took me 200 yards away and as we mounted a little knoll I saw a big negro hastily completing the job of covering up something he had buried in a hole. He dropped the spade and saluted as his officer came up.

"Private Davis,' said the officer, "show the gentleman those dogs."

"Here they is, Suh," he answered, and lifted a heavy board. Down through the opening were seven lanky dogs with powerful legs and long noses.

"Mistuh," said Davis, "does you-all know any way to git a dawg to God's country? I reckon maybe Kurnel'll give me one of these, and I sho' wants to keep him. I reckon if I git him back to Savanny it'll do. He would make one fine rabbit dawg."

"Yessuh," he said, "I'se got seven already. I reckon maybe I'll git leven. Yessuh, seben and leben, dem's mah lucky numbers."

Negroes Are Serving Bravely and Faithfully in the Conflict For Democracy

By E W LIGHTNER

[Written for The Dispatch]

WHEN I read in The Dispatch the other day the exceedingly entertaining and instructive note from France in regard to the American Negro in that country from Raymond H Coll, himself with the overseas army, I harked back to the days of the Civil War, and before it, to the fiery discussions of the question of Negro slavery, mobbing of abolition orators, sacking of the offices of abolition newspapers, the operation of the fugitive slave law, the battle for free Kansas, all the stirring events which led to secession and so to the war and the emancipation of slaves.

Although, under the operation of the law referred to it was a crime to assist a runaway slave on his or her way to free Canada, the "Underground Railroad," secretly became a real institution. Several routes from the border land of human slavery, with terminals in Maryland, Virginia and along the banks of the Ohio River, were established for guiding, feeding and equiping runaways. Many a burly "buck" did I as a boy steer from our farm in Mercer County to the next station of the trunk line. My father was a non-combatant as to "civilized" warfare. But he looked on a slaveholder, a dealer in human beings, owning them, lashing them, compelling both men and women to surrender to his will in all things, selling them at auction as one would cattle and hogs, selling the men for work and the women often for something worse, as being far below the order of human beings and worthy to be killed as one would kill a vicious or noxious animal or a poisonous snake.

In after years, when a correspondent in Washington, I often heard former slave-owners express a horror of the institution of slavery similar to that felt by my father and all other abolitionists. They had seen a great light.

It was in no way remarkable, therefore, that my parental "non-combatant" should furnish pistol, powder and ball and tell the runaway to kill any who tried to capture him and drag him back to his lord and master and the auction block.

The runaways fared well on their journeying. They were given ample food. They slept securely in straw and hay stacks and barns by day and traveled by night, the distance between stations usually being about an easy night's tramp, everyone of them knowing the North or Polar Star. I don't recall the capture of any runaway on our route though many were pursued and not infrequently inquiries were made of us, but of course we knew nothing, such lies being forgiven as easily as the infraction of the injunction to kill, no qualms of conscience being aroused in either case.

The southern terminal of our line of the "underground" was at Gallipolis, Ohio, on the Ohio River. Possibly it was there that Mrs Stowe's "Eliza" landed when she crossed the Ohio on ice cakes. The master of that station was Rev Samuel McLean, who had been pastor of our Free Presbyterian Church in Clarksville, Mercer County. So deeply was he affected by the woes of the slaves that he gave up a good congregation to remove to a place where he could be in the thick of the fight against the demon slavery and give runaways their first send-off.

A mighty cataclysm had taken place in Western Pennsylvania and Eastern Ohio when the devotion to slavery of factions in nearly all the congregations of the Old School Presbyterian Church, preachers and laymen, became so offensive to the abolition element that there was no living under the same roof of church edifices. Often the differences resulted in body blows. Many of the Old School preachers defended slavery as a biblical teaching, using the frequent word "servant" as meaning slave and vehemently asserting that it was God's word that servants (slaves) should obey their masters "in the flesh" and that slavery was a "divine institution." Preachers generally throughout the South owned slaves and many of those of the church North, willy nilly, must defend their dear southern brethren. I recall a verse from an anti-slavery song book of the day:

Come, saints and sinners, hear me tell
How pious priests whip Jack and Nell,
And preach all sinners down to hell
And sing of heavenly union.

Fine Farm Hands

The war came, Northern brothers fought against Southern brothers by the million, the Negro slaves were emancipated by proclamation of President Lincoln, January 1, 1863. Copperheadism, Knights of the Golden Circleism and incipient Ku Kluxism, sprang up among Northern sympathizers with the Southern cause. We hired several emancipated Kentucky Negroes who had been brought North by the son of a neighbor abolitionist whose seminary in the Blue Grass region had been depleted and closed for the reason that all of the students had enlisted to fight either on one side or the other. Fine farm hands were those same "niggers," as they were called by the Copperhead natives, but we came near being mobbed for employing them as it was an innovation to permit a blackamoor even to work for you —unless he was a slave.

A merry climax of the war came when it was proposed by the powers that were to enlist the Negroes to fight against their masters and their masters' sons. Even some Republicans were shocked at the idea that any fraction of the Union should be saved by "nigger" soldiers. Finally, however, a keynote was sounded by some of the soldiers home on furloughs who proclaimed that they hadn't the least objection to Negroes standing in front of them to be shot possibly instead of themselves, and so came thousands of blacks into the army, all doing fine service.

The Constitutional amendment was adopted declaring that Negroes actually had rights that white men were bound to respect, even to the extent of voting and of being elected to Congress as several of them were in the days of "carpet bagging," when Northern politicians were appointed to rule the South; but, as all the world now knows, so soon as the Southern States were given home rule the State Legislatures vitiated this democratic prescription and the Negroes were nearly all deprived of the right of suffrage. Jim Crow cars were introduced, Jim Crow bars were licensed, Jim Crow schools and Jim Crow churches established. A barbed wire fence was strung between the Negroes and the whites, and if any blackamoor of the South strenously objected, and presumed to cut the wires or jump them he was shot or beaten out of hand without trial or benefit of clergy.

Fine Work at Front

Now, to what extent will Negroes be enlisted to fight the battle for democracy and to wipe out kultur, Kaiser and the Hun? Thousands are gone and going. What will be the effect upon the Negroes of America after the discovery of some hundreds of thousands of them that among the peoples of Europe with whom they are fighting not the least distinction is made on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude? Mr Coll has told us something of their marvelous accomplishments "over there," their vast work—not only in the building of docks and railroads, but at the front, in the trenches, and in vaulting "over the top."

Roughly estimating, there are in the United States at this time 10,250,000 persons of African descent. The census of 1910 enumerated upward of 9,800,000. More than 1,000,000 registered as liable to military service. Estimate of the number emancipated by the immortal proclamation of President Lincoln was a round 4,000,000. Thus is exhibited the prolificnes of the race procreation.

Suppose the exigent time shall come when a full quota, say a million, of Negroes of military service age shall be sent to France; with what new views of democracy will the survivors return to America?

Long previous to the war thousands of blacks from various States of Africa were in France, most especially in Paris, at the universities, in business and in the better ranges of service. Everywhere and by all sorts and conditions of whites they were treated as equals. During several visits to the French Capital I, an American knowing full well the prejudices of whites of this country against the race, was amazed to see the cordial mingling of all phases of the cosmopolitan population of the French capital. Refined white men promenaded the streets with refined black women, and the two races mingled cordially in studies, industries and athletic sports. White and black artists had ateliers in common in the Latin quarter. In England, though Negro men and women were far fewer than in France, the same thorough democracy was constantly in evidence. Many men of both races were associated in business and in industries, and in their social and domestic life there was no distinction. Even the prejudice of old exhibited by the noble Venetian sire of Desdemona against General Othello was not apparent either in France or in England.

The hundreds of thousands of Americans who go overseas to fight gross and savage militarism as well as the "divinity that doth hedge about a king," are told by President Wilson that America is fighting a battle for world democracy. Negroes are essentially American. They are patriotic. If there be slackers or pro-German among them, it has not come within my purview.

New Convictions

Assume that even 500,000 return after deep inhalations "over there' of this atmosphere of real democracy, descendants of former slaves fighting elbow to elbow with descendapts of former masters, what new aspirations, what new aspirations will they fetch with them? It is a pretty thing for contemplation even at this early day of our part in the war.

During the 55 years that have faded away since the immortal proclamation by the immortal President, wonders have been accomplished by the Negroes that seem almost miracles, but the incorporation of the race into the great democracy, especially in the former seceding States, is a pitiable failure. Lynching flourishes more successfully than the franchise, though a splendidly wholesome revolution of sentiment in this field of lawlessness has been evident from the utterances of excellent and progressive newspapers of the South.

Aside from and in spite of this disfranchisement and fostering of antagonistic sentiment, the Negro has forged persistently ahead toward a broader and higher destiny. He is practicing with distinction and honor in all of what are called the "learned professions." He is in every department of business. Thousands have amassed large wealth and millions have such comfort as might well be envied by a great mass of whites. Their higher educational institutions flourish, though it is lamentable to say that the public schools of the South, grovelling under the blight of the "Jim Crow" segregation, fall far short of what their mission should be.

In the South agriculture and its attendant industrial pursuits would have made little progress, discouragingly slow progress, had not the Negro workers of both sexes borne a mighty hand. They have been the great propelling force in rehabilitating the land of the South, worked to a beggarly fertility in slave days and laid waste in many sections by the war. I know from personal observation and absorbing study the pride that the great mass of the Negroes of the South take in tilling the land and in the rich resulting product, and the priceless value of the Negro in this most honorable field of labor was keenly and almost pathetically attested a few years ago when a hegira of the race to the Northern States occurred. A veritable tidal wave of protest by prayers and tears swept over all that part of the pamphlet also contains a record of England's wars against France. As a reward the Germans had the satisfaction of seeing the French soldiers make bonfires of their pamphlets. As the Americans could not read these pamphlets printed in French they were favored with a shower of pictures intended to wipe out impressions of German barbarism. The pamphlets were sent over attached to small balloons, which were timed to burst at the proper moment, thereby letting their burden fall to the ground.

The fact that the Germans have resorted to this form of propaganda at such a critical time is taken by Allied military authorities as indicative of the state of mind of the German militarists, who, when riding on the strong tide of victory, scoff at everything of that nature and declare they shall win by arms alone.

Allied leaders see in this propaganda scheme a strong sign that the Germans are worrying about their long advertised offensive, which they hesitate to make, but which they surely will launch soon, probably against the British, although it is likely that an attempt at a decoy attack will be made elsewhere.

Thrilling Air Combats Aplenty

Thrilling air fights are being carried out over the American sector several times each day and it has now been established as certain that the best German fliers, survivors of the Richthofen circus, have been sent here to terrorize the Americans who, however, refuse to be frightened.

This morning there were two air combats. First, eight Americans attacked 15 Germans at Chateau-Thierry. The battle lasted 10 minutes and the belief is that the Americans vanquished one German. Later a squadron of Americans met another squadron of Germans and this time the Americans certainly elements of the race as though they were representative of the whole body. All were leisurely chewing tobacco and making a target of the otherwise cold and uninteresting stove. It was the actual "tertium quid" with these Southern men learned in the law, an inoperative intermediate between the legal mind and the matter of the physical jaws. Their mastication was vocal, only occasionally sibilant.

Numerous Verdicts

Between frequent moments of exuberant expectoration they proceeded to variously dispose of the Negro problem. They had given innumerable similar verdicts, but the problem always loomed somberly over some new horizon and had to be settled all over again. Finally, when a lull came in the voluble exegeses, and there was yet no sonorous summons to breakfast, I ventured to quietly break in:

"If you will pardon me, gentlemen, I have just ended a delightful two hours in your city market. I saw there all things in profusion that could delight the palate of even an Epicurus. The volume of it would furnish more than a feast for Gargantua. It was produced and brought to you by the people you call 'niggers.' Not a white was in the market with exception of the beifers and oxen and persons who came to buy for the domestic table, and 'nigger' servants performed most of even this delightful duty. Eliminating the 'nigger,' what would we have for breakfast? Sowbelly and corn pone and doubtful coffee."

There was profound silence for a few moments. The allusion to classical figures may have been stunning. Then a great lawyer from Georgia, who had not hitherto opened his mouth, remarked with quiet satire and evident relish:

"I think he's got you, my learned brothers!"

And then, at the call of a big bell we all went merrily to a breakfast which was fully "a feast of fat things and of wine of the lees well refined."

OUR NEGRO TROOPS.

With reports of the past week of Southern mobs lynching negroes without recourse to law and such an utter disregard to the common humanities as to permit the Huns to fling into our faces the charge we Americans evidence true barbarity, we learn of the heroic fighting of some of our negro troops abroad, two of them receiving the medal of honor.

It all evidences the fact that when it comes to bravery and heroism the American negro is to be reckoned with. We have already learned how they have deported themselves on their arrival in France, how they have won the admiration of the military men and how they have shown beyond any question of doubt they do not posess the yellow streak. And as time goes on we will learn more of these troops and learn to admire their dash and alertness and natural propensity to give a good account of themselves.

Such valiant soldiers as these must of necessity be a stimulus to the leaders of the race who are struggling, with great encouragement in recent years, to raise their fellow Afro-Americans to a high state of citizenship. We in the North do not comprehend the vast limitations of the negro born and raised in the South where there is yet that racial prejudice that manifests itself occasionally in the lawless mobs. Nor is it to be wondered that many of the negroes who come from the South and settle among us are a bit wild because they have never heard of the word opportunity. White men brought them here several centuries ago and it is up to the white men to help them arise to higher estates.

But the brave negro soldiers doing their part in the great war every bit as unselfishly as their white brothers in arms will do much to wipe out the [illegible] and inexcusable prejudice.

TRAINING NEGRO TROOPS

The Atlanta Constitution has a timely and carefully considered editorial on the training of colored recruits of the national army. It refers to the announcement of the secretary of war that the colored troops are to be apportioned among the various cantonments approximately one regiment to each camp and distributed as uniformly as possible, and says that now it is settled definitely that a certain complement of colored recruits is to be a fixture at practically every cantonment what was once a problem becomes a condition which must be met as it exists.

First of all, the people of every training camp and of every community near a training camp must charge their minds with the facts that the negro troops have got to be mobilized and trained and that those troops are not entering the service thru voluntary impulse but are in it only in obedience to the law. Therefore the main question is that of getting out of the negro the best there is in him instead of the worst. In the development of that question, says the Constitution, lies very largely the peace and happiness, primarily, of a tremendous element of the black people of the South and the citizenry of the country as a whole, both North and South.

The Constitution urges that two or three elemental facts be kept under consideration. The first of these facts is that the negro has a "best side," which was fully demonstrated by his unparalleled conduct during the civil war. Says the Constitution on this point:

That war probably afforded the only instance in the history of the world when a race stood loyally and heroically back of the women and children while its masters were out fighting to keep it in slavery. The world's history does not recount a better display of loyalty on the part of any race or any people. Throughout the four years of the civil war there was never an assault, nor an attack, nor a betrayal of the trust reposed in the negroes. On the other hand, they stood as sentinels and guards over the helpless families of their masters under arms. No citizen ever stood guard with more trustworthy fidelity.

That is the "best side' of the negro, which we should remember today.

Another trait of the negro to be kept in view is that which instinctively induces him to shield those of his race who commit crime. Negroes not only shield criminals of their race, but take as race antagonism the dealings on the part of the courts and law officers with admitted transgressors of the law. The Constitution says that unquestionably liquor, dissolute negro women and perhaps rough treatment by white officers of the law at Houston were the main elements leading up to what turned into rioting, anarchy and tragedy. But the killings were directly brought about because the negroes of the regiment involved took it upon themselves to redress a fancied race grievance in the arrest of a few transgressors of the law.

The Constitution points out that the colored troops at Atlanta and elsewhere must be impress with the fact that local conditions, sentiments, customs, etc., must be recognized and met and their leaders should impress upon them the fact that they should do their part toward respecting those conditions. It must be kept in mind, too, that there is an equal obligation on the other side which can be express in the simple statement that in dealing with the colored troops the white people must be fair and just. "In other words,' says the Constitution, "if negroes and whites alike are impress with the fact that we are going to demand and give fair treatment, we will have gone a long way toward solving what has proved a mean problem."

GALESBURG ILL REGISTER
MAY 8, 1918

OPEN LETTER.

I wish to state that not only the relatives of the eight select colored men resent the article published in The Evening Mail, on April 30th, but also the entire Negro population of Galesburg. The person who wrote that (he must be the editor of the comic section), made a grave mistake. Our little friends, Hanz and Fritz Katzenjammer, are the most audacious of our comic acquaintances, but they have never so lost their dignity or have been so unpatriotic as to ridicule anybody or anything connected with the war and doings of the Government, and they are little German lads. It has long been the custom of the Evening Mail to write up Negroes as Willy Wonders, Hindoo Mysteries, in fact anything short of real human beings.

Little attention has been paid before to these articles because we have considered the source, but this article was a grave insult to our patriotism. I wish to ask a few questions and shall make no reply but shall leave every individual reader to form his own reply: Does it show patriotism for a newspaper to publish any article to stir up race hatred and resentment when Uncle Sam needs all of his citizens, black or white, to answer to his call? What would you call a paper that would publish an article that would be useful to German agents to incite disloyalty to the Government among the Negro masses? This article ridiculed the Negro going to fight for Democracy and naturally we resent this, the same as any other race. Did not those eight boys make the same sacrifice by going to face the same danger of disease and German bullets as did the white boys who left a few hours later? If this is true, why is not the same amount of respect due them as was paid to their white comrads? What encouragement does this article give to the other boys who are awaiting their country's call and to the sixteen Galesburg Negro boys, now in France? Does it raise their morale? Did this article represent the intelligent and fair minded white people of Galesburg? Would this paper, going to other communities of this country, voice the spirit of the citizens of a city noted for its school houses, colleges and churches? Will this ridiculous article enthuse the Negro to help the Red Cross—appreciate the four minute men's speeches—buy more Liberty bonds and Thrift Stamps? The paper spoke of their toes being turned toward Berlin. Could any soldier get there with his toes turned away? Has Uncle Sam been training his soldiers to walk backwards? Is it an impossibility for the Negro to arrive in Berlin? Has not the Negro had a part in every victorious battle that America has fought? Did the writer in his ignorance of American history or his endeavor to be "overly funny," overlook the fact that the first blood shed for American liberty was that of Crispus Attucks, a runaway slave boy, on Boston Commons? Five thousand Negroes fought in the Revolutionary war. They were with Jackson at New Orleans and in the Indian wars. There is no record of the Negro soldier showing his heel in the Civil war, Spanish-American and his toes surely were pointed toward Carrizal. The grand sons of Petersburg and the sons of San Juan Hill are no less brave than their forefathers and if they live up to their record as fighters, their toes will not only point toward Berlin, but will be inside of the city limits.

This article will not erase from the pages of history the splendid record of the Negro soldier for bravery and unspotted loyalty, under whatever flag they have fought. It will not prevent the other boys from cheerfully answering their country's call nor the men and women from doing not only their "bit" but their "best" and will not make a Benedict Arnold out of any of our boys. Nor prevent the same crowd that saw them off, from welcoming them back when they return, victorious. Thanks to a God who knows no difference between race or color. It will not prevent the Black boys in khaki who fall on the battlefield, beside their white brother in khaki from going "Over the Top" into the "City Four Square," and side by side opening his eyes:

Into the smiling face of Jesus,
The Ruler of us all,
He has helped to take a despot from his throne;
As a reward to a Hero,
Faithful and true to the last.
Beside his white comrad,
In mansion eternal,
He will find rest,
For his warfare is past.

THE NEGRO SOLDIER

The Union League Club, in New York, has a custom of presenting regimental flags to colored soldiers. The other day this club, through the medium of Governor Whitman, gave an American flag to the 367th Infantry, national army. In this regiment there are 3,000 negro soldiers, headed by Colonel James A. Mo[illegible] who has been commanding negro troo[illegible] for eighteen years.

There was something of a religious fervor in the words of Governor Whitman when he presented the flag. "I charge you," he solmnly said, "by all that is sacred to defend this banner with all the strength and power that God has given you. * * * Go forth and fight for the cause of humanity as those other colored patriots have done, but when you return from the forts, the trenches, the camps, the march, the battle line, bring this flag back with you without one stripe dishonored, one star obscured. Bring it back victorious."

And then those 3,000 negro soldiers—their own band playing the accompaniment—sang "The Star-Spangled Banner." Those who heard the great anthem swell forth from 3,000 throats declare that never before in Gotham's history was there such a volume of patriotic music and never before was the song so fervently sung.

There is nothing much out of the ordinary in this occurrence except that it illustrates America. Americanism is something that can not be defined by race, or creed or color. In truth it is a state of mind. Consequently these negroes are the same kind of Americans as the soldiers whose skins are white. When the time of trial comes and blood is spilled the veins of these black fighting men will pour forth blood as readily as that spilled by the other races of the world. In the great conflict now raging, the American negro has been willing to do his share. The men who officer the black regiments speak in the highest praise of their soldierly qualities. In the breast of every man in the 367th there must have been a fierce pride when the flag was presented. And there is every reason to believe that when the banner does return it will come back without the slightest taint of cowardice or dishonor.

THE NEGRO AND THE WAR

The colored people are rallying to the call of patriotism all over the country. They are giving their sons, their money, and their energies to the task of mobilizing the Nation for the cause of democracy. For the Negro holds his citizenship high. The friends of the United States are his friends. Its foes are his foes.

The United States draws no color line in the Army and Navy. It summons Negroes to arms just as it does whites. More than 700,000 men of color registered, and already 100,000 of these have been called to the training camps to fit themselves for service.

Thirty-six per cent of all the Negroes examined were certified as physically fit for the National Army, a ratio higher than the whites can show. In 16 cantonments scattered throughout the Northern and Southern States the dusky troops are being prepared to meet the Hun.

In the old Regular Army of the pre-war days were four colored regiments—the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Infantry and the Ninth and Tenth Cavalry. These troops proved their value in Cuba during the Spanish-American War, just as they did in the Indian campaigns on the border. They are notably steady under fire, patient to endure hardship, cheerful and good-natured at all times. And they can fight.

The War Department has organized a division of colored troops, known as the Ninety-second. To lead these men 750 colored officers were commissioned after a course of training at Fort Dodge, Iowa. Already a number of Negro chaplains have been named to serve with these and more are soon to be appointed. Three regiments of Artillery have been formed and a school for Signal Corps training has been organized. Howard University, an instituion for colored people in Washington, D. C., will be kept open this summer to supply technical training to promising men of that race. At least 150 Negroes are engaged in Y. M. C. A. work in the Army. Some of these are now in France with the troops serving under General Pershing.

Back of the actual fighting army is the army of civilians at home. The Negroes of the country have joined in every activity that evinces a spirit of patriotism. They show a wholehearted desire to take their full share of the war load. They support the principles which President Wilson has defined for us, and they assume cheerfully the burden laid upon the country as a whole.

NEGRO SOLDIERS.

The trial in Oklahoma of a Negro army officer for refusing to submit to the enforcement of the "Jim Crow" law when he was traveling under army orders on public business calls attention to the services the colored citizens of the nation are rendering in connection with the war. There is no color line in the army and the navy, and it may safely be concluded that there will be none in the trenches facing the Hun.

More than 700,000 Negroes have been registered under the draft act and already 100,000 of these have been enrolled in the various training camps. Thirty-six per cent of all the Negroes examined were found physically fit for service, which is a better showing than among the white registrants.

Official reports disclose that the War Department has organized a division of colored troops, known as the Ninety-second. To lead these men 750 colored officers were commissioned after a course of training at Fort Dodge, Iowa. Three regiments of artillery have been formed and a school for signal corps training has been organized. Howard University, an institution for colored people in Washington, will be kept open this summer to supply technical training for men of the race.

It has been proved beyond dispute that the Negro can fight. Under the old Regular Army organization there were four Negro regiments. They proved their worth in Cuba during the Spanish-American war. Negro troops are steady under fire, patient under hardships and nearly always good-natured—admirable traits of the effective soldier.

Negro troops are in France now and participating in the work of holding the enemy. They will be in the game to the finish and may be depended upon to do their part in upholding the best military traditions and the credit of their country.

War of Some Benefit.

Camp life is likely to give Southern negroes a good deal of educational experience that they might not get any other way—this in addition to the physical benefit derived from military training.

For example, they will learn sanitary laws, of which most of them know nothing. They will learn the importance of cleanliness and fresh air and how to take care of themselves. They will have the example of their officers in the matter of deportment and no one is quicker than the negro to recognize the laws of courtesy and polite customs and to model himself accordingly. He is not likely to select the wrong examples among his white associates.

Arrangements are being made for special care and entertainment for negro troops. Amusements, entertainments and schools are being planned for their particular benefit, and the Rockefeller foundation has appropriated $25,000 for the purpose of establishing a "typical war community" of the kind suggested. After this has been organized it is expected that it will be used as a model and that other agencies, such as the medical departments of the army and navy, the state and federal health services, the Red Cross and Y. M. C. A. and other organizations, will co-operate in the work. A considerable fund is already available.

The evils of war are very evident, but some good will come out of it in addition to preventing the country from being overrun by the Huns, and the shaking up of the community that puts men, both black and white, into a new environment that must give a fresh and broader outlook on life will be one benefit. Even the stay-at-homes are getting a new light on the world and discovering duties and responsibilities of which they had never dreamed.

Negro Troops Fight Well

It is not only the marines who are fighting well on the French front. Owing to a relaxation of the censorship we are getting some information as to our units in the fighting. It is known that the Rainbow Division of National Guard troops, composed of regiments from various States, has been heavily engaged as disclosed by casualty lists. It is further known that some of the old Regular Army colored regiments have been fighting and have acquitted themselves well. Early this spring two colored soldiers were decorated by the French Government, which has not the slightest prejudice in the matter of color, since it has used many thousands of African troops from Tunis and Algiers.

This city has sent a large number of colored men to camp, mostly in National Army units, but there are many who have enlisted in the regulars. A considerable number of young colored men from this city studied at Des Moines last summer and have received commissions. The total number of colored men in this country eligible for military service has been estimated at nearly a million.

The point to be made is that the colored troops so far have done as well as their white brethren. It is true that it is the seasoned troops only who have been tested, but there is no reason to doubt that the drafted men will fight equally well when their turn comes. It is not so much courage as discipline which counts in an army, and colored troops have shown themselves amenable to discipline save in a few deplorable instances in the South, which need not be recalled.

It is not an inspiring thought that these colored men who go from most of the Southern States to fight for their country are deprived of their rights as citizens. They can fight, but may not vote save in exceptional instances. It is possible that negro valor in action will produce a reaction in the South in favor of justice. This may be unduly optimistic, but just now it is about the only hope that the negro has for securing his Constitutional rights.

WITH POOR GRACE.

"Southern politicians, whose stock in trade is keeping race prejudice alive," says The Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat and Chronicle in an editorial, "ought to feel the sting of conscience when they read the record of the negro race in the south in the great war."

This record, The Democrat goes on to say, is that "the race played its part in the actual fighting. . . but it did more than that. An important role in maintaining order and tranquility here at home was thrust upon it unexpectedly through the folly of German propagandists."

Which is true; and that the negro measured up fully to his duty is all to his credit.

Our Rochester contemporary, in proof of the negro's loyalty to the American flag, quotes the statement of A. Bruce Bielaski, chief of the bureau of investigation of the department of justice, before the senate committee investigating German activities in this country, that "money spent in the south for propaganda was thrown away," and that "the negroes didn't take to these stories ('weird stories,' says The Democrat, that 'were circulated among the ignorant among the negroes, in the hope of stirring up 'trouble,' as they were too loyal."

Which, again, every resident of the south knows to be true.

The Rochester Democrat utterly spoils the otherwise good effect of its deserved compliment to the negro race not only by its display of sectional animus in its sneering allusion to "southern politicians," but by tacking on this unjust, unfair, untruthful and plainly biased statement in conclusion:

This affair should serve both as a rebuke and a warning to southerners—a rebuke for the timit fears that the presence of the negro in the south is a standing menace to the security of the white race, and a warning that keeping the negroes in ignorance and withholding from them the means of education will make them an object of attack by the disloyal agitator in time of national peril.

Even were The Democrat's implied charge against the "white race" in the south merited—and The Constitution emphatically denies that it is—it would be coming in mighty poor grace from the manufacturing center of Rochester, N. Y., where, we are reliably informed, negroes as a class are refused employment and an opportunity to earn a living in its factories!

Everywhere in the south the negro is given the same opportunities to earn a livelihood and support his family as those enjoyed by the white race.

In East St. Louis, Ill., recently, hundreds of negroes were shot down in the streets and thousands were clubbed out of town, simply for attempting to exercise their right to work for a living!

Such criticism as that of The Rochester Democrat loses its point when the fact is taken into consideration that the factory doors of that city are closed to the race against which the south is falsely charged with discrimination.

THE NEGRO'S HOUR.

KANSAS CITY MO STAR

From time to time in The Express have appeared articles descriptive of the negro as a soldier in training at Camp Travis. The "Singing Battalion" of the 509th Engineers, were locally best known because of their picturesque participation in "singfests." Once heard, these 600 melodious voices were not easily forgotten in the cotton patch songs so dear to the negro heart. The white officers of the battalion declared that, good as they were as singers, they were even better as soldiers.

Of interest, therefore, to San Antonio and other cities where training camps for the National Army have negro troops, is the appointment by the War Department of a committee of sixty negro Americans, chosen as representatives of negro thought and opinion, whose duty it will be to enlighten negro public opinion and consolidate the race behind the Government in the prosecution of the war.

This is the negro's great opportunity to show the world his Americanism. If the leaders, as represented on the committee, take full advantage of the pathway opened, it can only result in an enlightenment and a most creditable showing of the advancement of the negro race in the past fifty years. The negro has proved himself before this a daring soldier. The exploit of a negro regiment in Cuba is a part of history. But the negro has more in him than being a tractable soldier or fearless fighter when the tang of powder burns his nostrils. Education, surely, has accomplished much.

No city in the United States has done more for its negro population in this respect than has San Antonio, because the negro's best friend, George W. Brackenridge, has been a consistent helper along lines of the progressive training for negro citizens, and his firm belief, backed by his generosity, has turned out hundreds of fine examples of the educated negro who, no doubt, will have a place in correlated work with the War Department's National Committee.

Not only among the negroes in the army camps is this work to be confined, but throughout the country, generally, there will be a broad covering of the duties of the negro as a citizen at a time when every man, woman and child should be enlisted in the work of winning the war. It is, to a great extent, the negro's hour in his opportunity to present, through important service, intelligently rendered, the proof that he is entitled to recognition as a patriotic and dependable citizenship that, now and in the future, must be reckoned with.

The Negro Soldier.

We note in the News column of a newspaper that the word "nigger," as applied to our negro friends, will pass out of use. They are doing too valiant duty at the front to have this opprobrious epithet hang to them forever. Their valor in battle has earned for them the highest claim of American citizenship. Men who offer their lives in defense of humanity and the old flag must not be called niggers after this, especially in the low sense in which ignorance and prejudice uses it. There may be a difference in race, but when it comes to justice, that equally applies to all men of all races, and all Americans after this war will recognize that fact. Whenever he rushes to the cannon's mouth in defense of his fellow men he is entitled to all the full honors of manhood. That is what the negro is doing now by the side of his white brother over at the front. People who have seen this done are loud in their praise of the negro. His devotion and sacrifice are equal to any man's, and he should receive the honor of a man for it.—Ohio State Journal.

MEN AND BROTHERS ALL

William S. McNutt tells a very striking and heartening story in Collier's.

In one National Army unit at Camp Lee there were sixteen hundred negroes, selected from West Virginia. Ten days after they arrived in camp, the call came to them to go immediately to France for special service. The general in command knew that these men had not expected to have to go for several months at least, so he called for volunteers from the five thousand other negro selected men in the camp to fill up the vacancies if some of the sixteen hundred did not want to go so soon.

Every one of the five thousand volunteered for immediate overseas service!

The sixteen hundred were marched to a hall, told of the order, and informed that there were volunteers to take the place of any who preferred to remain behind. Only 20 per cent of the sixteen hundred decided to stay.

"When the general came from the stage on his way out these newly drafted negroes, facing active service in the war zone within less than two weeks after having broken their civilian ties, started to sing "America." As the general went down the aisle the singing grew to a harmonious uproar of affirmation. The thing was absolutely spontaneous. They had not been coached. It was a spontaneous expression of sentiment in the face of danger. * * *

"Come with me to the officers' mess hall the next day. There is a shout outside: Hey! 'Look what's coming!' We step outside. Down the road, thump, thump, thump, thump, comes that same battalion of negro soldiers in full marching order. These soldiers from the mills and cottonfields are on their way to France. The whole camp knows it; the whole camp is grave, quiet. Thump, thump, thump, thump! There is no sound in all that great cantonment save the beat of marching feet and the creaking of packs. The black men know that they are on their way abroad. They are a solemn looking lot. A minister steps out to the edge of the embankment overlooking the road down which the troops are marching, and calls out shakily: "Good-by, boys. God bless you. God take care of you, boys!'

"There is an uprolling of eyes and a shaky chorus of voices in answer: 'Thanky, suh. Thanky, kindly. Thanky, parson. Thanky, suh.'

"A big Mississippian, standing near, swore growling under his breath, gulped, and cried: 'I'm done talking against niggers,' he declared huskily. 'Those boys have been damn fine soldiers here, an' if they ever get back from France, I'm big enough to lick any man who don't give 'em a square deal!'

"Silence but for the shuffle and thump of booted feet on the roadway. The rollicking syncopated songs of yesterday were forgotten. A soft, drawling, quavery voice from somewhere in the ranks began the hymn: 'Will There Be Any Stars in My Crown?' Others took it up, and to the words and music of the old church song those black boys tramped their solemn way out of camp to put their bodies to the chance of war on a foreign soil."

Loyalty, patriotism, courage, devotion—none of the finer qualities of the human heart are determined by the color of a man's skin. There are white souls in black bodies, and black souls in white bodies.

We shall get something out of this war—something besides peace and liberty and a world safe for democracy.

We shall get neighborliness and national unity when men from all states, men of all creeds and all races, fight shoulder to shoulder at Armageddon.

We shall get a breaking down of boundaries between nations and peoples that have fought shoulder to shoulder for the right, and we shall get that much gain toward a world community under the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man.

And we shall get, please God, this great thing: that after this war has worked its changes, we shall hear more about MEN and less about kinds and colors of men. Bars of color and creed and race will be broken down, and a new brotherhood of man will be knit of the heroes of those who have toiled and fought side by side, sealed with the mingled blood of the slain.—Duluth Herald.

Negroes in the Army

At the army headquarters here of Major General J. F. Morrison, the subject of the part the American negro is playing in the great war came up, and the information was given that for the first time in the history of American army practice, negroes are commissioned officers. One is a major in the Ninth cavalry of regulars and about 650 other negro officers are captains and first and second lieutenants. In addition to these negro line officers there are 225 negro medical and dental officers, implying collegiate educations. And between 100 and 150 of the 650 line officers are college trained men, while 200 of them came up from the ranks in the college of army experience and were promoted for demonstrated military merit and ability. Generally the negro soldiers are fine physical specimens of greater than average American physique.

Kipling said the fuzzy-wuzzy was a first-class fighting man. He referred to the wild black fighter of Africa after a lot of them broke the British square

The United States has between 10,000,000 and 12,000,000 of that original fuzzy-wuzzy stock, enlarged in physique and improved in mentality after a century of development among the white populations.

There are six colleges and institutes regularly educating more than 3000 negroes of the southern states, and scores of exceptional negroes are to be found as students in half a hundred of the larger universities and colleges of the country.

There are wonderful negro athletes in and outside the colleges. And there have been and could yet be, many great American negro professional pugilists. All of which indicates modern mental development and even improved modern physical prowess for the negro race, as represented by fully 10 per cent of the continental population of the United States.

During the years of a small regular army in the United States there were two famous negro fighting regiments of cavalry, and later also two negro regiments of infantry. These negroes fought with distinction in Cuba and in the Philippines and also in western Indian campaigns, and more recently did border patrol duty along the Mexican frontier. When the United States entered the big war she had 7000 negro troops in the regular army, 7000 negroes volunteered for the national guard army, and 29,000 negro troops volunteered for the new national army, all before the national conscription was forced.

In addition to the expansion of the regular army by enlistment and the new national army by volunteers the country has drafted for national army service a total of 1,595,708 men who are either already in the service or will be in training camps by the end of this month.

Of the total number of actually drafted soldiers by the end of July there will be 142,794 negro troops in the national army plus 43,000 negroes in the regular service and as volunteers, or approximately 186,000 negroes in the army service.

The Negro women of the National Association of Colored Women placed twenty thousand workers in the field for the Fourth Liberty Loan campaign, and raised millions of dollars in bond sales. Then they said: "We ask Mr. McAdoo that when we are doing his bidding and working to secure funds for our country to prosecute the war, we shall not be forced to ride in filthy Jim Crow cars." Reasonable.

A LITTLE SKETCH FOR WALLS OF HISTORY.

Editor of The Journal:

Dear Sir—In that beautiful and modest tribute of "Student" to our distinguished friend, Judge Dustin, I was impressed that the writer must telepathically—all unconsciously, of course—have been reading my mind. Along exactly the same lines had I been thinking of our cosmopolitan friend of whom we are all proud. His liberality of sentiment, his breadth of view, his absolute want of prejudice against all hateful distinctions of race and rank—rightfully inherited, faithfully followed from a revered father in the gospel ministry of the ante-war, anti-slavery days, were all in my thought. The fine, simple, soulful description of "Student" fitted in synchronously and blended with all I had in mind, for I knew father and son, and that noble uncle who died near me at Antietam in the country's defense. I mean Colonel Clark, commanding the Thirty-sixth Ohio on that fateful day. Nor was forgotten the brother of Judge Dustin, who was wounded near me there. Oh, I knew the whole family with an escutcheon without stain. Now, why do I say all this? It was a strange coincidence. All morning I had seen the long lines of brave black American boys string down to the war with their fair brothers. Not without a throb and a tear had I been striving to do the impossible, forecast in verse, the vision yet unrevealed of "When Our Colored Boys Come Back.'

My heart was too full for my pen. Faithful in all wars for the flag. Shall they come back with their white comrades and Old Glory glorified anew, to be ostracised as pariahs and serfs, or as equal fellow citizens? In all the past they have been discriminated against. Race prejudice, the bull-whip, the murderous lynchings, the disregard of sacred family ties, denial of the free ballot, the Jim Crow car, the Grandfather laws. Oh, what accursed discrimination! When they shall come back shall they share all that their fathers shared?

I looked across the sea and saw streams of blood., not white, not black, but red and true American, running down in rich libations, and the angels could not tell on stricken fields which was the blood of the colored man or of the white.

True, brave, loyal, there they stood, fought and fell beside beloved and trusted white men—now what shall be their reception in America when war ends?

I want to know. They are fighting for democracy to reign throughout the world as for them it never has reigned in America. They have more at stake than any white soldier has—their liberties, never yet acknowledged in America. I want to know. They want to know. "The world safe for democracy"—will it be safe for the negro here in America when our colored troops come home? Can you tell me? Oh, how I wish to know!

LOYALTY OF THE NEGRO.

When the possible intervention of the United States in the European war was discussed, we recall with what amusement some of the theories put forth in Germany were received in this country. One of these theories, advanced in ponderous style by some Herr Professor, was the declaration that war would be a signal for negro uprisings in the South and that most of the country's meager military resources would be required to put this uprising down.

No such apprehension ever crossed the mind of any American. The reason is that the negro is not what the Germans conceived him to be, an alien race in an unfriendly country. He is a part and parcel of the nation, as much concerned in its welfare as the white man and as ready to rise to its defense.

Instead of springing at his white neighbor's throat when war was declared, as the German savant predicted, the negro sprang to arms in support of the Government. A war correspondent wrote that the first troops to raise the Stars and Stripes above the firing line in France was a regiment of negro regulars.

The conduct of the negro people at home has been not only exemplary, but in the highest sense praiseworthy. They have responded to every call, and to every cause connected with the war promptly and generously. They have sent full quotas into the army and it is no secret that the negro makes a splendid soldier. There has been no friction between negro commissioned officers and white soldiers, largely because the negroes have so conducted themselves that they have won the favorable opinion of military and civilian alike.

The negroes of St. Louis will have a loyalty parade and mass meeting at the Coliseum to-night. They call attention to their record of patriotic achievement, not in a boastful spirit, but as a pledge of what they hope to accomplish. Having but a few generations ago come out of slavery themselves, they can sympathize with the down-trodden and king-ruled races of Europe, for whose liberation the war is being fought.

"NEGROES" ARE "OUR BOYS" TOO.

Attention has been called to the fact that we have a "codfish" aristocracy here in the north, quite as "snobbish" as that of the south, as regards the Negro. It is reported that when our "selectmen" go away to war the crowds along the curb cheer the white boys just as they should, but seem to think when the colored troops go by that it is a great joke. It ought not be so. Gen. Pershing has reported back from France that our colored troops "over there" are among the best of our fighters, and are doing their full share to "help win the war."

Indeed, it is bad taste here in the north especially, to smile or sneer at colored soldiers. They are Americans, not by choice, but by forced importation, and freemen at the expense of six hundred thousand white lives. In the south the Negro is regarded as of an inferior race, which perhaps he is, but the south seldom discounts his value in the right place. Any soldier that wears the khaki, or is going to wear it, ought to be above the sneers of any "home bird," male or female, and this regardless of "race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

Our interest in that war over in Europe is American, not Caucasian or Ethiopian.

"Niggers" and "Savages."

The language of the hard-pressed Teuton has become more unrestrained of late. It seems to betray an anger due to ill-success. Indeed, apparently he is getting "rattled."

The presence of negro and Indian soldiers among the American troops gives the German one opportunity of venting such spite as can be expressed in words, and he resorts at once and, it would seem, with delight to terms of contempt. Incidentally, or perhaps primarily he wants to give the negroes in America the impression that the colored troops are pushed into the front line where they will get the hottest fire and stand the brunt of the fight. Of course this is not true, but even if it were, it is not certain that the negro troops would not feel honored by being put in the post of greatest danger. Perhaps the German has not thought of that. Perhaps he is not aware that the negro troops in France have won their full proportional share of war crosses, but he probably is aware that Colonel Bill Hayward's colored brigade is right in the thick of the present fighting and is giving as good an account of itself as any of the white regiments.

It was the trick the German attempted with the Senegalese and Moroccans among the French troops and the East Indians that are in the British armies. But it has not worked. The Senegalese and the Sikhs are well satisfied and continue to fight loyally under their national banners. It will be the same with the American colored troops, whom the German seeks to reproach by calling them "niggers."

The Indians have met and joined each other behind the allied lines—the East Indian and the American Indian. The German writer's reference to "savages," and the implied reproach that they should be in the armies of a civilized power is laughable. Even if the term "savages" were a proper designation, it would be a case of the pot calling the kettle black, for all the savagery of savages has been outdone by the Germans themselves in this war. The American Indian in his present state of development could not be induced to do what the German has done, and in any period of his development had notions of honor to which the modern German seems a stranger.

And the German reference to the "savage" is further testimony to the fact that Pershing's Apaches—the Indian scouts who did such good work for the American expedition in Mexico—are worrying the enemy a little. They were mentioned for conspicuous services in the dispatches of July 21. They are skillful in trailing bandits and ought to be good at trailing Germans. As for "savages," they will not worry. We will not worry. They are civilized enough to be fighting against the savagery that is most threatening the world in these days.

THE NEGRO IS THERE.

We are not hearing much, in the north, concerning the negro in connection with his war activities, but occasionally an item filters thru and thus far the news has been distinctly creditable to the colored race.

Approximately ten per cent of our total population is of negro blood. If we have approximately a million men in France by July first, then on this basis 100,000 troops are colored, and in 1919 there should be 200,000. This will constitute an army in itself, altho it is not likely the colored troops will be employed as an army unit. Undoubtedly they will be brigaded with white troops.

Who shall say that the negro may not justify the enormous expenditure of blood and treasure required for his emancipation, by rendering very material aid in preventing the destruction of civilization and the enslavement of the whole human race? It is not fanciful to suggest that 100,000 troops may ultimately hold the balance of power and turn a draw or defeat into victory. Without Bluecher at Waterloo, Wellington would not have won, and Bluecher had but a fraction of 100,000 men. If the negro himself, rescued from bondage by the sacrifice of oceans of white men's blood, shall in turn save the world from hun domination by giving himself as a sacrifice, history will record no more sublime example of human gratitude.

A few weeks ago it was recorded that two negro sentinels held off a German party of twenty, in a night attack, until the Americans could be formed in line, altho the negroes were both severely wounded. On Tuesday of this week, in one of the most brilliant attacks recorded in the recent offensive, colored troops recaptured an important position in the Noyon sector, displaying fighting qualities that excited the greatest admiration of the allies.

The effect of negro participation in this war, shoulder to shoulder with the best troops in the world; maintaining their part right up to the mark and doing their full share to beat the hun, cannot fail to tremendously stimulate and hearten and uplift the entire negro race in America. It will or should put an end to the "no-account" talk and prove to the negro that he has a large place in the activities of the nation if he will but develop the inherent powers within himself. If he will pay the price of self-control, industry and education there is scarcely any limit to the achievements within his reach. For years to come, in every cabin in the south and every shack in the north, will be told and retold the thrilling stories of what their sons and brothers did in France to help make the world a desirable place in which to live, and thus set a mark of achievement which oncoming generations will strive to equal or surpass. And what of the vastly improved status of the negro race in the opinion of the country and the world?

Conscription of Negroes

N Y C WAR.
OCTOBER 27, 1917

The South is not altogether easy over the conscription of the negro. The withdrawal of a considerable fraction of the supply of farm labor is embarrassing just now when the pull of the North upon negro labor is intensified by the drying up of the flow of immigration from Europe.

The assembling at mobilization points of large numbers of lusty young blacks accustomed to no other discipline than that of the plantation quite naturally gives occasion for concern. But what chiefly disturbs the South is the probable effect upon the negro population of the return of the men who have served their campaigns.

Will the negro be the same kind of man when he is mustered out as he was when he was mustered in? Will he accept the facts of white supremacy with the same spirit as formerly? Or will he have acquired a new sense of independence that will make of him a fomenter of unrest among his people?

There are some indeed who dismiss Southern anxiety as quite groundless. The negro problem, they assert, will present the same aspect after the war as before it, whether negro soldiers serve in France or not.

But this is to ignore all the teaching of experience. The South is quite justified in its belief that war will affect the habit of mind and the behavior of the men who engage in it.

The Russian peasant who has fought in Galicia is a quite different being from the timid, abject creature who tilled the black lands before the war. He makes a very restive mount for the lords of the earth, as his record in the revolution demonstrates.

The German peasant, too, appears to be changing under the influence of his military experience. The German aristocracy is not so certain as once it was that "Hans bleibt immer Hans."

Unrest among the masses of the working population of England and France is no remote contingency. At all events there are defenders of the existing order in both countries who express grave concern over what will happen when the soldiers return to civil life. In so far as institutions, political or social, are based upon fear, they are likely to be challenged by the returned soldier. After facing death in its most hideous form on the field of battle, will a man cower before a black look, shrink from a threatened blow?

OBEDIENCE BY CONSENT.

If England and France and America are in no serious danger of political or social disturbances when the soldiers return, this is because the fundamental institutions of those countries are not founded upon the exploitation of fear. Obedience to the law, except in sporadic instances, rests upon a general recognition of social utility, not upon fear of the police. We leave their possessions to the privileged, not because they hold the keys to the jail, but because the system that produces them serves the social purpose better than any other system we have been able to devise.

We may expect that the system will be subjected to severer popular scrutiny after the war. We may expect that it will have to undergo many modifications.

The government and the employers may be required to show cause why they should permit crises of unemployment to arise. Hours of labor, scales of wages, sanitary and safety arrangements, provisions for disability and superanuation may be overhauled.

All this may give rise to some embarrassment to the lords of the earth, and to much murmuring. But in the long run they will find the new order as satisfactory as the old. They claim title by virtue of service; they cannot object seriously to a more precise definition of their obligation to serve.

Do the relations between blacks and whites in the South rest upon mutual service, or does the social system of the South rest upon fear? Southerners themselves are far from unanimous on this point.

There is a type of southerner who swears that the proper function of the white man is to keep the fear of God or devil in the breast of the black. There is another type of southerner who conceives the function of the white man as that of guide and protector of the black man. The latter, to judge rather by the general effects than by expressed opinions, is the prevailing type.

Relations between the races are generally far more cordial than could possibly be the case if the southern social system were based wholly, or even chiefly, upon fear.

The southern white profits by the labor of the black and he gives service in return. The negroes of the South, we may well believe, are better off than they would be in a black republic. It does not follow that they are so well off as they ought to be. It does not follow that the whites are performing to the full the obligation they owe.

WHITES MUST GIVE MORE.

Grant that the South has done much for the negro; it has not done enough. The southern white will have to give more service in return for his privileges, just as the Prussian aristocrat, the French and British and American factory owners will have to give more. This is a necessary consequence of a war that stirs democracy to its greatest depths.

There is much that the South ought to have done for the negro that it has not done. It ought to have put down the temperamental negro baiter, the man who goes out of his way "to put the nigger in his place," acting on a psychology more crude and stupid and brutal than the worst Prussia can exhibit. The South ought to have assumed greater responsibility for the negro's civil and economic welfare.

The best men of the South know that there are cormorants of sharp business preying upon the negroes. They know that the negro is handicapped when he buys land and when he sells it; that he is handicapped in every legal transaction; that if he is ambitious, his road to advancement is inhumanly steep and slippery unless he chances to have the personal protection of a white man of the best type.

But the men of the best type have not organized for the defense of the legitimate interests of the negro. They intervene in specific cases of injustice, but they leave untouched institutions that make for injustice.

Conscription of the negro brings the South face to face with the necessity of overhauling its scheme of racial relationships. It is a necessity that many would avoid. They would be willing to send more of their own sons to battle if their local institutions might remain unchallenged by new problems. But local institutions cannot go forever unchallenged. Is the South willing to admit that white supremacy cannot rest on any sounder foundation than fear? If it can rest on service, the problems arising out of negro conscription cannot be insoluble.—From The New Republic.

Our Negro Soldiers.

The departure of the first increment of Negroes to the National Army training camps is an incident of our war for freedom of more than ordinary interest. If the working out of the new military service law is a great experiment in democracy, then the practical demonstration of the effective organization of fighting units composed of American Negroes is of primary importance. Confidence in this group of our citizenry has been voiced by the men responsible to the people for the conduct of the war and their words are the expression of national sentiment.

The confidence is not misplaced. The Negroes are and have been anxious to prove their ability and helpfulness in a righteous cause and they go into training actuated by the high resolve to do their full share for the maintenance of their nation and the principles for which it stands. Long before the passage of the present law they were busy organizing and equipping local units for military service. As for the military usefulness of the American Negro, the expedition into Mexico gave the country ample proof of his bravery and endurance and there is a strong feeling that European battlefields can present no tests he cannot meet.

Pittsburgh yesterday cheered its first Negroes off to camp. More and more will follow, as long as there is necessity for men to fight for America. The Pittsburgh Negro community has just cause for pride that it is now represented in our great preparations and this pride will help it to realize its important sphere in the work that is to be done at home.

FIRST CLASS MEN.

The American negro is one of the best men on the job when it comes to expert work that is hard, as well as a good man in any kind of fight. In France a group of stevedores of that race unloaded 1,200 tons of flour in nine and a half hours, a record to compare well with any finely equipped dock in the world. The work of these patriots has been speeded up bytheir own choice so that ships are able to get away, with record speed, from the French ports.

Experts now figure that it will require not over four tons of freight per fighting man this year, instead of six tons of freight a day off that one ship have claimed. Even the colored men who never saw a ship until they started for France have become wonderfully efficient in this service. American military men report that they do the miraculous in such labors, with laughter and jokes, slamming the Kaiser with a smile. They have endurance. One group of them worked five days continuously and put two thousand tons of feright a day off that one ship.

With their help more dirt is being moved on new railway lines, more steel and ties laid, more warehouses built, more voyages made and more men landed each week than ever before. The negro is the shoulder of the Army. We never can say too much in his praise.

ROCHESTER N Y POST EXPRESS

Our Negroes Are Making Good.

The first colored member of the legislature of our state spoke eloquently in Rochester not long ago. There are, he says, nearly a million descendants of former slaves in the American army, or ready to enlist and follow Old Glory wherever she leads. Yet the negro, as he truly declares, is the only race in America that has to beg for the opportunity to work. The gross injustice of this is apparent when it is remembered that they did not come to the country of their own desire but were brought here in chains; yet since their emancipation 53 years ago no other race in history has made progress equal to theirs.

This is entirely true, but it is quite as true that they owe their progress largely to their environment. They have the aid, example and encouragement of a more developed people; wise laws and incentives to education and worthy living to help them make the most of themselves. No particle of the credit they merit should be withheld from them. They have done splendidly well; but the fact remains that they have become more civilized and Christianized here in half a century than would have been possible in a state or country that was exclusively their own.

Incidentally, and apropos of a recent communication criticizing this page for speaking of two negro soldiers as black heroes, it may be noted that one of the most talented colored men in the country recited stirring lines on this occasion from the famous poem, "The Black Phalanx" which records the gallant work of negro soldiers in the Civil war.

AN INSPIRING ARTICLE

The current issue of Collier's contains an article entitled "Making Soldiers in Dixie," which everybody in the country ought to read and which will prove an inspiration to white and colored alike. We quote just one paragraph from the article, so that you will make up your mind to get it and read it, and then pass it on:

New York Age May 4, 1918

Come with me to an officer's mess hall the next day. There is a shout outside: "Hey! Look what's coming!" We step outside. Down the road, thump-thump, thump-thump, comes that same battalion of Negro soldiers in full marching order. These soldiers from the mills and cotton fields are on their way to France. The whole camp knows it; the whole camp is grave, quiet. Thump-thump, thump-thump! There is no sound in all that great cantonment save the beat of marching feet and the creaking of packs. The black men know they are on their way abroad. They are a solemn-looking lot. A minister steps out to the edge of the embankment overlooking the road down which the troops are marching, and calls out shakily: "Good-by, boys. God bless you! God take care of you, boys!"

A big Mississippian, standing near, swore growling under his breath, gulped, and cried.

"I'm done talking against niggers," he declared huskily. "Those boys have been damn fine soldiers here, an' if they ever get back from France, I'm big enough to lick any man who don't give 'em a square deal."

There is no estimating the good that this article will do. There is a great deal more to it, and a great many people will see it because Collier's has such a wide circulation.

THE SOUTH WAKING UP.

The Journal and Guide April 3

Yes; the South is waking up; is arousing itself to the great central truth enunciated by President Lincoln, that "this Nation cannot survive half slave and half free," and the enlargement of it by Dr. Washington that "there cannot be one law for the white man and another law for the black man; there must be one law for both." These be enunciations of truth that take firm hold on the very roots of the national life. Read the following editorial appreciation of "the colored man and brother," from the Salisbury, (N. C.) Evening Post and then say if you can that the feeling of brotherhood and helpful fellowship is not "marching on:"

The first Negroes from Rowan to leave for the camps are due to go Saturday. There are half a hundred of drafted Negroes to go in this lot. Plans are now under way to give these men a send off, a farewell that will be made appropriate by the leaders of the race in this city who send these men as their representatives to fight for America as becomes good Americans.

The Negro soldier will make good and those from Rowan will make good as American soldiers in a big American way. They are Americans and with the American spirit will uphold the American traditions and American honor. They will conduct themselves as worthy Americans and help bring victory to America and her allies.

This is the way we feel about it and this is the way the people of Salisbury feel about it. The Negro is meeting the demands made on him in this crisis and he is going to prove himself on the battle field as at home. These men go with the prayers and best wishes of all Rowan and in the full confidence of their folks at home.

This is a grand and magnanimous expression of the sentiment of Rowan county, North Carolina, and in a large way of the people of the State, who, way down in their hearts, feel about it as the people of grand old Virginia do, that the Negro people, in peace and in war, have done their duty as they had light to see it and opportunity to do it. But the white people of North Carolina and Virginia have not, in times of peace, been instant in rendering unto the black Caesar the things that are his; they have been more lavish in condemnation and disparagement than in praise and laudation. Like the white man, the black man is intensely human. He thrives when his good works are recognized and applauded and droops and wilts when they are disparaged and condemned.

The great war is waking up the white South to the tremendous fact that the black South is not a negligible but a positive factor in the life of the South. We have evidences of this fact on every hand, and we would have the readers of The Journal and Guide to see and note these evidences as they come and go and to make the most and not the least of them.

Twist and distort it as you will, and the straight fact remains that the black man and his differentiates is going to remain in the southern states to the end of the long chapter, and work out his hard destiny side by side with the white man and his differentiates. As men and brethren, as neighbors, as fellow-citizens, their common interests are mutual. If the great war shall accentuate this fact and make it more pronounced in the life of the two people "all will be well that ends well."

1,000 Negro Troops Given Hot Coffee While in Town

Factory Restaurant Serves Soldiers During Few Minutes They Stay in Johnson City—Binghamton Library Donates Many Magazines

Two trainloads of negro troops felt the hospitality of Johnson City Friday afternoon. The trains, carrying more than 1,000 soldiers, rolled into the village late in the afternoon and stayed only a few minutes, but long enough for each man to have a cup or two of hot coffee from the Johnson City factory dining hall.

As soon as it became known that the troops were in town, arrangements were made at once to serve them coffee. The trains were backed up the factory switch, and it was only a step to take the coffee to the boys. More than 100 quarts were served.

The troops were all negroes excepting the officers. Just as the trains were pulling out, William F. Seward and helpers arrived in an automobile bringing a great bundle of magazines. They were in time to unload the magazines in the baggage car.

A CONTRAST

In judging the South in its relation to the Negro, whatever may be the incident under consideration, if one is not exceedingly careful he will go wide of the mark. To be sure there are certain fixed principles upon which you can rely in judging the attitude of the South, but in working out race relations in the concrete the South differs as widely as its length and breadth in geography. For instance: A group of white Red Cross workers at Greensboro, N. C., had arranged lunches for a train of soldiers that was to pass through the city. When the Red Cross workers reached the station and found that the train was loaded with colored soldiers they deliberately refused to pass out their lunches, and right-about-faced and left the station in disgust and disappointment. A thoroughly disgraceful and un-American thing to do, in view of the fact that the Negro soldiers were no doubt then enroute to the front to make liberty secure for the very persons in Greensboro who refused to do them a patriotic courtesy.

On the other hand, the women of one of the patriotic organizations of Nashville, Tenn., recently prepared cigarettes, post cards and the like for a trainload of troops routed through that city. On the arrival of the train, to the surprise of the members of the organization the soldiers were found to be Negro soldiers instead of white soldiers. After a moment of hesitation they went forth. "We prepared these comforts for American soldiers," they said, "and here is a train full of them." An exceedingly patriotic and beautiful thing to do. The women of Nashville revealed the all-American spirit, and by contrast the women of Greensboro are at a decided disadvantage. Personally, we expected better things of Greensboro, but you cannot always sometimes tell.

"GO SAVE DEMOCRACY" SAYS FLORIDA MAYOR

(Special to The New York Age.)

St. Augustine, Fla.—The colored selectmen left with all honors for Camp Joseph E. Johnson last week. The drafted men were first entertained at St. John's Hall by the Rev. Father Lyons, who made an address giving them excellent advice. They then marched to the railroad station with flags flying, accompanied by a numerous throng of relatives and friends. Two bands headed the procession and they were met at the station by the Mayor and A. W. Corbitt, who made addresses, bidding them to go and save democracy for our country and always keep Old Glory waving in the air.

PRAISE FOR NEGRO SOLDIERS.

The Daily Herald April 13, 1918

The Negro Soldiers.

"The news comes from Mississippi that German spies have been at work there to disturb the Negroes. We do not know if any of them have been at work in this State, but if they have, their answer is to be found in the splendid showing of the 371st infantry upon the streets of Columbia one day recently when this regiment was marching through the city to receive a flag presented by the people of that race. The Negroes of South Carolina are standing by. They are loyal, they are earnest, they are zealous. Sometimes they shame us in their exhibition of their understanding of the causes of this war and their determination to support the government throughout.

There are in that command officers from the best white families of South Carolina. They have a genuine affection for the men under their command and in their care. The Negroes of South Carolina should feel proud that their sons are commanded by the sons of Roddey of Rock Hill, Mattison of Anderson and others, equally as sterling citizens if not quite so well known. It was especially pleasing to observe the pride taken in their companies by such commanders as Capts. Moffatt and Norris of Columbia and Richie of Laurens.

This big, well trained regiment is ready to go. Whenever that time comes, we wish the black boys of the 371st to know that the people of South Carolina appreciate the fact that they behaved beautifully while in the cantonment here, and we have yet to hear of the first unfavorable criticism of the conduct of the Negro soldiers in Columbia."—The Columbia Record.

It should not be forgotten in connection with the unstinted praise now showered upon the black boys in khaki, that six months ago when announcement was made that Negro soldiers would be trained in southern canments, South Carolina newspapers and high officials were bitter in their opposition to having Negro soldiers in that state and were strenuous and insistent in their demands to the President and Secretary Baker that the white people of that state be relieved of the "black peril." This incident is not recalled in a rancorous or bitter spirit, it is past and results have proven that our white friends were wrong in their estimate of Negroes, as they often are, and shall lie buried in the forgotten past, but it is mentioned by way of contrast which points the moral that the Negro, like the white man, should be judged by his performances and not by preconceived notions, or imaginings of what he may do.

Praise comes for the black soldier from every section save bloody hellish Texas. The magnificent record being made by Negro soldiers and the almost uniformly kind and generous treatment of them by the white people in every section of the country, South as well as North, is having its effect upon the race everywhere. A wave of patriotism is sweeping over the Negroes of the country making them feel as they, perhaps, never felt before that they are a part and parcel of the great Republic.

THE NEGRO'S OPPORTUNITY.

Constitution

At no stage of our belligerency to date nor in any respect has the negro failed to measure up to the full requirements of patriotic citizenship in support of the country and the cause.

The colored people everywhere have manifested a splendid spirit, not only in the manner in which they have responded to the calls for armed service, but also in the matter of financial subscriptions for relief and other war purposes.

In the war savings stamp campaign the colored people very properly requested that they be permitted to work within an organization of their own and of themselves, believing that such a policy would bring better results than could be obtainable with the negroes working under white leadership and direction.

This request was granted, so the negroes of Georgia are now to be solely responsible for the showing they make in the state-wide house to house war savings stamp canvass that is to begin tomorrow morning.

It is for the colored people of this state to prove, not only to what extent they are willing to back and support the 140,000 negro troops now in uniform, but the extent to which they are capable of producing results under their own leadership and when thrown upon their own resources.

There is no reason why they should not come fully up to the government's expectations, man for man, of every citizen. This savings stamp campaign is expected to yield only $20 per capita, and certainly the negroes of Georgia, some of whom are wealthy and a vast majority of whom are in comfortable circumstances, should come fully up to that average.

At any rate, the negroes of Georgia are now to be put to the test—not alone as to how far they will go toward helping the government, but toward helping themselves to become provident, thrifty citizens—and the result will be awaited with expectant and sanguine interest.

Sunday Schools Broken Up By Martial Music and Soldiers' Songs.

(Special To The Dispatch.)

Raleigh, June 24.—Raleigh's Sunday schools could not contain themselves yesterday morning when they heard martial music from 200 lusty African throats as they paraded the streets of the city in their stop-off on the way to France.

The company of colored men was one of the finest-looking bodies of troops who have gone through Raleigh. All were big and powerful, nearly all perfect blacks and under the command of young white officers who apparently were as proud of them as any leaders who have marched their men through town. The whites of the city actually predominated in the ovation given to the colored Georgians, nearly all of whom came from Atlanta.

The popular acclaim to colored soldiers is of more recent date. For weeks the black boys were allowed to go through town, remain stuffed in the miserable day coaches which often bore them, and if by accident the boys' approach was learned by the colored people, some few went down to the station and gave them little handouts. It is different now. The newspapers began to speak out for the colored troops and in a short time white women and men were on the sidewalks cheering them, saluting them, giving them flowers and money, and no fighters on their way over are getting better treatment.

When the troops from Georgia came through yesterday morning they walked by the Sunday schools which were singing, "Onward, Christian Soldiers." This stirring hymn of the church militant was literally drowned in the more secular, "Hang Kaiser Bill on a Sour Apple Tree." Every black man could sing and leading them was a white officer from a college. He was a singer, but better of gesticulation than of voice. When he had aroused the soldiers to great enthusiasm he called one of their own to lead: "Shine On Me," a beautiful song of the Old South. It was melting. By this time the Sunday schools were nearly out, but the children hadn't waited for that. They poured into the streets, the soldiers stood before the Y. M. C. A. building and sang half an hour.

It would have done no good to hold the Sunday schools longer. The conversation in heaven had pretty nearly ceased. The young people were stirred and they came out to join the cheering which the whites were so freely giving. Incidentally, no troopers who have come through Raleigh, no matter from what section or of what color have looked more formidable. Give one African to one German and the Teuton will not live to tell the tale.

But the big company of colored troops were simply a starter to the whites who followed on succeeding trains. No fewer than 2,000 visited Raleigh yesterday, stopped half an hour or so, paraded, sang and took the town in gentle way.

The whites could not make music as the blacks, but they were a husky lot of Southerners, almost exclusive, and seemed to be trained to the second. Nearly every man carried a beautiful pink complexion, and carried himself as a veteron. They were singing: "My Little Girl, How Much I Love You," "Over There," and "Hang Kaiser Bil.."

Within a short time the trops will have something pleasanter than a dash through the capital. The canvassers for the soldiers' bathhouse at Johnson street crossing did not work Saturday and raised half the necessary amount. A shower at Relaigh en route from a hot southern camp would make the boys 100 per cent. fitter for the sail. And this will be here shortly.

Raleigh has the Wake woods full of speakers today talking war savings. The country pulpits, school houses and rural lodges have been nearly all open and some preacher, lawyer or other booster has been in the country preaching savings. The headquarters of the war savings at Winston-Salem has been exceedingly anxious, but it looks much as if the state will get over the top.

N Y C POST

The Negro Parade.

In point of numbers, enthusiasm, and fidelity to a cause, the parade of negroes in Atlanta yesterday was a tremendously significant demonstration.

The employers of negro laborers, factory "hands," porters, and workers in stores and office buildings generally united in extending their colored employees a half-holiday, and homes throughout the city were practically closed for the afternoon in order that the colored servants, maids, butlers, chauffeurs, gardeners, etc., could either participate in the parade or view it from the sidewalks.

Patriotism was the keynote of the whole programme—patriotism and country service.

The purpose of the demonstration was to quicken the spirit of loyalty and patriotism of the city's negro population to manifest the negro's fidelity to the Government in the war crisis, and to signify his willingness and eagerness to put forth his best effort in his country's behalf.

It was a splendid success, and it will do good.

All along the route of the parade the marchers were liberally applauded by their white fellow-citizens, who were much impressed with the spirit of the occasion and who gladly contributed to its success.—[Atlanta Constitution. April

GREAT CROWDS WATCH NEGROES OFF TO CAMP

TAMPA FLA TRIBUNE
MARCH 30, 1918

HUNDREDS SELECTS HEAD FOR CAMP DEVENS

Large Percentage of Men Report For Entrainment and Given Royal Good-Bye

Nearly 100 colored drafted men left Tampa yesterday morning amid one of the biggest sendoffs ever seen in the city, and if there was a negro "gal" at work in Hyde Park yesterday morning while the selectmen were getting ready to board the A. C. L. special for Camp Devens, at Ayer, Mass., she was crippled and couldn't get to the union station.

The men generally were in high spirits, an occasional sob beating down from secluded corners of the station as last good-byes were said, but the parade yesterday morning and the big reception given the men the night before by the colored people of the city had everyone keyed up for the departure.

The delay in sending the negro selects to camp has been a long one, but the men responded well to the call, and only a few have been classed as deserters because they could not be reached. Others are in places in the state where they cannot find means to get to their local boards to report, and these will be showing up day by day as they are able to make headway to Tampa. In the crowd yesterday, local board No. 1 had 38 men out of 50 summoned; No. 2 had 13 out of 14, and No. 3 had 44 out of 60.

COLORED CITIZENS HONOR DRAFTED MEN

VICKSBURG, MISS HERALD
FEBRUARY 19, 1918

PATRIOTIC DEMONSTRATION AT MT. HERODEN CHURCH.

J. D. Thames Delivered Principal Address—Fully 1000 Colored People Were Present.

Fully one thousand colored residents of the city attended a patriotic demonstration at the Mt. Heroden church last night, the celebration having been arranged in honor of the colored drafted men who are to leave today for Camp Pike, Arkansas.

In addition to 114 colored men, seven white registrants also have been ordered to report at Camp Pike. All will leave over the A. & V. this afternoon at 5 o'clock, special cars having been provided for transporting the men to their destination.

A feature of the celebration last night was patriotic addresses, District Attorney J. D. Thames delivering the principal address for the occasion. He urged that the men who are soon to wear the uniform of the United States army prove themselves worthy of the honor and privilege which has been bestowed upon them. Messrs. Jesse Jones, Lindsey McGee, Bill Rundle and Sam Brown were also guests of honor.

The Revs. A. L. Murray, G. W. Smith, A. J. Brown and John H. Robinson also delivered short addresses, each emphasizing the duty of the colored soldier to the United States flag.

Sandwiches, ice cream, lemonade, and fruit were served. The entertainment was a pronounced success from every standpoint, having been made possible through the efforts of Rev. E. P. Jones and Philip P. Copeland, and the liberal co-operation shown on the part of citizens.

The colored men will be escorted to the train this afternoon by a delegation of colored citizens, headed by a band. The parade will leave the court house at 4 o'clock and the colored schools have been requested to dismiss this afternoon in order that the school children may participate.

First of Four Speeches to Be Delivered by Governor to Acquaint Race With War Duties Makes Deep Impression.

Cartersville, Ga., June 29.—(Special.) Governor Hugh M. Dorsey's address before a meeting of colored citizens of this section of the state, held at the courthouse here today, was one of the outstanding features of that very interesting gathering.

The meeting was called for the purpose of acquainting the negroes with their duties along conservation lines, and to inspire them to greater efforts in the raising of foodstuffs.

The governor began his address by assuring his hearers that he had consented to address only four such gatherings in this state, and expected to visit four sections with his message to them. He told them their race in this state had furnished two thousand more negroes to the national army than had any other state in the union, and that thirty-six negroes out of every hundred summoned before local boards in Georgia had been accepted for service. "This is indeed a remarkable record," the governor declared, adding, "and as your race has done much for the nation in its time of sore trial, so will the nation continue to do much for you."

He urged upon his hearers that they plant every possible acre in foodstuffs, and assured them that a ready market could be found at good prices.

He told the story of the sailors who were famished for water. They hailed a passing boat, and urged that water be sent them. The would-be rescuers pointed to the water about them, and gave the signal: "Let your buckets down." This the thirsty crew did, and found it to be free from brine, and after an investigation they found they were within a few miles of the coast, and in the mouth of a clear stream of water. "I say to you people," he continued, "simply let your buckets down, and right here in Georgia, the Empire state of the south and of the union, and you will find meat to eat, and water to quench your thirsty souls. Georgia is your place and you may rest assured that a fair deal will be your lot every time."

Must Preserve Freedom.

The governor, at this point declared: "I am glad you're a free people, instead of slaves as were your forefathers. But if you really love that freedom which has been accorded you you will do whatever you can to preserve that blood-bought liberty."

He told the negroes it was their duty to buy Liberty bonds, Thrift stamps, subscribe to the Red Cross, for only in that way could they assist in preserving America from the greed of the Huns, "who are casting longing eyes at this fair land of ours."

Commissioner of Agriculture Brown and Superintendent of Education Brittain accompanied the governor to Cartersville, making the trip by auto.

Mr. Brown brought a brief message to the meeting, and told the gathering that it had been his pleasure to learn of the really great work being done by the negro farmers of Georgia, and he believed they would continue to do everything within their power to assist the government in an agricultural way. He pledged the fullest co-operation of the state department of agriculture in their every endeavor.

Superintendent Brittain's Talk.

Superintendent Brittain's talk was along educational lines, and he briefly outlined some of the things the state department of education had done for the negroes. He mentioned the fact that already there is in operation at Savannah one of the best negro colleges in the south, while another one is soon to be established at Albany. He believes that more attention is to be given the matter of increasing the salaries paid the colored teachers, and assured his hearers that he stood at all times for a just and equitable salary budget.

A number of other very interesting speeches were made during the course of the meeting, and the keynote of all of them was in praise of the negro's efforts so far, urging them to place themselves in position to make even greater sacrifices, along with the white people, in the successful prosecution of the war.

Besides a large audience of negroes, quite a number of white people were in attendance, among whom were Mrs. Sam P. Jones, Mrs. W. H. Felton, Mrs. Ruchs Pyron, Mrs. W. J. Neel, all of whom made short talks.

At the conclusion of the meeting, the governor's party had lunch at the Park hotel, Levi Reeves and J. W. Vaughan being hosts.

The Negro and the War

MEMPHIS TENN APPEAL
JUNE 12, 1918

The Commercial Appeal states a few facts for the information of the negroes to whom constant misrepresentations are being made about the war.

It is also true that many wild rumors are reported among the negroes until they get the stamp of apparent proof.

The negro soldiers in camp in this country and the negro soldiers in France get exactly the same treatment from the Red Cross as do the white soldiers. They receive the same medical attention; their hospital wards are equipped just as well as the wards of other soldiers; they receive the same rate of pay, the same rations and the same sort of clothing.

The white women of Memphis are making vast quantities of hospital garments, bandages, wound packs and socks for the soldiers in France. These garments are distributed among negro soldiers just as they are distributed among white soldiers.

If there is a negro soldier suffering from a wound in a French hospital the white people of the Red Cross want that negro to be cared for just as well as if his skin were as white as the stars.

This is a negro's war just as well as a white man's war. This is a war of every American citizen.

When the negro soldier strikes at a German he is defending his home and the home of the neighboring white man, and when the white man strikes at the German soldier he is trying to protect the cabin of the humblest colored man just as much as he is attempting to protect the home of the plantation owner.

The negro soldiers in Europe have already given a good account of themselves.

It was reported at first that the negroes are helping to load and unload ships, and so are the white men. The negroes are helping to build railroads in France, and so are the white men; and the negro is on the firing line at Toul, just as are the white men.

The government of the United States makes the same allowance for the negro soldier's wife or child that it does for the white soldier's wife or child.

In all the wars of the United States, from the Revolutionary War down to the Mexican trouble, the negro soldier has borne himself well. There is equal opportunity for a display of splendid service in this war.

Another thing: There are probably 50,000 negro soldiers in France. They are fighting and they are dying. What are the negroes at home going to do about it? What can they do? They can do exactly as the white people are doing. They can get busy and keep busy. They can produce food crops and cotton crops. They can do service on the railroads and in the munitions factories.

Those negroes in Europe will be saved just as the lives of the white soldiers will be saved. For every white man and every negro in America doing something useful every day which will be helpful in bringing the war to a successful end—and the only successful end will be a victory for the Stars and Stripes.

The negroes at home should so conduct themselves that they may be sharers in that victory. Whenever a colored man sees a young black man idling his time away he should admonish the young man, and, if the young man persists in idleness, he should be reported. That is exactly what is being done in regard to white men.

The French armies have 250,000 Senglese troops. These men are pure-blooded Africans. They have rendered excellent service. Our American negro soldiers will find that already their African brothers have set for them in France a standard of military efficiency.

LOUISVILLE, KY. TIMES

A PROPER PLAN.

It is observed with much interest; and The Times observes with great pleasure that the Board of Trade has arranged for a division of the great military parade next Friday to be devoted to the negro drafted men who soon will take their places in training to become soldiers in defense of human liberty. It is eminently fitting that these men should have a place in the parade, as it is eminently fitting that they, the latest of human races to acquire freedom under civilized conditions, should stand upon the battle front to uphold the principles of democracy against the assaults of the devouring Hun.

During several generations the black man, transplanted to America, has displayed considerable aptitude for service as a soldier; and much gallantry upon one side or the other—as a soldier in the ranks upon the side of the Union, as the body servant of a beloved master upon the side of the Confederacy. In neither role did he show the white feather. On the contrary many stories of high spirit and bold courage on the part of negroes of that period go to enliven a sad tale of wounds and death.

In the Spanish-American War the record of negro service is quite as noteworthy. In Cuba negro troops distinguished themselves, while during the late and more exacting service in the Philippines, negro troops were justly celebrated for their reliability and fidelity to discipline. Moreover, white officers who have commanded negro regiments have been constant and generous in their praise of the colored regiments both under fire and in cantonments.

Louisville enjoys a high order of negro population; and The Times feels that the negro men who go hence to take their places upon the line of battle will reflect credit upon their home city. Their services will be of great value to the Nation; and therefore The Times is glad the city will enjoy the opportunity Friday of bidding them a heartfelt farewell along with all the other soldiers who are rallying to the defense of our institutions.

COLORED CITIZENS GIVE BOYS SEND-OFF

If any pro-German propagandist has been laboring under the delusion that there would be comfort for his kaiser in hunting disloyalty among the colored people of Crawford county, he doubtless changed his mind yesterday. It was the day on which twenty-eight Crawford county boys of that race bade their families and friends good-bye and took the train for Camp Pike.

From all over the county practically every colored inhabitant gathered in Van Buren to bid their boys God speed, bearing with them memory of the greatest demonstration of that race ever held in the county. There was also added to the throng more than one thousand colored people from Fort Smith.

The great public feature of the event was a great patriotic parade fully a mile long in files of four. From end to end the line of march fairly blazed with Old Glory, and banners and transparencies which breathed patriotic spirit. A most inspiring feature was the singing of patriotic songs, which made the air ring. Just one banner indicates the vigorous point made in the patriotic sentiments borne upon many banners. That slogan was "a boche killed by a nigger is just as dead as by a white man."

The parade formed near the Broadway school at noon under the auspices of the Negro Business league. Its president, Ellies Mills, was grand marshal who piloted a drum corps leading the parade. Behind the drum corps came Joan of Arc and Uncle Sam, impersonated by Hazel Mack and J. Hollowell. In the line of march were members of the Red Cross, canning club, Douglass school children captained by their teacher, Rosa Mack Caldwell. The 125 members of the Business league were in line. A float bearing the choirs of the colored churches made the welkin ring with patriotic songs. Then came a long line of automobiles, carriages and colored citizens on foot. The head of the parade had turned off Main street toward the passenger station before the rear guard swung onto Main.

At the depot the cheering crowd was addressed by J. E. Powers and Rev. E. Rawlings.

ATLANTA GA CONSTITUTION

GOVERNOR IN FAVOR OF NEGRO PARADES

Calls Attention to Celebration in Atlanta Thursday, and Urges Similar Pageants in Other Cities.

Governor Hugh M. Dorsey has addressed a letter to the county chairmen of the Council of National Defense, drawing attention to the parade of colored people which is to be held in Atlanta on the afternoon of Thursday, April 18, and the possibility of similar parades being arranged in other cities and towns in the state. Governor Dorsey urges the utmost possible co-operation of the white people in order that these parades may be carried to a large measure of success, and urges the employers of labor to allow their colored workers a half holiday on the dates of the parades that they may participate.

The parade in Atlanta has been arranged largely through the indefatigable efforts of M. W. Reddick, one of the state's most respected negro preachers, and assistant state director of the negro department of the National War Savings Committee for Georgia.

The parade, which is intended to promote the war savings stamps campaign among the colored people and also the purchase of Liberty bonds by the negro, together with all other branches of work, will include in its ranks practically every negro organization in the city. The negro public schools will take a prominent part, and all of the colored business houses, churches and fraternal orders are heartily joining in the preparations.

The line of march will be through the main business section of the city, and will start from the corner of Jackson street and Auburn avenue.

Many Indorse Parade.

In addition to the indorsement given the parade by Governor Dorsey, Mayor Candler has issued a call to the employers of the city asking that every colored worker be allowed opportunity to march.

Edgar Watkins, chairman of the Fulton County Council of Defense, has issued a statement in which he, on behalf of the organization he heads, joins the governor and mayor in publicly approving the parade and urging all white people to encourage the negroes in their undertaking. He states that it is to be desired that everyone will assist the colored citizens in showing that the country is the land of a united people, regardless of race or color.

GREENVILLE S C PIEDMONT
JUNE 17, 1918

We are g but cannot

efficiency. There were those who did not want the Negro used as a soldier and many communities cried out against location near them of any considerable number of Negro soldiers. The Piedmont protested against both of those forms of hysteria. The Negro is a citizen of this country. The lesson of the present crisis is that every citizen must do his full duty—not only because he owes service to his country but because his country needs it. Properly officered, the Negro is a fine soldier. Of course, when the Negro was put in the army, it was necessary to put aggregations of Negroes in camps for training and it would have been impossible and silly for the government to allow local feeling to dictate to it where it should not train Negro soldiers.

For some time now there have been Negro soldiers in Camp Sevier. Their behavior has been most commendable. They have been in no way offensive. Have we given enough thought to them? Have we considered their welfare as we should?

It is just as necessary for them as for white soldiers to as closely as possible approximate one hundred per cent efficiency. Amusement and recreation are recognized as necessary to make and keep white soldiers fit for fighting. And the Negro is by nature more pleasure-loving than his white brother.

Has this community done its full duty in helping the training of the Negro soldiers at Camp Sevier? Are not his opportunities for amusement and recreation when he visits the city, very, very small in comparison with those of the white soldiers?

If we have not done our full duty toward the Negro soldier in our midst, let's reform and resolve to do it henceforth. That will be contributing toward the winning of the war just as much as buying stamps and bonds and donating to the Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., Knights of Columbus and Salvation Army.

History tells what Negro troopers did at San Juan and history has a habit of repeating itself. We are going to use Negro soldiers in Europe—we will have to use them there. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link. Likewise an army is no stronger than its weakest part. The success of our armies in Europe may depend upon the ability of our Negro troops to hold the part of the line given to them. We know what happens when any part of the line gives away. Then, let's do our part to help fit the Negro soldiers being trained at Camp Sevier for the work they will have to do in Europe.

Attitude of South

IN BEHALF OF THE NEGRO SOLDIERS

Raleigh Independent 5-26-18

Below we are giving space to an editorial which appeared in The State Journal under date of May 17. The article was written by Mr. W. T. Bost, the able and fearless editor of The Jouranl, who dares to ask that a man's chance be given the Negro. In it he pleads that the Negro soldiers who pass through the city be allowed or invited to march through the streets of the city and receive the cheer and inspiration that is weekly accorded the white troops who pass through. We are glad The Journal has spoken out against such treatment. That it has already brought results may be reflected in the renouncement that a "Canteen service" had been provided for colored soldiers who pass through Raleigh. This is only the beginning of what should have been done long before. It is often hard to reconcile the professed patriotism and sincerity of some people with their actions; as, is reported, in the case of the "canteen service" of one our neighboring, cities which went to the station to serve coffee and sandwiches to soldiers that were to pass through, but, when the members (white) saw that the soldiers were black rumor says that they poured their coffee in the gutter, and carried their sandwiches back home withold ing from the black soldiers that "rousing cheer" which would have meant much to those who were going forth 'to a land they knew not of," because their country called.

Mr. Bost deserves the commendation of every American for his manly position. We hope that the injustice will be stopped and that the "problem" will really be solved by giving "simple justice to the colored man who has risen in earnest strivings by the might of his merit."

The editorial follows:

LET US CHEER THE COLORED SOLDIERS

Troop trains that weekly go through Raleigh carrying help to our allies, have been accustomed along the route to drop the heroic boys down in the cities where the populace could briefly see them and cheer them as they leave their country.

Nobody, save the soldier can tell how much this means to the men who bear arms for us in another world. They stop and gather loving symbols from a people aroused to highest enthusiasm, and parading the streets the boys in uniform make those of us who imagine a sacrifice feel a lasting shame while sitting back enumerating items of expense and counting the cost in comforts.

But there is one black hero who goes through every time two white do and we hear nothing of him. That is the chocolate soldier who sits wedged into a stuffy day coach and wait until snail-like trains back him from the station to put out on the main line. Nearly all of these black boys have been drafted and put into uniform to fight across a trackless waste of water for an abstraction which is well-nigh srtanger to them at home. A few colored friends may know of their coming and there is a short good-bye at the station. But the great heart of a municipality is lost to them and they must go to war without any of the cheers that so freely and lovingly are given to the white men with whom they eventually will fight. they eventually will fight.

The colored troops should be allowed to get off the cars, march through the city and receive the plaudit of all the people for whom they fight. If there be anw white people who feel as the fool Beard of Abbeville felt before he got into the Federal penitentiary for his feeliing; if there be whites who withold their own enthusiasm lest it spoil a "damnigger," then let the colored soldier have the public streets for a moment while his own cheer him as he puts out to war. There are black people who have thought and sentiment and whose hearts thrill and ache for their own. Let these black people see their boys and give them mementoes of the land to which thousands of thm will not return.

The blacks need it and are entitled to it. To them the trip across the sea is voind largely of joy and the thrill which a race living on it and by it has found in it. To the white man who has explored it while the colored man has been his slave supporting him, the sea is a friend, clothing and feeding and inviting him to heroic deeds. Its perils invest the rewards it offers with a compelling charm, but the sea is a terror to the timid and a peril to the ignorant. It means far more for an army of Southern blacks to cross it than it does a race of Southern whites used to traversing it in the enterprise of bringing the Negro here to work as a slave.

The white people owe it to themselves to give all the comfort and cheer that they can. No race can be happy long surrounded by those whose happiness has been destroyed either by indifference or by wilfulness. Much has been written of the "problem" of the Negro soldier." We are always making a "problem" out of a simple justice to the colored man who has risen in earnest striving by the might of his merit. The "problem" now before the Negro soldier is helping us to kill Huns. Let us make the job easier for him by giving him a little heart for his work.

ATLANTA'S NEGRO SELECTMEN AWAY TO WAR, CHEERING

Atlanta Journal

To Martial Music Chocolate Soldiers Parade Streets, Acclaimed by Their Race and Honored by All Whites

Oct 7 1917

BY WARD GREENE

The "chocolate soldiers" of Atlanta—all honor to them!—marched away to war Thursday morning with flags flying, their friends cheering and crying, a brass band playing "Georgia Camp Meetin'," and every man Jack of them wreathed in smiles as if he were going to a land flowing with pork chops and ham gravy.

If there be any man or woman in the city who thinks that Georgia negroes are not going to "do their bit" in this war, that they are not going to stand by the colors as did their elder brothers at San Juan Hill and El Caney, they should have been on the curbstone of Whitehall street to see the "chocolate soldiers" pass.

They came up Edgewood avenue shortly before noon—154 of them, chosen from among their brothers as the fittest to serve their country—and they were accompanied by a swarm of friends and relatives that seemed like a dark river running over both sides of the stream and dribbling off in little streams and tributaries into every side alley along the route.

And all along the way, along Edgewood avenue and along Decatur street, along Peachtree street and along Whitehall street, clear to the Terminal station, were more negroes waiting for them—fat old mammies with clothes-baskets on their arms, old uncles with wooly gray hair, leaning on canes and peering through spectacles as big as window glasses, rich negroes in silk hats and fine silk dresses, young negroes fresh from college and high school, little negro bootblacks scuffling along in the dust, piccaninnies borne in the strong arms of their mothers and fathers.

All of these ,as the head of the parade came into sight, opened their mouths and yelled. Their white teeth shown, their black faces glistened, they cheered and cheered the flag and the boys behind it, they hollered to them, they shook them by the hands, they ran out into the street and marched along with them, clapping them on the back and laughing and shouting as if it were circus day in the morning.

"Gawd be wid you t'well we meet ergin, honey!" screamed a fat old mammy waddling along the sidewalk with a roll of clothes on her head. The crowd took up the call.

"Gawd be wid you, boy! Take keer yo'se'f, John Henry! I'll be seein' you, boy, I'se gwine out dar fo' long!"

And then the band began to play—

"Oh, dar's gwiner be a meetin' of de colored race Away down in Dixie!"

The band was the Knights of Pythias band, the band of the old "Third Georgia regiment" that played that same tune in 1898. There was one little gray-headed negro with a fife, and he waggled his head and twitched himself from side to side as he ran the shrilling instrument back and forth across his lips. Behind the bass drum was a giant with the chest of a Hercules, and he banged that drum with whirling sticks on both sides, as if he would punch a hole through it. The other fifers swung their hips back and forth in time with the tune, the negroes with the brass horns blared them until their cheeks stuck out like blac balloons. And the tune whined and shrilled and ragged and ripped through the air until it got into the blood of the marching men and into the blood of the men and women running along beside them.

TAKE KEER YO'SELF.

Young negro girls began to cry. They wept unrestrainedly, the tears rolling like rain down their cheeks, their arms clinging around the shoulders and the necks of the black boys marching along so straight and stiff. And other negroes continued to laugh and cry messages to each other along the line, to "take keer yo'se'f, boy. Gawd be wid you twell we meet ergin!"

Right behind the mounted police that led the parade came three negroes bearing the flag of the city of Atlanta, with two American flagfs flaunting in the breeze from either side. One of the negroes bore a sign on his chest and he never cracked a smile, so proud he was, so "set up" at what the sign said. And this is what the sign said:

"OLD SPANISH VETERAN,
LAND OF THE FREE!
HOME OF THE BRAVE!
RED, WHITE AND BLUE!"

And just behind him, in the first contingent of negroes, was a well-dressed young darky wearing a brown suit with a razor edge crease in it, a nobby derby hat and a tie that contained all the colors of the rainbow.

HOWDY, MISTER.

In the good old days that darky used to be a waiter in a locker club. He has poured out more booze than any man his size in the country probably, and he knew more "white folks" than anybody else in the procession.

He kept seeing chaps he knew all along the line, and he would cry to them, "Howdy, Mister Herbert! Howdy, suh! Yas, suh! howdy! Yas, suh, I'se gwine erway f'um heah!"

And many a business man on the curbstone stopped him to shake hands enthusiastically and wish him "good luck, George! Good luck!"

And the nobby, young negro would grin and sweat and shake his hand and run to catch up with the others, chanting, "Thank, suh! Thank, Mister Herbert!"

Few of the negroes carried baggage, but those who did toted everything from suitcases to handkerchiefs on old broom sticks. One big fellow had a regular knitting bag on his arm. And there was another with a doctor's medicine case adorned with a red, white and blue "sticker." Still another had a banjo across his shoulders, and one little darky carried his guitar, strumming away at it every step of the way.

THE HONORED 150.

It was a great send-off that the colored people of Atlanta gave their first chosen. It began at 10:30 o'clock in the morning with speeches and exercises at the auditorium-armory, when probably 2,000 negroes filled the great building.

The honored 154 sat down in front, while J. R. Nutting, chairman of the fifth division local board, introduced Dr. C. B. Wilson, a colored physician, who presided over the festivities. Mayor Candler made a patriotic address in which he quoted part of President Wilson's speech to congress. Other speakers were all colored: Dr. H. H. Proctor, P. James Bryant, E. R. Carter, J. W. E. Bowens nad B. R. Holmes.

"You are going out to Camp Gordon as the first of 10,000 colored men from Georgia," Dr. Bryant told the selectmen. "We want you, as the representatives of all the colored people in Georgia, to show Georgia and to show the world that you can fight side by side with white men with all honor!"

"In the Spanish-American war," continued Dr. Bryant, "they gave a colored soldier the American flag and told him to plant it on the ramparts of San Juan Hill. 'Either bring back that flag with honor or report to God your reason for not bringing it back!' they told him. Well, he did not bring back the flag, for his head was blown off and his blood was spattered over the stars and over the stripes. But he reported his reason to God! That is what we expect you to do—bring back that flag with honor or report your reaso nto God!"

"HOT TIME" AND "AMERICA."

The crowd cheered that speech madly. Then the selectmen sat down to a royal feast—roast pork and brown gravy, Brunswick stew, ice cream, cake, and a package of brand-new cigarettes for each man.

Before they left the auditorium the whole crowd rose and sang "The Star Spangled Banner" and "America." Then the K. of P. band broke into "A Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight" and they were off for the grand procession through the streets of Atlanta to the Terminal station, where the one hundred and fifty-four selectmen took the train for Camp Gordon.

28 DeKalb Negroes Are Sent to Gordon

DECATUR, Ga., Oct. 4.—Twenty-eight of the thirty negro selectmen called from DeKalb county appeared before the local board here this morning and were sent to Camp Gordon. E. E. Stalknaker, one of their number, was put in charge of the squad, which, before its departure, was addressed by Rev. A. A. Wilson, pastor of the colored Presbyterian church of Decatur.

The Negro in the War.

[illegible] of the American army over there is composed of negro troops is conjectural. Probably the proportion is modest as yet, but already has it been established that "the colored troops fight nobly." In addition to general mention made at times by General Pershing, he has singled out for particular commendation the heroic exploit of two negro soldiers who, tho wounded, gallantly withstood a raiding party of twenty Germans, saving their comrades from capture.

This The Louisville Courier-Journal declares has no element of surprise for any one who knows the American negro as a fighter, adding: "There is no color line in the war against the black flag of the Prussian skull-and-bones. By the way, it was noticed that no participants in Louisville's great Red Cross parade received from the spectators more applause than the negroes."

Along this same line of thought this Southron of Southern journals, speaking to the query as to why not supplement the shortage of war nurses from among negro women, has this to say: "Most of the nursing of white people in the South before the war was done by faithful negro slaves. Much of the nursing of both the ill and the infants in the South has been done since the war by negro women, a few of them "practical" nurses. That negro women have a peculiar natural aptitude for nursing is undobuted. That they get remarkably good results without much training shows that with training they would be valuable anywhere."

Another tribute to the negro in this war is paid by The Memphis Commercial Appeal, also ultra Southern, which says: "Not long ago one of the most spectacular scenes ever enacted in Memphis was when a delegation of our black brothers left for camp. There was no tightening of the purse strings among their friends and relatives. The day was one of celebration. A dollar spent in making the departure eventful was a dollar well worth while. The boys of dark skins, just as true and loyal to the Stars and Stripes as we of white skins, left home happy and proud. They had been escorted to the train by thousands. A band of their race played the songs of inspiration and the ragtime that is part of their harmonious existence. They may be black, but they can fight, and they are Americans and they are loyal, and the men and women of their race did not seek assistance from the white man. They arranged the details of a big day and it was an epoch-making day in the history of Memphis."

It is a bit significant that the major part of complimentary comment on the chivalry of the negro in the war has been made by the Southern press. It evidences not alone a spirit of fairness in just appreciation, but also a spirit of friendliness, not unmixed with pridefulness in the prowess and the patriotism of the brother in black. Quite in place with these expressions is that of a correspondent with the American army over there, who gives us this pleasing picture of the negro in khaki "somewhere in France":

"They are over here, their typical negro selves. The standard of intelligence in the unit is extremely high, and no illiteracy is noticeable. Many of the men have become fluent French talkers and I have heard animated conversations between our darkies and the Senegalese who chanced to be passing. The American negro lads get along famously with both white and black Frenchmen. In their dealings with the feminine population they are punctiliously polite and not a single complaint has been lodged against them in this respect. Naturally they are delighted at the complete lack of racial prejudice they have found in France and some of them have declared to me their intention of remaining here after the war. Their pride in their unit speaks well for a continuance of the high morale they have manifested so far."

There is no discount to be placed on the American soldier by reason of racial antecedents, religious predilection or previous conditions of servitude. One and all they are soldiers true who will soon be tried, and tried to the uttermost will not be found wanting.

OUR BLACK DEVILS.

Just as earlier in the war the German soldiers dubbed the Alpine chasseurs "The Black Devils" because of the color of their uniforms and their fearlessness and ferocity in combat, the same enemy now have come to speak of the negro troops sent over from this country as "America's Black Devils," because of the color of their skins and their bravery in the face of fire.

No greater compliment could be paid our colored soldiers than for the enemy to so express his respect for their fighting ability and his dread of facing them with cold steel.

It will be remembered that when the first of our negro troops were landed in France the Prussian military authorities ridiculed any suggestion that the black recruits from the cotton fields and shops of the south would prove formidable antagonists on the field of battle. But the "folks at home" had ample confidence in the colored boys—in their willingness and ability to fight and in their bravery. That confidence was supported by history of which the Germans apparently were ignorant; and once the negroes were put on the firing line and given an opportunity to "display their wares," our confidence in them was proven abundantly justified.

And now "America's black devils" is the Germans' characterization of the boys at whom they at first scoffed!

The negro has borne thus far, and is bearing, his part in this war splendidly, with credit to his race and in a way that is gratifying all round—except to the Hun!

This is true of the general run of members of the colored race, whether serving in uniform or in civilian life.

SANFORD GIVES DRAFTEES BIG SEND-OFF

BANQUET TENDERED

Twenty Four in Number

Sandford, N. C. April 8—Our first Lee county Negro troops left here Saturday, the 30th, for Camp Grant (Rockford), Illinois and Camp Jackson (Columbia), S. C. where they will go in training for the National Army.

Early in the week preparations were made for giving the young soldiers a hearty receiption and grand ovation. In pursuance thereof a committee of our colored women was appointed composed of the following: Mrs. Angelet McIver, Mrs. S. A. Quick, Mrs. Susie McIver, Mrs. Sophronie Alston, Mrs. M. J. Quick, Mrs. A. B. Stewart, Mrs. Callie Cox, Mrs. Julia Crump, Mrs. Sallie Stitts, Mrs. Nettie Horton, Mrs. Sallie McIver and Mrs. Cora McLeod.

On Thursday night from 8 to 11 o'clock, patriotic exercises were held in the Odd-Fellow-Masonic Hall. The meeting was presided over by Lawyer W. H. Quick, as master of ceremonies; Interesting speeches were made by Mr. A. L. Boykin, chairman of the War Stamp Committee, Dr. E. E. Toney, Rev. R. Taylor and Rev. J. W. Perry. A strong soul-stirring paper was read by Mrs. Ramseur. A storm of applause followed.

Lively airs were played by the Sanford Band, and vocal music rendered by the combined choirs of all the colored churches of the town. And set off in great spirit and glee by a few well selected peices of our old plantation melodies, lead by Mr. Boykin, joined in by all present.

The roll of soldier boys were called; many responded and all escorted to the long, richly prepared table where each enjoyed himself immensely. The white ladies and friends added largely to make the occasion a happy one. Comfort bags well filled, pillars & etc. were carefully made up and given by both races alike. The scene will be remembered till the lives of the fortunate participants are spent with age. They are industrious in habits, moral in life and heroic in deeds.

Those entrained were as follows: James Lett, Agrippa McKoy, Andrew Woodard, Leroy Jackson, John Austin, Lee Smith, Cornie Lee Douglas, Lonnie Street, Walter Raleigh Lassiter, John Oliver Wooden, Edward Gasque, Robert L. Bell, Chas. [illegible], Bun Crowder, John Lewis [illegible], Clinton Jones, James McKinly Harris, John Cameron, Dewy F. Bland, Ulyses Grant Watson, Rothrock Simmons, John F. Singleton, John Foushee, Henry Dotson.

A large concourse of people, white and colored, accompanied the boys to the train at 5:30 Saturday evening, extending in patriotic fare-wells to those offering their all for their country's cause.

Here the Band played and our Mayor and others delivered eloquent addresses, tho short, yet, impressive.

OLD SOLDIERS TO HONOR NEGRO MEN

Camp Wilcox to Take Part in Demonstration for Army Draft.

SAVANNAH GA NEWS
OCTOBER 27, 1917

Camp Wilcox No. 782, United Confederate Veterans, will participate in the general demonstration to be given the negro selectmen who were drafted for the army, and who are to leave Monday for Fort Dodge, Iowa, for training. The veterans were asked by civic bodies to march at the head of the procession that will be held for the negro selectmen, and at a well attended meeting of the camp Friday afternoon the invitation was accepted and at the hour, as to be given in the newspapers, the veterans will be ready for the march.

It was decided that the selectmen would be given a send-off, and whether white or colored, would be made to feel that their service for the government is appreciated. In all parades so far, Camp Wilcox has responded to the invitations, and many members turn out in full uniform of gray.

Confederate Flags Strongly in Evidence.

One feature of the observance of Labor Day was the parade given by the negroes of Savannah yesterday morning, in which there were twenty carriages, half a dozen automobiles and a long line of marchers on foot.

The procession was led by a brass band that played martial airs as the parade moved along the side streets of the city, followed by the usual sidewalk crowd of youthful darkeys.

The striking feature of the demonstration was that the entire parade was arrayed in Confederate flags, and quite a number of Sons of the Confederacy walked in a body in the line. United States flags were carried also.

When the Negroes Marched By Every Phase of Negro Life Represented in Long Line Which Marched Along the Packed Streets — Spanish War Vets Given Many Cheers.

A weapon now forging which, when ready, will not be the least of the many instruments of vengeance which will compel restitution from a kaiser and his staff, won the unstinted approval of every loyal citizen of Atlanta yesterday, when it was shown in striking display by the parade of the colored citizens of this city.

Never before in the history of Atlanta has such a splendid presentation of all that stands for the finest and best in the negro been given as that of Thursday. A procession, which took three-quarters of an hour to pass the reviewing stand, which numbered in its ranks over ten thousand people, men, women and, children, which evidenced one hundred per cent loyalty to the country and nation, of which those people are a part, won round after round of spontaneous applause from the thousands who lined the streets.

At the reviewing stand at Five Points, Governor Dorsey and Mayor Candler welcomed the different organizations of the colored race as each section gravely saluted first the starry flag and then the two executives as representatives of the state and city. Among those on the stand was Mrs. Samuel M. Inman, who, as chairman of the Georgia division of the woman's committee of the Council of National Defense, which includes all women's organizations of the state, represented the expression of interest of all these organizations in the splendid work that the negro women are doing along patriotic lines.

Headed by Negro Troops.

The parade was headed by two detachments of colored troops from Camp Gordon, who were followed by a line of the patriotic negroes of the city. "Mr. Kaiser, you'd better lay down your gun; fast black will never run," ran one of the slogans carried by the marching thousands, and it was typical of the determination shown in every face.

Many bands furnished inspiring marching music, and, when the gap between the bands was too long, the colored school children made their own music by singing.

The colored Knights of Pythias, the Elks, the D. O. K. O., the Knights and Daughters of Tabor, the Court of Calanthe, the colored National Defense league, and many other fraternal organizations made splendid showings.

Continuous cheers greeted the veterans of the Spanish-American war as they passed, dignity and pride evident in their bearing as they saluted the flag.

The colored churches carried banners telling of their work in buying Thrift Stamps and Liberty Bonds and each congregation, led by its pastor and leading members, told a tale of steadfast service that those who saw will always remember.

THE NEGRO TROOPS.

The Crown Prince's men, having been sufficiently satisfied with their experimentation on American white soldiery, was bold to test the mettle of the negro soldier and gave the war correspondents occasion to bring these negro troopers to the front in words of praise. It was in an attempt to capture the railroad connecting Estrees-St. Denis with Montdidier that the Germans came into contact with Pershing's negro division, and these good American negroes put up such a stout resistance as to cause the Germans to abandon the attempt. The negro troops were supported by Allied tanks and delivered "a brilliant counter-attack," in which they dealt great execution among the German troops. They drove back the Germans and have a recaptured village to their credit. We shall expect them to stick to it with the same tenacity that the white Americans have been sticking to Cantigny. We were sure that in due time the negro soldiers would be coming in for their share of the honors being won on every hand by the men from America.

CHANGE OF HEART IS IMPERATIVE!

Collier's Weekly under cover of recent date, from the pen of William McMitt, in discussing the colored soldiers at Camp Lee, says that when some of the race soldiers passed in the parade they were loudly cheered. The Houston Observer, May 11, 1918.

Going further the writer says:

> A big Mississippian, standing near, swore growlingly under his breath, gulped and cried, "I'm done talking against niggers," he declared huskily. "Those boys have been damn fine soldiers here, an' if they ever get back from France I'm big enough to lick any man who don't give 'em a square deal."
> "They've certainly been good soldiers," a South Carolinian standing by agreed. "I never thought to salute a nigger, but I've been glad to return salutes to those boys. If they die in France, they're going to be just as dead as any of the rest of us. I've been changing my mind awful fast in the last two months."

Writing from Washington, D. C., several weeks ago, Hon. Marcellus E. Foster, editor of the Houston Chronicle, said this in his paper:

> You can not enter a public building in Washington without meeting colored doorkeepers, guards and office boys. They are ubiquitous and universally deferential. In the Pan-American building one of the most courteous and best informed guides I have ever met was the one of ebony hue, who explaind to me in the language of a scholar, without the least affectation, the many architectural and artistic wonders of this structure.

The foregoing excerpts prove some very interesting facts about the colored Americans, which can not be said about others in this country, enjoying all the liberties, privileges, opportunities, rights and protection of the American government.

In the first article reproduced these Southern white men had undergone a change of heart and had seen and realized the folly and fallacy of their prejudices, traditions, bias, customs and practices.

If they were not speaking out of emotion due to the sadness and solemnity of the occasion, then they are to be congratulated and complimented for breaking over these undemocratic and un-American barriers and admitting that color is not a determining factor in manhood and womanhood.

We would to God that more Southern whites would reach the same conclusion regarding the colored American as the two mentioned in the first article; and, if America is to play any important part in ridding the world of the menace to civilization and liberty, she must see to it that this country, the South not excluded, practices what it is attempting to preach on the battlefields of Europe.

Democracy must become a practical, workable, every day proposition and colorphobia must be relegated to the scrap pile.

In other words, a change of heart is absolutely necessary, especially in Dixie, where American citizens are disfranchised, jim-crowed, segregated, lynched, burned at the stake, maltreated in various manners without a protest from those in authority and where no efforts are made to eradicate these damnable and diabolical acts and actions.

In the second article the colored American looms up as the most dependable man in America today, because of the fact that the race has never afforded a traitor and that much can not be said of any other race in this country.

Whoever heard of a black German? It is due to the fact that the colored man's patriotism and loyalty are true and tried that only race soldiers are employed to guard all the buildings in Washington; yea, to even see that no harm befalls President Wilson, other officials and dignitaries.

This is a signal honor conferred upon the race, yet despite our proven loyalty, fealty, patriotism, dependability and unyielding devotion to the Republic, in many parts of this country we are treated worse than canines and felines.

Will the American white man ever take enough time to look around him and see who has been his best friend since the early days of the Republic until the present momentous period?

Will he ever be willing to remove the fetters and shackles from the colored man's hands and feet, recognize and treat him as an American citizen?

The Observer cannot see now—with the facts concerning the colored American's pure, undefiled and undiluted Americanism being fully known and generally admitted—any real Americans and exponents of the doctrine of democracy can continue to ignore, maltreat and treat with disrespect and contumely such loyal, faithful and law-abiding citizens.

The colored soldiers are going to war under very trying and adverse circumstances and they deserve unstinted praise for the spirit they are demonstrating in this respect.

They are leaving their loved ones with practically no protection from the howling and cowardly mobs, and the very government that they are serving is unwilling to guarantee their loved ones protection. Has the world ever beheld such a spectacle in all its history?

If the colored soldiers were assured that their wives, daughters, sons, fathers, mothers, sweethearts and other dear ones will be protected like other American citizens, then they will become more enthusiastic, patriotic and determined warriors.

When an alien enemy was lynched in Illinois a few weeks ago President Wilson asked that a full investigation be made and the guilty parties punished.

When a bunch of white hoodlums inaugurated and maintained a reign of terror, murder and arson against American citizens of East Saint Louis, Illinois, President Wilson was like a sphinx.

When a delegation of representative race men conferred with the president recently and asked him to employ his high office to blot out lynch law, citing the then recent Tennessee case, President Wilson was surprised and averred that he had heard nothing about it.

Numerous other incidents of such a nature have been perpetrated upon colored Americans and the governors of these mobocratic states have scarcely raised their voices against such hellish, brutal, atrocious and barbarous demonstrations.

Not only is it imperative to pursue a different policy and program insofar as the colored American is concerned, but the very future safety and perpetuity of the Republic depend upon the abolition of these undemocratic, un-American and un-Christian practices.

"To every action there is a re-action" and ofttimes certain acts prove to be a boomerang, rebounding against the perpetrators and tolerators and spectators.

THE NEGRO PARADE.

In point of numbers, enthusiasm and fidelity to a cause, the parade of negroes in Atlanta yesterday was a tremendously significant demonstration.

The employers of negro laborers, factory "hands," porters and workers in stores and office buildings generally united in extending their colored employees a half-holiday, and homes throughout the city were practically closed for the afternoon in order that the colored servants, maids, butlers, chauffeurs, gardeners, etc., could either participate in the parade or view it from the sidewalks.

Patriotism was the keynote of the whole program—patriotism and country service.

The purpose of the demonstration was to quicken the spirit of loyalty and patriotism of the city's negro population to manifest the negro's fidelity to the government in the war crisis, and to signify his willingness and eagerness to put forth his best effort in his country's behalf.

It was a splendid success, and it will do good.

All along the route of the parade the marchers were liberally applauded by their white fellow citizens, who were much impressed with the spirit of the occasion and who gladly contributed to its success.

The colored American is willing to fight and die for this country, but he wants the same considerations shown him as those conferred and bestowed upon others here—and he does not want to WAIT UNTIL THE WAR IS OVER to come into his rightful inheritance and possession of the rights and privileges of an American citizen.

He has been fooled so much by sweet promises until he looks with a sheepish eye upon all this "after-the-war" stuff.

He is supporting the government's war activities NOW; he is conserving food NOW; he is readily going to the camps to train to fight for worldwide democracy NOW; he is fighting NOW; yea, he is dying NOW.

What will America do for him, his father, brother, mother, sister and friends NOW?

If the foe is to be defeated (and that is absolutely imperative) and victory ultimately perch upon our standards, a change of heart is necessary and that at once.

THE NEGRO'S HOUR.

To the Editor of The Express: The colored subscribers and readers of The Express appreciate the broad spirit portrayed in the editorial of the above title which appeared in your paper, as also the articles appearing of late in your paper showing the better side of the negro.

This sentence stands out and commands attention: "This is the negro's great opportunity to show the world his Americanism." We feel that the negro has never shown anything but "his Americanism." From his entrance into this country, to date, he has always been a loyal citizen, ever ready to shed his blood or give his life for these United States. The first blood shed which consecrated this nation to freedom, in the great American Revolution, was that of a negro, Crispus Attucks; black sailors were with Perry on Lake Erie; black soldiers fought at the Brandywine; at Bunker Hill; at Forts Pillow and Wagner; the heroic fighting at El Caney and San Juan Hill in Cuba, wrested victory from defeat, although Roosevelt received the glory; the recent feat of the 10th Cavalry at Carrizal speaks volumes for the negro's Americanism. And he is making his presence felt in France. A recent dispatch tells how two brave negroes withstood and defeated the attacks of ten times their number of Huns. Wounded, though they were, rifle jammed, yet they fought hand to hand with their knives, and with these weapons accounted for three of the Kaisers' Huns and prevented the capture of the American troops.

We feel that it is the white man's "great opportunity" to demonstrate his "superiority" by recognizing the true American spirit of the negro and give him a man's chance.

The negro is a reader and is cognizant of the havoc wrought by the Bolshevikis not only to their own Russia, but the deep blow given the allied cause in this great war which has delayed victory and will cause the shedding of blood by thousands of our own sons; we are aware of the trouble England is having with the Irish, and how disloyal they have been; and we know of the destruction caused by the I. W. W. in our own beloved country; but, with these various examples of people who are dissatisfied with conditions and treatment rendered them, and with the degree of success which they have attained in their efforts to disrupt their government and thwart its war plans, they hold no inspiration or invitation for the negro. Although he suffers proscriptions of various kinds, although he is mobbed, tortured and burned and disfranchised, he answers in the spirit that actuated David when he cried out, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him."

In Cuba, when the yellow fever was killing more white troops than the Spaniards' bullets, a colored regiment was called to attention, the dire need for nurses was laid before them, and the evident danger was stressed; when volunteer nurses were called, the whole regiment, as one man, stepped forward for service. This was repeated and those black boys came forward again as one man, ready to give their lives to save their white comrades in arms. Was not thus "his Americanism" beautifully shown?

Measure the negro by the American standard of patriotism and he will make 100 per cent. If it is by volunteer service, then we point to two regiments of infantry and two of cavalry in the regular army; in the National Guard we have the 8th Illinois, the 15th New York and a battalion from Ohio and the District of Columbia; if in the National Army, then we have the report of the War Department that, based upon population, the negro has a record of 33 per cent while the white draftees stack up only 25 per cent. There are fewer desertions and fewer claims for dependents or exemptions among the black troops than among the white troops. If it is in the purchase of Liberty bonds, then we have the record, based on the wealth of the two races, and the negro leads in the purchase of bonds. You will find Red Cross cards in negro homes as well as in white homes, buttons on negro coats as well as on the white man's coat. And when it comes to spy and traitor, he goes over the top with banners flying which have never trailed in the dust of bomb throwers and munition destroyers, nor presidential assasisns, nor Kaiser agents.

Drafted Negroes Off for Camp.

To the Editor of The World:

While writing this I am standing at the west entrance to the famous Court Square, Memphis, Tenn., watching the parade as it proceeds down Main Street. There is much color in the parade, for it is composed of 810 colored draftees and their friends, relatives, sweethearts, dressed in all the flaming colors of the land. If it were not war-times one might think it was a dental parade from the display of teeth.

This was the colored people's day. The banners were many and to the point—"To Hell With the Kaiser!" "Don't Cry, Girls; We Go Kaiser-Hunting." "We'll Do the Fighting; You Raise the Food." "When the Huns See Us Coming They Will Go Way Back and Sit Down." "Berlin or Bust!" "We're Going to Château-Thierry."

Fully 25,000 people gathered at Union Depot to see the boys off for Camp Dodge, near Des Moines, Ia. Rev. Mr. Griggs in his address to the drafted men said: "We have no misgivings as to what you boys are going to do at the front. You are going to live up to the best traditions of your race. When the hour comes for the great American offensive you are going to toss all fear to the winds and march steadily in the face of the runfire until you reach the enemy's hiding-place, using bayonets and rifle butts, fists and feet, until the foe is fully routed."

First N. O. Colored Officer Tendered Reception in Church

Presentation by Mayor Behrman of a pennant in honor of his son, Captain Stanley Behrman, who commands a negro company "somewhere in France," and the unveiling of a service flag containing 14 stars, featured a patriotic programme and reception to Lieutenant Herman Martin, probably the first New Orleans negro to receive a commission in the American army, in Grace Methodist church Friday morning.

Lieutenant Martin recently completed the officers' training course at Camp Funston, Kan., and is in New Orleans on a short visit. The reception followed the patriotic service and was held under the auspices of the Red Cross.

Short talks were made by Rev. R. W. Kinchen, pastor of Grace church; H. L. Scott, John Hall, Professor Wicker, of Bienville school; R. C. Metoyer, Lieutenant Martin and John Curtis.

Eighty Selectmen from Third Ward Parade to Station.

Eighty negroes from the Third Ward, called in the draft, were escorted to the Terminal Station Friday afternoon by members of the Tammany Social and Aid Club and members of the Red Cross Auxiliary of that ward. The procession, forming at Camp and Gravier streets, was headed by the Onward Band which played a dirge-like march—probably the greatest restraint ever suffered by such a musical organization.

The leaders carried a banner which proclaimed, "Our boys to the front for the U. S." A mounted police patrol headed the parade which marched in lively step considering the pelting rain. Friends and relatives showed little emotion, there being an air of holiday spirit prevalent.

Negro selectmen from nearly all the local draft divisions also left Friday.

The Negro and the Flag

A long train on the Southern pulled out of Hickory with three cars with negro men going to the training camp. They were a husky lot, fine of physique and lustily enthusiastic. There was a large crowd about the depot to see them off and the train pulled away amidst some of the loudest shouting heard in Hickory in many a day. These negro recruits went away happy. The laughter and the singing proved that, and from the rear coach one of the number kept the flag flying in the breeze. The colored soldier is above all things proud of the flag. It was in North Carolina that the refrain, "We'll never let the flag hit the ground," originated, and it was the North Carolina darkies that carried the song to the front. If one is curious to know if the negro will fight, he will only have to let a negro soldier see him slight the flag.—Charlotte Observer.

STRIKING PARADE OF NEGROES STIRS ALL BIRMINGHAM

Splendid Conduct and Cheerfulness of Selectmen Is Declared Amazing.

In the downtown district of Birmingham many were still talking Tuesday of the remarkable parade held Monday afternoon in honor of the close to seven hundred negro selectmen who left for Camp Dodge, Des Moines, Iowa.

It was a remarkable parade in many respects, somewhat informally gotten up, but in it marched bankers, newspaper men, leaders in many commercial and industrial lines, and many veterans of the Gray as well as the Blue. The parade was led by E. E. Spangenberg, who followed Chief Martin Eagan and the mounted police escort, and after him came the committee, Jacob Burger, J. D. Rosenburger, and several newspaper men. A little further back could be observed, close to the Boys' Industrial Band, Commissioner Truss and Commissioner-elect Burruss, Dr. George Stuart, Commander Bernstein of the Spanish War Veterans, Commander Chapman of the Grand Army of the Republic, with a small band of the boys in Blue, and Commander Cullom of the United Confederate Veterans, with a few of the boys in Gray.

Officers Present.

There were three officers from Camp Dodge, Iowa, and they made real striking figures behind the committee; there also was Captain James B. Hutchinson, of the United States Army. The leading negroes and the honor committee, with Oscar W. Adams as chairman, also made a fine showing.

It would be hard to make an estimate of the number of negroes who were packed around the Sixteenth Street Baptist Church and the surrounding streets and the parks, and still more difficult to give the number of those who lined the sidewalks and streets along the line of parade, the estimates running all the way from 25,000 to 60,000.

S. aviation units now preparing for overseas service. Among this notable group were Sergts. Frazier, J. S. Williams, Miller, E. J. Peek, F. Bethel, Covington, L. Shields, M. Jefferson, Deconta, A. Brown, H. Tipton, R. Timberlake, L. S. Harris, J. L. Lightbourne, S. Reynolds, Samuels, Corp. Stevens, Sergts. Johnson, S. Irby, Barclay and S. M. Peal.

The entrance of these men in this branch of the service marks a great epoch in the history of our people in the United States and shows to the world the wonderful revolution that this war is working.

NEGROES GET CALL TO FORT WAYNE

Total of 461 Are Ordered To Aviation Camp in Minnesota

The Adjutant General yesterday received a call for 461 negroes to be entrained for Fort Wayne, Minn., during the two-day period beginning May 1.

The call specified 461 laborers and levellers to report to the commanding officer at the aviation mobilization camp. This is approximately two and sixteen hundredths per cent of the first class allotted to the State. It is specified that only negroes qualified for general military service should be sent. This call, apparently is urgent, for it takes priority over the last call for 481 white men to be entrained for Fort Scriven, Ga., during the five-day period beginning, May 10. The quotas of the various counties on call has been apportioned. Eight men will go from Wake No. 1 and six from Wake No. 2.

NEGROES TO RAISE FUND FOR AIRPLANE

Will Give the "Crispus Attucks" to the Government

Patriotic Negroes of Boston have initiated a movement to emphasize their patriotism and a committee is being formed which will have in charge a campaign to raise $10,000 by popular subscription among the Negroes of the state for the purchase of an airplane to be presented to the government. The airplane is to be named the "Crispus Attucks," in honor of "the first man to shed his blood for the cause of civilization during the war of the revolution." Simon Swig of the Tremont Trust Company will be the treasurer of the fund and will make daily reports of its progress. The promoters hope to raise the money within 30 days.

TRAIN AT FORT WAYNE

Twelve labor companies composed of Negro selects are to be formed at Fort Wayne for service with the aviation section of the United States army signal corps overseas. These men, to be picked from various cantonments and camps, will remain at Fort Wayne long enough to be properly organized and trained. About 2,500 in all will pass through the local post.

In order to provide for the social welfare of the Negro soldiers while they are here, the National League for Woremn's Service is planning to open a down-town club room similar to the one that this body maintains for white soldiers. Every effort will be made to furnish wholesome entertainment for the Negroes and they will be given a chance o meet representative Detroiters of their own race. A canteen also will be operated.

BY LEN G. SHAW.

ALICE'S Adventures in Wonderland had nothing on the experiences of Private Ephraim Jordan when it came to viewing the unusual.

From the moment Private Ephraim Jordan left his home in the little village down in Virginia where he was born, and from the narrow confines of which he had never ventured in the twenty-two years of his existence before Uncle Sam called him to the colors, until he left the street car at the entrance to Fort Wayne, the journey had been one unending round of surprises that made the encounters of the aforesaid Alice with the fabled Cheshire cat and the dodo and the other marvelous dwellers in Wonderland seem decidedly commonplace by comparison.

As Private Ephraim Jordan climbed stiffly down from the street car with a score of other recruits from the southland, all his earthly belongings on his back or in the shiny fiber suitcase that he handled as carefully as though it was a genuine alligator bag, shuffled through the gate past an alert sentinel, and up the roadway, across the bridge that leads over into the old fort, there was little in his appearance to suggest the fighting man. His clothes hung loosely on his angular frame, his shoulders drooped unevenly and his feet seemed as if made of lead.

There was only one hopeful sign—Private Jordan was all eyes. He hadn't overlooked anything of consequence on the long trip from the south, and now he took in every detail of his surroundings, from the neatly uniformed sentry, with a formidable looking pistol at his side, to two happy-go-lucky fellows from the guardhouse atop a two-wheeled garbage cart drawn by a slow-moving mule, and off across the greensward to where several men were spreading bedding from the tents out in the sunshine for its daily airing.

To be perfectly honest about it, Private Jordan wasn't quite sure why he was at Fort Wayne—but he was there and he wasn't worrying a bit about the future.

He had heard something about the great war which the United States had entered; but in the quietude of his southern home its grim realities had not been in evidence as they have in the large centers of population, and particularly in Detroit, where soldiers who have been invalided home from the trenches or discharged because of injuries received at the battlefront are a common sight.

Two Weeks Works Change.

I saw Private Ephraim Jordan two weeks later—and an officer at the fort had to identify him for me. I doubt whether his own mother would have been able to pick him out from the hundreds of uniformed men who swung off across the parade ground in even lines that won the commendation of the hard working officers charged with the task of whipping these raw recruits into shape. The drooping shoulders had disappeared; the angular frame was encased in a neatly fitting khaki uniform and the leaden feet were handled with the lightness and precision of a drum major on dress parade.

The transformation was almost beyond belief; but it was typical of what is being accomplished at Fort Wayne, where the more than 1,300 men who make up the construction and labor companies for the aviation section of the signal corps are being trained.

Aside from a handful of officers, they are all Negroes. Almost without exception they come from the south—Virginia, Georgia, Alabama, the Carolinas, Mississippi, Texas. Most of them had never been away from home and knew absolutely nothing of the outside world. What work they had done was in the cotton or tobacco fields of odd jobs around town that were just sufficient to keep body and soul together in the easygoing fashion of these people.

Under the draft they were taken from family and friends, transported to a distant part of the country and planted in environments that were as foreign to their accustomed daily routine as humane instincts are to a Hun aviator.

The object of this move was to convert these men into skilled mechanics and laborers for service with the American forces overseas. It has proved a big task, but everyone in any way connected with the undertaking has buckled in and the results are such as to go far toward refuting the assertion that the age of miracles is past.

"In the old days, when a Negro regiment that had been in service for many years received a dozen recruits at one time it was counted quite a task to break them in," said Lieut.-Col. George E. Nelson, commanding officer at Fort Wayne, as we stood one afternoon watching the men drilling on the broad parade ground that overlooks the Detroit river, with its ever-changing panorama of shipping. "When you take more than 1,000 men who don't know the meaning of discipline, much less military training, and who have never had anything to do with army life, and start to make them into soldiers, you have cut out some job. But the way these fellows have taken hold has been a surprise to us all. I wouldn't have believed that a few days could have worked such a change in the men, yet here they are conducting themselves like veterans. It shows what can be done with untrained fellows; and it also shows what men who have the right spirit can accomplish once they get into the service."

Graded by Trades.

Just how many of these men will ever get into the front line trenches is problematical, because the fellow overseas never knows where fate and the exigencies of modern warfare will land him. The engineers who laid down their construction tools in France recently and helped to beat back the oncoming Germans demonstrated this truth, and there have been plenty of other examples.

Primarily these men are being trained for construction work in connection with the aviation section of the signal corps, but by the time they leave Fort Wayne in addition to having been placed where they will be the most serviceable as trades workers they will also have absorbed enough military instruction to make them decidedly valuable in case of an emergency. Every day brings its military drills, its courses of instruction. This is largely for the purpose of instilling discipline and self-control, but it would upon occasion lend itself to a broader interpretation. One who watches these husky fellows and notes their eagerness reaches the conclusion that if properly armed they could make it very uncomfortable for an adversary.

Every man who is sent to Fort Wayne is supposed to have a trade. In practice this works about the same as the modern skilled mechanic who, with all his claims, may not be able to do more than run an automatic machine of a given type.

The first thing after registering them is to find out what these men are capable of doing, so they can be assigned to the unit where they will best fit into the general scheme. It isn't a case of taking a man's word for it. War is a serious proposition, and the seasoned officers at Fort Wayne are taking no chances. They must be shown, and it is up to the recruit to back up his claims with a practical demonstration.

In one corner of the old fort, where also are the barracks for the new arrivals, there has been established a testing department in which recruits are given a tryout.

The vocational tests are broadly divided into carpentry and masonry, these representing the chief labor needs at the present time.

If a man was scheduled by his local draft board as a bricklayer he is given a trowel, mortar and bricks, and is required to demonstrate his proficiency before a group of critical superiors. The first trowel of mortar usually indicates whether the man or the member of the board who classified him told the truth, or whether he is trying to pose as an expert in a line of which he knows nothing. This does not mean that he is made to stand aside if he displays no great proficiency. If he shows aptitude for the work he is coached carefully until he qualifies as acceptable, when he is placed in a unit.

Likewise, if listed as a mason's tender, he is given an opportunity to show how well he can mix mortar, manipulate a hod and perform other duties.

Men Are Encouraged.

The tests in carpentry are even more exacting because of the diversity of demands, which ranges all the way from ability to drive a nail straight to expert cabinetmaking. Entrants in this division are supplied with tools and lumber and are turned loose making tables, desks, racks, boxes and other things that are useful about the post, and which give plenty of opportunity to show what the men are capable of doing.

It is interesting to observe these newcomers as they go about the tasks to which they are assigned. To most of them working under such close inspection is a new experience, and the embarrassment they feel occasionally manifests itself in a well-developed case of stage fright that is amusing to the observer. However, they are treated with consideration by their superiors, are encouraged and are shown the best way to do the prescribed task where assistance of this nature is deemed wise. As a result the nervousness speedily wears off and they settle down like veterans.

It is surprising to note how quickly men who are scarcely familiar with the rudiments of common labor develop into useful toilers under the coaching they are given. It takes a vast amount of patience and perseverance on the part of the instructors; for while the recruits are willing, even eager, the whole proceeding is foreign to what they have been accustomed. But results is what Washington demands, and it is getting them in generous allowance at Fort Wayne. One has only to observe the ragged lineup of new arrivals, some in overalls and blouse, many in ill-fitting suits of the cheapest quality, and who like most "rookies" are unable to distinguish between their right and left foot when it comes to drilling, and then watch these same men a few days later when on parade, to discover the possibilities that are daily becoming actualities. It gives a new and a convincing light on the value of military training in the remaking of neglected mankind.

Although it is probable that these men will not be called upon to carry arms, they are given a strict military schooling because of the physical and disciplinary benefits that accrue. Every day the parade ground is occupied by companies who go through the regular army evolutions, minus rifles. Drilling seems to be second nature to many of these men almost as much as is singing, and in a remarkably short time they march with the precision of old stagers. Proof of this was furnished in the recent Patriotic Drive parade, when the colored troops from Fort Wayne won unstinted praise all along the line for their fine appearance.

Plenty of Diversion.

Camp life in war times is anything but a sinecure. The demand is for seasoned men, and intensive training is the rule at Fort Wayne as elsewhere. For hours every day the troops are put through their paces either in classes, on the drill ground or perfecting themselves in the trades for which they qualified and extending their usefulness to new lines. Major Charles T. Waring, in command of the construction and labor units, and Major John F. Roehl, Detroiter of long standing in military circles, who holds the position of organizer, see to it that the newcomers lose no time in finding their proper place, after which they are kept busy by company commanders.

But it is possible for a man to go stale on work just as surely as continued idleness will render him worthless, so care is taken to divide the daily program in such manner that maximum results will be obtained. Plenty of diversion is provided, of a sort that proves as enjoyable to the spectators as to the participants.

Drills are punctuated with recreation periods in which games are introduced. Rooster fighting is a favorite pastime, and it never fails to draw an enthusiastic crowd of rooters. It is not the old-fashioned cock fight, that even now is occasionally pulled off at night in some out-of-the-way place, in an effort to outwit vigilant police officials, but a perfectly harmless contest between humans that furnishes no end of thrills and comedy. One man mounts the shoulders of another, and with arms folded endeavors by bunting his body against him to dismount an opponent. There is no limit to the number of entrants, and when a couple of dozen of these huskies get to maneuvering in this fashion there is no lack of excitement, with results that often are ludicrous.

Leap frog, with an entire company participating, is another favorite sport; and by the time a man has completed the circle of bent forms he has crowded more physical exercise into a few minutes than the average mortal gets in months. Pullaway and other games also figure prominently.

There are sing-songs such as only a southern negro with his inborn love of melody could stage; and when a couple of hundred of these fellows get started on the old plantation strains and the more modern songs everybody within sound of their voices stops work and listens.

Thus the time passes with work and recreation alternating—"a streak of fat an' a streak of lean," as one coal black Alabaman laughingly described life at the fort. Every day brings new arrivals, who are put through the routine followed by those preceding them. There are at present something over 1,300 men at the fort, and this number is being augmented constantly. Although they have been there a comparatively short time, most of them are fit for overseas duty and are anxious to go to France. They want to see "the big scrap."

Lieut.-Col. George E. Nelson, United States signal corps, is the commanding officer at Fort Wayne, others of the post administrative staff being Major Henry L. Schelling, M. R. ITY AT CAMP UPTON, UM OF 367TH INFANTRY TO BE OPENED THIS MONTH

The New York Age. Jan. 19, 1918.

(BY WESTER A. WALTON)

Two highly interesting and distinguishing phases of camp life made an indelible impress on both eye and mind when I visited Camp Upton last Friday week. One was the bigness of the camp —from a materialistic standpoint; the other was the existence of racial amity which is very much in evidence

None could but marvel at the great, natural panorama showing thousands of khaki-clad soldiers in the making and hundreds of low buildings which may be seen as far as eye can reach—north east, south and west. None could do other than look on with appreciative wonderment at the precision and definiteness with which officers and draftees go about their work.

But to me the greatest of many great spectacles was that of the white soldier and the colored soldier, the Jew and the Gentile, meeting on perfect terms of equality as comrades in arms and preparing, as true Americans, to give their lives if necessary, "to make the world safe for democracy."

At Camp Upton one may speak of "Christianity" and " democracy" without mental reservation. There these terms are more than present-day shibboleths. They are not mere figures of speech. Down on Long Island no attempt is made "to keep a soldier in his place." His status is not determined by the color of his skin. All men meet and greet, and sometimes eat, as men and brothers.

Naturally, my interest at first centered in the 367th Infantry, made up of colored draftees and commanded by Col. James A. Moss. However, I had not been in camp very long before I discovered that the colored draftees were not set off in a prescribed territory as if they had the small-pox. I soon learned that the most cordial relations existed between the races and the doctrine of "the brotherhood of man" was practiced as well as preached.

In the cafeteria conducted in connection with the hostess house of the Colored Y. W. C. A., I found white soldiers and workingmen dining, and it is said that there are times when more white draftees frequent the place than colored.

Races Meet at Y. M. C. A.

It is common knowledge at the camp that some evenings there are as many white draftees as colored in the 367th Y. M. C. A. building where the time is pleasantly spent playing the piano, singing, looking at motion pictures and playing checkers. The Y. M. C. A. officials have provided a large building for white soldiers, but many prefer to visit the 367th Y. M. C. A., where they say they have a better time. The Negro's unfailing good humor, coupled with his penchant for singing and making merry under any and all c nditions, has created quite an inviting atmosphere at the colored "Y."

The Knights of Columbus Hall is within a stone's throw of the headquarters of the 367th Infantry where basketball teams of the regiment practice several nights during the week. A more cordial welcome could not have been extended a party of colored men of which I was a member, upon visiting the hall to watch a class of white draftees receiving instructions in how to use the bayonet. The place was packed with white soldiers, several of whom vied with Manager E. J. Ryan in trying to be affable to the colored guests.

A few months ago some wealthy person donated a sum of money for the erection and maintenance of an officers' club at Camp Upton. The clubrooms are now ready for occupancy and the commander of the camp has issued a notice that ALL officers are eligible to membership upon the payment of the small admission fee.

In this instance the social bugaboo was dropped and there will be no foolish cry raised of "social equality." There is not much likelihood of the colored officers invading the clubhouse either in large or small numbers as the result of this broad and fearless stand of Brigadier General Johnson, for they are not obsessed with a desire to socialize with their white brother officers. But they find mental comfort in the thought that they have been invited to become club-members and have been accorded the proper consideration to which their position entitles them.

White draftees do not experience great mental anguish when they salute a superior officer whose skin happens to be colored, nor does a junior white officer show embarrassment when he has to salute a colored officer who is his senior. Such army regulations are obeyed in a matter-of-fact sort of way; hence, there is no racial friction. The race problem usually bobs up only when one group of Americans fighting for "a real democracy" seeks to check the progress and keep down another group of Americans. The stronger group is not guilty of this incongruous attitude at Camp Upton.

In speaking of the existence of racial amity at Camp Upton I do not wish to give the impression that there is absolutely no race prejudice at the big training camp. It is a fact, however, that at this camp where nearly 50,000 men are in training race prejudice is the exception rather than the general rule.

The 367th Infantry Auditorium.

One of the buildings destined to attract more than p sing attention at Camp Upton is the 367th Infantry Auditorium, now in course of construction. When completed there will be nothing like it on the grounds. One hundred carpenters, together with roofers and electricians, are working daily to have this spacious building, to seat five thousand persons, completed by the fourth week in January.

The master mind directing the erection of this auditorium is Colonel Moss, a man of vision who takes delight in doing big things. He has probably tackled about the biggest proposition of his career in his efforts to build a $40,000 auditorium during wartime, when material is scarce, labor is high and the financial demands being made on our charitably-inclined citizens are many.

Colonel Moss is sanguine over the outcome of his pet idea and is making extensive preparations to have the big building formally dedicated sometime this month. He points with pride to the fact that the members of his regiment have subscribed for nearly $15,000 worth of bonds, and more than half of the sum has been paid in. The public has been asked to purchase the remaining bonds, which are being sold for $10 each and upwards.

When finished the auditorium will be used during the inclement weather for drills and will also prove ideal for target practice and lectures. Various forms of amusement will be given for the entertainment of all soldiers in the evening, and a nominal price of admission will be charged. The bonds will be redeemed from the net proceeds realized from the entertainments. Colonel Moss believes that the goodfellowship existing between the races will be strengthened by draftees of all races meeting nightly at the auditorium.

The 367th Infantry is domiciled in a most desirable section, a fact generally conceded. It is only a ten-minute walk from the Long Island Terminal to regimental headquarters and convenient to postoffice and other centrally-located camp buildings.

At Camp Upton the draftees are not inconvenienced by the coal famine. They have plenty and are not a bit backward about using it with a heavy hand to warm the barracks in which they live. No quail on toast or Delmonico steaks are to be found on the soldier's menu, but he is given good, wholesome food, and as much as he wants. His meals are not served on expensive china, nevertheless the utensils are clean and serviceable. Of the many chefs at camp the head of the culinary department of Company A, 367th Infantry, stands out prominently. When I refer to his ability to prepare toothsome morsels I am not speaking from hearsay.

In December, the 367th Regimental Exchange was opened. The exchange is a store where articles of wearing apparel, papers, magazines, fruit and delicacies to appease the inner man are sold. There are twelve exchanges at Camp Upton. The colored regimental exchange is in charge of former Sergt.-Major Green of the Twenty-fourth Infantry. The veteran warrior was made happy one day last week upon receiving word that his exchange, although the youngest, had done the largest business during the month. The stock carried is valued at $14,000, and three civilian clerks and one accountant, all colored, are employed to assist Sergeant Green.

Next to Colonel Moss, Capt. Walter B. Williams is the best known officer of the 367th Infantry. He has seen twenty years' service in the United States Army and was a corporal in the Twenty-fifth Infantry when Colonel Moss was a second lieutenant. Captain Williams is dean of the colored officers of the regiment and his words of advice carry weight. He is a strict disciplinarian and highly respected by fellow officers and drafted men. Captain Williams is assistant regimental adjutant and is a valuable aide to his chief.

Colonel Moss' regiment is so far made up of over three thousand infantrymen, exclusive of members of the machine-gun company. It will be increased numerically before long by the arrival of several hundred drafted men from Porto Rico. The colored officers are young men of the highest type and compare favorably with the white officers. As for the colored draftees, they are showing the beneficial effects of systematic training, regular habits and army discipline. Many of the draftees knew little of discipline before going to camp. Having to respect position, particularly when the superior is a colored man, is something new to some.

No one goes to Camp Upton without paying the "Buffaloes" a visit. They are the central figure of the trainin camp—a camp where real Americanism is not a hollow mockery and where racial amity and good will reign.

Afro-American 8-2-18

Tent--Regular Army Men Cause Trouble

Camp Meade, Md., July 31.—Colored draftees from various sections continue to pour into this place and there are now estimated to be about nine thousand here, more than at any one time before. A number of the Baltimore boys are connected with the 808th Infantry, the new regiment recently formed here, but a number are in the Depot Brigade and the Engineers' Corps. There is not a single commissioned colored officer at the camp and in the Depot Brigade almost all of the non-commissioned officers are white. This, of course, makes things seem a little different from the time when the 368th Infantry and the 351st Artillery were here. The Infantry had all colored commissioned officers and in the Artillery all the non-commissioned officers were colored.

There has been some talk throughout the camp of the forming of colored artillery regiment here, but nothing has been stated dfinitely from the War Department.

REGULAR MEN HERE.

Recently a number of white regular army men have been stationed here and last week ninety colored non-commissioned officers and privates of the 24th Infantry were sent here. These men, most of them non-with the various companies of the 808th Infantry and are helping the commissioned men to get the rookies in shape.

Some friction, it is said, arose between some of the white regular men and the colored draftees last week, tnd resulted in disturbances in which honors were evenly divided. The colored boys were outnumbred on the first night and were defeated, but on the second night, with the aid of reinforcements, held the fort. These bouts are said to have been fistcuff affairs and not as serious as was reported by some of the soldiers in Baltimore. Efforts on the part of the reporter to find out particulars concerning the fracas were fruitless, and no one was willing to be responsible for a statement further than to verify the fact that there had been some race trouble. Dr. Cabinass is said to have brought the affair to the attention of the authorities at the camp with the result that he was assured an investigation would be made.

"Y" SITUATION "PECULIAR."

The situation in the "Y" huts is peculiar and one would have to be there every day to study out its psychology. At B-38 where General Cabinass is the generalissimo, are, for the most part, the boys of the Depot Brigade. This hut, it will be remembered, was for the most part, the particular property of the boys of the 368th Infantry. At D-39, which is under the general direction of B. B. Church, white soldiers are largely in the majority. This seems to make very little differnce as far as the white soldirs are concerned and Mr. Church, as well as his assistants are treated with every courtesy that could be expected from the soldiers they serve. It may also be stated that Lacey Flagg, one of the sons of Rev. L. S. Flagg, is one of the hustling assistants of Mr. Church. Young Flagg is at present busily engaged in getting together an orchestra and has promised to have it at the Community Club in Baltimore as soon as it is organized.

The 808th Infantry is now stationed almost in front of the Mid-way station of the W. B. & A. For a "Y" hut they have a large tent. There is a "Y" hut almost within the space occupied by the colored boys, but for some reason they do not go there to be served. Just why this is cannot be learned with any degree of certainty. It is known however, that the colored boys were served at this hut when the 808th was first placed there. It is also certain that there has been no trouble between the white and colored soldiers at this hut. It has been hinted that this policy of humiliating the boys of the 808th by placing a tent at their disposal when a hut is so close by is due more to the white secretaries at this particular hut than to the General Association. Nevertheless, the fact remains that the colored boys are served at the tent and if they are not barred from the "Y" hut they are certainly not given a cordial welcome.

To experience the difficulties of a "Y" hut located in a tent, one would have to have been here Monday afternoon when the wind was blowing a gale and later when the rain came down in torrents. Mothers, sisters and daughters of the soldiers are also very greatly inconvenienced when they come to visit the boys of the 808th. There are over two thousand men in the 808th and when their women friends come to see them the only place they have to entertain them is the tent with absolutely no privacy for them.

GOING OVER SOON

Some of the men in the Engineering companies have been given leaves of absence for several days to visit their relatives and friends. This is taken to mean that they are preparing to "go over" soon. In fact, a number are expected to leave this week.

LINK WEAVER IN 808th.

Lincoln Weaver, who is known to almost everybody in Baltimore, having acted as one of the pharmacists at Fennel's Drug Store, for several years, has fallen into his invariable "luck." He is now regimental supply sergeant of the 808th. "Link" is of the opinion that this position is only temporary and he is said to be casting sheep's eyes at the position of regimental sergeant major, the highest non-commissioned office in the regiment.

War Enthusiasm at the Waldorf

When the Negro Troops March By

N. Y. C. HERALD
MARCH 23, 1918

Enthusiasm had its innings in the Waldorf-Astoria from two angles during yesterday. In the evening the first detachments of negro troops from Yaphank marched from the Pennsylvania Station on their way to the Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory and in passing through Thirty-third street attracted occupants of the rooms on the Astoria side to the windows. For half an hour the enthusiasm caused by the excellent marching continued, and just when it was subsiding the employes of the hotel received the best news they have had in many a day.

Daniel J. Coleman before enlisting as a seaman in the navy was an elevator operator at the Waldorf for five years. His father, Dennis J. Coleman, has been head porter at the hotel for twenty years. Last evening he received a letter announcing that the Navy Department has commended his son for courageous action following the sinking of the Alcedo off the coast of France.

COLORED REGISTRANTS GO TO TRAINING CAMP

INDIANAPOLIS (IND) NEWS
APRIL 20, 1918

THREE BANDS IN PARADE OF MARION COUNTY MEN.

683 TOTAL FOR THE STATE

Marching in a parade that included three bands, 303 colored registrants in Marion county left the colored Y. M. C. A. shortly after noon today on the first leg of their journey to get the Huns. The men were from ten of the eleven local draft boards in Marion county and entrained this afternoon for Camp Zachary Taylor where they will begin training in the national army.

The colored men who left today were the first colored selective service registrants to be called from this county. In all, 683 colored registrants were sent to Camp Taylor from Indiana today, Marion county supplying nearly half the total. This quota of colored men is a part of the first call of the draft.

Report to Boards.

Practically all the men reported in the early forenoon to their local boards and marched to the colored Y. M. C. A., where a farewell dinner and reception was held for them.

Shortly before noon a crowd of relatives and friends, estimated to be about 1,500, had gathered at the colored Y. M. C. A. The men filed into the gymnasium, where tables had been set for them. At the close of the dinner Mayor Charles W. Jewett gave a farewell address.

Headed by a band and a number of the prominent colored citizens the men marched from the Y. M. C. A. to the union station. The friends and relatives were not permitted to enter the train sheds until the men were in the coaches. Although some difficulty was experienced by the police in hold back the anxious relatives and friends, the entrainment of the men proceeded without any interruption. Each group of registrants was in the charge of a leader appointed by the members of the local boards.

Spirit Complimented.

The spirit of the colored men in answering the call to service has been complimented by several of the members of the local boards. William F. Werner, a member of the local board for division No. 1, said:

"Not one group of the white men we have sent to camp displayed a finer spirit than did the colored men of this district. They seemed anxious to go, and when they gathered at the headquarters of the board early this morning they sang patriotic songs and cheered for the United States. I believe that if they had stayed in front of my drug store another hour I would have locked the store and gone with them."

The number of colored registrants sent to camp today is as follows: From division No. 1, 33; division No. 2, 100; division No. 3, 24; division No. 4, 78; division No. 5, 25; division No. 6, 4; division No. 7, 11; division No. 8, 10; division No. 10, 10, and from the division from Marion county, outside Indianapolis.

NEGRO SELECTMEN WILL LEAVE TODAY

Eight Hundred and Ten to Go to Fort Dodge.

WILL MARCH TO STATION

Great Crowd Expected to Bid Them Farewell, as This Is Largest Contingent Leaving Memphis Since War Began.

MEMPHIS TENN APPEAL
JUNE 20, 1918

The 810 negro selectmen leaving Memphis at 4 o'clock this afternoon will be given a farewell which promises to go down in the memory of those leaving as one of the most patriotic leave takings ever witnessed by Memphis troops, either white or colored.

At the head of the parade will march bands and the Colored Knights of Pythias. The knights in full uniform will give a military bearing to the march. and other colored fraternal organizations, including the Masons and the Knights Templar, will fall in line in front of the parade.

Selectmen from city boards Nos. 2, 3 and 5 will assemble at the central police station at 2 o'clock and at 2:30 they will move down Main Street behind the band, to be joined at Beale Avenue by the selectmen from city board No. 4. Selectmen in board No. 1, at McLemore Avenue and Rayburn Boulevard, will meet at that board and will march up Rayburn Boulevard to the station to the tunes of an excellent brass band.

Forty policemen will be detailed by Chief of Police Burney this afternoon, to be assisted by 800 Boy Scouts, in keeping order among the crowds. These men will be stationed at the train, where the most excitement is expected to take place—that of bidding sweethearts, wives and mothers a fond farewell.

J. Q. Eaton, chairman of city board No. 5, addressed a meeting and roll call of selectmen in boards Nos. 2 and 5 at 9 o'clock yesterday morning. Mr. Eaton impressed upon the men the fairness with which they were to be treated upon arrival at camp. He explained that they were to receive the same treatment as the white men and any other information to the contrary was no more than pro-German propaganda.

City board No. 3, of which Squire A. J. Williford is chairman, had roll call at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and settled all matters relative to temporary deferment of classification and other matters of importance to the men leaving. Earl Sims, a former Pullman porter, was made captain of the 114 men leaving from this board. Sims has provided automobiles for all the men leaving from his board and a special automobile for Squire Williford and other board officials.

The commandant of the Knights Templar asks that any business man who has a member in his employ release him for the afternoon that he may take a part in the gay farewell to the 810 selectmen. He asks this as a personal favor and has expressed his thanks through a letter to those offering to help him in this way.

A notice is sent to all members of the Lone Star Company No. 7, uniform rank of the Knights of Pythias, to be at the Pythian Temple, 247 Poplar Avenue, at 2 o'clock for the dress parade. A part of the notice reads:

"Main Street will be given to our boys who are to be entrained this afternoon for Fort Dodge, and our conduct and deportment on the streets should demonstrate our loyalty."

OUR SOLDIERS AT CAMP FUNSTON ARE A CREDIT TO THE NATION

The Topeka Plaindealer April 26, 1918

Business Men Who Objected to the Black 92d Declare They Have Set a High Moral Standard for Their White Brothers.

COLORED PHYSICIANS AND NURSES ARE NEEDED

Government Should Select Race Men and Women to Care for Them.

We visited Camp Funston the past week and found everything moving smoothly in the 92d Division, of which Major General Ballou is in command. The colored soldiers seem to be in fairly good shape, except they are short of uniforms, and we think the government should rush up uniforms for these soldiers, as so many are doing guard duty, and we saw men shivering during the recent cold spell because they were so poorly clad. We do not see why they have not been clothed before this time, as most of the white soldiers of the 89th Division are clothed.

There have been organized different division battalions such as the 349 Merline Gun Batt. Headquarters' Train for military police; 317th Ammunition Train; 317th Supply Train; 317th Sanitary Train; 317th Engineers. This is a part of the 92d Division, while other parts are in other training camps training for engineers, telegraph operators, infantry and other departments along with this division.

The government should see to it that colored trained nurses are placed at the base hospital and also at the medical officers' training camp, and also that colored physicians be placed at this institution. There is no reason why this should not be done, and no cause unless it is prejudice. The average colored and white person knows that white nurses or male attendants will not give colored soldiers attention they need, especially if such white persons be southerners, and then there are a great many northerners who will not give colored men the proper attention. We think it is due the mothers and wives of these colored soldiers to feel at ease about their boys being properly cared for, because they know that if people of their own color are in these institutions there will be no cause for anxiety. Prejudice exists, and it is the duty of the colored people of this country to write President Wilson and their congressmen and ask that these things be provided for. The colored men have participated in all the wars of this country, and many times victory has been due to the valiant fighting of the colored soldiers. Perhaps before this great struggle is over it will be the colored soldier who will put the finishing touch on the kaiser.

They have a training school of about sixty young men, of whom several are from colleges and are taking the training under the instruction of Captains Dean and Barbour. These two gentlemen were formerly in the regular service of the army and know the regulation tactics and rulings from A to Z. We are proud of our colored officers and the great record they are making at Camp Funston. We interviewed several men of the other race, and they say they have the cleanest camp and best organization at Funston. This is due to a large majority of the officers who are working teeth and toe nails night and day to make success. This proves conclusively to our minds that all colored regiments should be officered by colored men as far as practical and as fast as they become efficient. The men do better and will fight and be disciplined better, as colored men know the needs of one another.

There are a few among the commissioned officers who, if they should ease down a little, would find it would be much better for them. Some seem to have forgotten their race pride and think now since they are in the army the race should bow to them. They are unmindful of the fact that it the newspapers and the general public who have to assist them in getting what is due them through the army and navy circles. We have tried to talk to a few of them about matters of importance both in a business and military way, but some were so self-important and knew so much, that it was almost disgusting for a man who is fighting the battles of the race to lose time with them. One young man has already been sent from the army for disobeying rules and playing sick, slipping off from the camp and going to town and remaining out for two days visiting and having a good time. When he was called for he did not respond, so he was ordered out of the service. Now we hope such will not occur again. These men would not rest until they went to the training camp and were commissioned for this particular service, now it is their duty to live up to the rules, study the methods and different codes of army regulations, and teach the same to the men under them. Much time could be spent profitably in lecturing the privates along the lines of everyday matters, for instance, the state in which they are camped, the name of the camp, the names of the commanding officers, and different places on the ground. We were surprised when we asked a guard where the major general's headquarters were and he directed us to the captain's and sergeant major's quarters. Some of them do not know a non-commissioned officer's emblems from those of a commissioned officer.

The Y. M. C. A. under Mr. Arthur Hardy, assisted by Mr. Aaron Green is doing fine. We are sorry to note the serious illness of Father Van Leu who is now in the hospital with meningitis. He is loved by everybody, and all hope for his recovery.

A temporary hostess room has been opened for the colored ladies at Camp Funston, where they can go and meet their husbands, sons, and sweethearts from eight in the morning till 5:30 in the evening.

We shall from time to time call the attention of the public to the doings and conditions of the colored soldiers at Camp Funston. We have an eagle eye on those officers who are delivering the goods and doing good work in the national army.

CHARLOTTE, N. C. OBSERVER

Efforts made late yesterday in Charlotte and at Camp Greene to obtain information having a bearing upon the announcement from the office of Adjutant General Young that 2,000 negro drafted men would be mobilized at Camp Greene failed to develop anything of a definite nature. Army officers at the camp in position to know of the plans for the immediate future for the camp denied knowledge of the expected arrival of negro soldiers there.

The local selective service boards had not late last night received orders to send negro men to Camp Greene.

In the absence of information to the contrary, the dispatches from Raleigh were generally accepted here by civilian and military officials as being correct and official.

Camp Community Auxiliaries Know Loyalty and Shipbuilders Give Him First Prize as Riveter

The Soldiers' Comfort League, another war relief organization, is also rendering service to the colored soldiers.

The first national war relief organization to be formed for the care of the negro soldiers was the Negro Circle for War Relief, organized by Mrs. Emily Bigelow Hapgood, who is the only white woman in the organization. The headquarters are at 489 Fifth Avenue, and units have been formed throughout the country. The colored women of the organization living in this city formed an ambulance unit, waged a campaign and secured sufficient funds to purchase an ambulance, which has been turned over to the government. The ambulance is now in France in active service. This unit was formed December 6, 1917, and has twenty members under the leadership of Mrs. Dora Cole Norman, who planned the campaign and was largely responsible for its success.

Another war relief organization among negroes was the Welfare League of the 367th Infantry, of which Charles W. Anderson, ex-Collector of the Port, and one of the most prominent colored leaders of the country, was made president. Through the effort of Mr. Anderson this organization has done much for the regiment, which prior to its departure for France was stationed at Camp Upton. Colonel James A. Moss was the colonel of this regiment, and before it sailed for France Mr. Anderson was called to Camp Upton and made an honorary member of the regiment, which distinction is believed the first to be given a private citizen in this country. Another prominent member of the Welfare League of the 367th Infantry is Dr. Gertrude Curtis, who organized a knitting unit of forty members who knitted sweaters and other things for the men of the regiment which were of great help to the men during the winter.

Delving Into Economic Needs

Another prominent negro war worker is John M. Langston, who is the chairman of Local Board 140, which has the largest number of draft registrants in the world. The National League on Urban Conditions Among Negroes, with headquarters at 2305 Seventh Avenue, is addressing itself to the economic needs and opportunities that are opening up as the result of the war, and is succeeding in placing colored labor in many of the large plants that had been closed to them prior to the war. This league is also stimulating interest in the Liberty Loan and war thrift campaigns. The director of the loctl urban league is J. H. Hubert, a young negro who has large experience in social work and who is a graduate of Morehouse College and also of the New York School of Philanthropy.

The morale of the negro soldiers gave much concern to the leaders of the negro race, and one of the matters that struck them as being of grave importance was the matter of proper reading for them. This led to the organization of the Negro Books for Negro Soldiers Movement, with headquarters at 61 Bible House, and was the result of an article written by Henry F. Downing, the manager of the organization, calling attention to the need of the negro soldiers being supplied with books written on negro history by negro writers. The movement has been indorsed by some of the most prominent men and women of both races throughout the country, as well as by the American Library Association.

In Red Cross And War Relief

The chairman of this organization is Mrs. Lelia Walker Robinson, who is one of the wealthiest colored women in America. She has been active in the Red Cross, and made the first contribution to the Negro Circle for War Relief. Other officers are Louis W. George, the Rev. J. W. Rankins, secretary of Foreign Missions of the A. M. E. Church, and William Webb.

The call for men and women to go overseas has been splendidly answered by negro men and women throughout the country. Mrs. Helen M. Curtis, wife of the late J. L. Curtis, Minister of this country to Liberia, and Mrs. A. W. Hunton, two colored women of this city, were among the first to go to France to work among the negro troops. Over two hundred young negroes have gone as Y. M. C. A. workers. Max Yergan was the first of these young colored men to go, and he was assigned to work among the troops in Africa and India.

The colored Red Cross workers have won signal praise. One of the most active was the 319th Chapter of the American Red Cross, with headquarters in the 15th Infantry Armory, and which was the first group of colored workers to become affiliated with the Red Cross.

They have a membership of about four hundred, and have sent over 50,000 surgical bandages to headquarters and over 100 sweaters. Six of their members have just completed the three months' course given by the Atlantic Division for instructors, and they were the first colored group to finish this course. Their names are Bernice Austin, Henry Rudd, Virginia Carel, Lucy Cole, Nettie Block and E. Boyle Hollar. The colored women have been active in all of the Red Cross drives, and in the recent parade under the direction of that organization 2,000 colored workers marched.

Negro Holds Riveting Record

As the result of the war many new economic openings have been created to assist in the adjustment of the problems that would arise relative to the negro. To meet this situation a negro bureau of economics of the War Department was created, and Dr. George E. Haynes, a negro educator of Fisk University, was placed in charge of it. He is a graduate of Yale University and a post-graduate of Columbia University, from which he received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy.

Mrs. Harriett Barrett, a colored woman of Virginia, has been appointed on the Committee of War Camp Communities to make a study of conditions as they relate to the welfare of the negro soldiers near the cantonments. She is the president of the Virginia State Federation of Women's Clubs, and is a graduate of Hampton Institute.

Negroes working in the large shipyards of the country have made fine records, and recently Charles Knight, a young colored man from Maryland, broke the world's riveting record.

THINKS IT WILL GO FAR TOWARD MAKING RECRUITS BETTER SOLDIERS.

Mayor Pierpont has addressed a letter to Prof. R. R. Wright, president of the Georgia State Industrial College, congratulating him upon the excellent showing made by the negro soldiers previous to their departure for Camp Gordon. The letter says:

"Allow me to heartily commend the patriotic manner in which the colored citizens have answered the call of their country and the stirring encouragement that has been given to them by the men and women of their race. From all that I hear the meeting conducted by your committee at the auditorium on yesterday was very inspiring to the morale of the men who were about to leave for camp to prepare for war.

"The memory of it will no doubt go with them through the period of preparation and make them better men and better soldiers. The knowledge that their people look to them to make a name for themselves at home and abroad must prove a factor of much force in developing them into obedient and courageous soldiers."

CAMP DEVENS TO GET 3000 MORE COLORED

April 13, 1918.

ABOUT 2200 FROM FLORIDA REST FROM NEW ENGLAND.

Camp Devens, Ayer, April 9, 1918—Nearly 3000 more Colored men are to be sent to this camp in the five days following April 26, at the same time that 7000 white drafters are responding to the second call of the second quota, it was learned here today.

About 2200 of them will come from Florida selection boards. The rest will be from New England and New York State, men whose call has been deferred until arrangements will be made for caring for Colored troops here.

It is positive that they will be quartered in tents here in the 9th and 10th Battalion, which are to be added to the Depot Brigade. Their quotas are divided as follows: Massachusetts, 206; Rhode Island, 34; New Hampshire, 2; Connecticut, 209; New York State, 105.

The white quotas to come here in the five days following April 26 are divided thus: Massachusetts, 5604; Maine, 919; Vermont, 421.

It was announced at division headquarters today that the contemplated plan to quarter many of the Colored draftees in tents would not be put into effect, as there is said to be room enough in the depot brigade and the overflow barracks to take care of all the men who will come here in the next draft quota.

Not Only Teaches Huns to Respect His Bayonet but Makes Big Sacrifice for Red Cross Work

N Y C TRIBUNE
AUGUST 25. 1918

By Cleveland G. Allen
Negro Editor and Publicist

OFFICIAL reports have held the status of the American negro in France at a high point, from the steady labor of the stevedores at the ports to the courage of the black bayonet users. to which even the Hun has borne unwilling testimony. But little has been told of the war work of the negro at home, though the record is one of which he is and may well be proud. In raising money, in providing the auxiliary organizations that care for the regiments, in camp, community and Red Cross work the American negro has set high marks.

This has been in spite of vigorous efforts made by the German propagandists—perhaps more vigorous than with any other one class—to undermine the negro's loyalty. Even before America entered the war, and for some time after, German agents were circulating through the South and among the negro communities in the Northern cities, suggesting insurrection and promising everything for a separate negro state under German protection to a farm and a Ford for individual negroes when the Kaiser won.

Vigorously Exposed German Agents

The flurry caused by their work has passed. The resentment, always smouldering, against the lynching of negroes has been quieted by the President's proclamation and the way in which it has been received throughout the country. Negro leaders everywhere have been constantly active in warning their people that now, of all times, was not the time to let race feeling get the better of them, and they have carefully and vigorously exposed the German agents and their claims.

Perhaps the most pestiferous of all the German propagandists was a man named Freudenheimer, who worked among the negroes in Harlem. He was reported to the government by negroes, and twenty of them aided by their testimony in the conviction which brought him a twenty-year sentence.

The result of the negro leaders' work shows in the fact that though there have been some 3,600 persons charged with disloyal utterances not one is a negro. Nor was there a negro among the twenty-three who have been charged with writing threatening letters to the President.

The sacrifices the negroes are making to-day are more pronounced than at any time in his history, and if some of the figures do not look large, let it be remembered that the race is barely half a century from slavery and that his means are slender. The negro believes that he is an integral part of this country, that his whole future lies here, and that of all the mixed groups in America he should be the last to falter. Moreover, he wishes to prove that he is one of America's most valuable assets; he knows that the country is engaged in a life-and-death struggle, and it is going to measure him by what he does.

Quick to Respond To War Call

When war was declared and the call to the young manhood of the country went out the negro was quick to respond. He did not wait for the draft call. The 15th New York Infantry (now the 369th) was the first of all the militia regiments to reach Federal strength. Incidentally, it was one of the first militia regiments to go overseas, to get into the trenches and to receive mention in the dispatches.

When the draft law passed the War Department planned to provide negro officers, and an officers' training school for colored officers was established at Des Moines, Iowa. The course was the same as at the other training camps, and at the first commencement over one thousand young negroes, gathered from all sections of the country, were commissioned, and shortly went to work to build the negro draftees into a fighting force. Since then other training camps for colored officers have been held, and to-day there are close to 2,000 negroes wearing shoulder straps.

The draft, of course, brought the full quota of colored boys. To-day there are in the army 157,000 negroes, of whom 28,000 are in regiments which have been reported in action on the Western front. With the entrance of such a large number of colored men into the army the War Department realized that there would arise problems that would require peculiar tact and judgment in the handling. This led to the appointment of a negro in the department whose duty it is to adjust these problems and to advise the Secretary in regard to the peculiar needs of the colored people. This appointment was given to Emmett J. Scott, one of the best known of the younger leaders of the race, who for fifteen years has been connected with Tuskegee Institute as secretary.

The Question of Colored Nurses

Mr. Scott in addition to his duties in the department has been active in organizing the colored people of the country for war work both at home and abroad. He recently called a conference of the colored leaders and editors in Washington, where for three days the problems of the negro inside and out of the army were thoroughly discussed. This meeting resulted in the beginning of a national movement.

The question of using colored nurses in the Red Cross service has also been adjusted by Mr. Scott, after months of discussion. They are now being accepted for overseas service with colored troops, many have been enrolled and a few have already gone abroad.

In visiting the cantonments where the colored soldiers are stationed Mr. Scott has made a thorough study of conditions surrounding their moral, spiritual and physical welfare and has recommended many measures making for their improvement.

The spirit that is being shown on the part of the students in the higher institutions for the education of the negro may be seen from a statement made by Private Ernest Pollard, of the Utility Corps at Camp Merritt and for eight years a professor in Howard University, in Washington. Professor Pollard states that there are 400 students of this university in the various armies, and that at least five of its professors are commissioned officers. Lieutenant T. M. Gregory, of that institution, is in the Intelligence Bureau, in Washington.

Dr. Robert R. Moton, who succeeded Booker T. Washington as the principal of the Tuskegee Institute, and one of the foremost of the negro leaders, states that there are 600 students and alumni of that school who are actively engaged in war, and that the school has been given over to the government for the training of colored men as officers. Dr. Moton has been making addresses throughout the country calling the negroes' attention to the opportunity that is presented to them for service, and urging them to buy bonds and stamps. He has been forming Boy Scout troops among the colored boys of the South to teach them discipline and to keep them in a state of preparedness. He was recently made the chairman of a Red Cross society, with headquarters at Tuskegee.

Wilberforce University, another of the schools for the higher education of the negro and of which Dr. W. S. Scarborough is the president, is also being used as a training school for colored officers.

The negro has been a liberal supporter of all the war financial movements. When Secretary McAdoo made his first trip through the country on the first loan drive the colored people of Little Rock) Ark., presented to him a check for $50,000 from the Mosaic Templars, a negro fraternal organization of that city. The negroes of Jacksonville, Fla., in one meeting in the third drive subscribed $250,000, and it is safe to say that the colored people of New York have subscribed in the neighborhood of $1,000,000.

The colored school children of Public School 89. in West 134th Street, sold more than $48,000 of bonds to the negroes of this city. At the recent session of the National Colored Women's Club, which met in Denver, it was announced through its president, Mrs. Mary B. Talbert, of Buffalo, who was the first colored woman to be graduated from Oberlin College, that the colored women of America alone had subscribed $5,000,000 for Liberty Loan bonds.

The Organization Of War Relief

Shortly after the war came the organization of various war relief associations among the negroes. One of the first to be formed was the Woman's Auxiliary of the 15th Infantry, to aid relatives and families of the men. It was organized by Miss Elizabeth Farzier, the first colored woman to be appointed a school teacher in this city, and it has been praised by Governor Whitman and Colonel William Heyward of the regiment. Colonel Theodore Roosevelt sent the auxiliary a silk flag in recognition of its services.

FORTY-SIX NEGROES GO TO CAMP TODAY

ASHEVILLE N C GAZETTE
APRIL 30. 1918

The city exemption board inducted forty-six negroes into the military service yesterday afternoon, and the men will leave for Camp Jackson this afternoon to begin training.

The men were tendered a reception at the Y. M. I. last night and were equipped with comfort kits by the members of the colored auxiliary to the Red Cross.

A number of the men who were due to be inducted into the service yesterday have been transferred to other local boards for induction, and will go to other camps.

175 NEGROES LEAVE FOR TRAINING CAMP

DALLAS TEX NEWS
MAY 1. 1918

EXEMPTION BOARDS REPORT DECIDED CHANGE IN ATTITUDE TOWARD WAR.

Several thousand negroes of Dallas went to the Union Terminal Station and gave a rousing farewell to the 175 negro soldiers who left here last night for an army training camp.

"My baby, I'se proud of you," said one negro girl as she kissed her sweetheart good-by. And each of the prospective soldiers seemed to be the "baby" or the "soldier boy" of a number of the negro belles, who were all dolled up in their Sunday clothes. If they were not sweethearts, the drafted negroes certainly have a lot of relatives—sisters and cousins—of the "sweetheart age."

There were sad farewells, plenty of them, but the spirit of bravado prevailed. The negroes were in splendid humor and called forth cheery greetings and farewells to friends and acquaintances. The negroes filled the immense halls and rooms of the station and overflowed into the streets and into the railroad yards. The officers in charge said they could not keep the negroes away from the train; in fact, they didn't have the heart to prevent them from exulting in the exquisite sorrow of final good-byes.

Going to Get Kaiser.

"Going to Get the Kaiser" was a big sign on the side of the train.

"Im comin' back with the Kaiser's helmet on mah head," said one negro earnestly.

W. A. Durham, officer on duty at the Union Terminal Station when the negro soldiers left, said the drafted men and the thousands of negroes who came to bid them farewell were in a fine humor, but were not boisterous. He said "good-looking negro girls just hung onto those negro soldiers like leeches when they said good-by."

"It looked like all of the negroes in Dallas were trying to shake hands with, hug or kiss the drafted negroes," Mr. Durham said. "Everyone wanted to be known as a friend, relative or sweetheart of one or more of the departing soldiers. We could not keep them away from the train. It reminded me of the old fair times in East Dallas.

Eager to Get in Fight.

"Many of the negroes said they were 'going to get the Kaiser.' Others said, 'I'm goin' to get me a German or two.' Most of the drafted negroes already had the soldierly bearing and stood with heads erect and chests expanded. My, my, how those boys would fight, if the girls they left behind could have grand stand seats near by and root for them in the great American style!"

One hundred and seventy-five Dallas County negroes who were called for military duty under the selective service act left last night for the National Army Cantonment at Camp Travis to begin training. Exemption board officials say that recently negroes are showing a different spirit about the war. Last summer and fall the negroes gave the boards a good deal of trouble by failure to report when called for duty. During the last few days more negroes have responded to the calls than could be sent to camp. They say their friends are all leaving and they want to go, too.

Jim Ford, an East Dallas negro, went to the board headquarters the other day and had a talk with Knox Finley, the secretary of the board.

"A whole lot of my friends claimed exemptions, Mr. Finley," he said, "but I didn't claim any exemption. You have already sent a bunch of my friends that claimed exemptions, but here I am at home yet when I didn't claim exemption. I want you to send me just as soon as you can."

Mr. Finley sent Ford in the contingent last night and made him captain of the squad of seventeen men. He wes satisfied.

Larry Berliner wants to go to Berlin. He is one of the South Dallas negroes who begged W. Gregory Hatcher to send him with this increment.

"Berliner had a good job with one of the motor car companies in Dallas, a job that I suppose would pay him three times as much as he will draw in the army," said Chairman Hatcher, "but he wanted to go so bad that I allowed him to go with this contingent. Furthermore, I thought he would make a good man to be captain of the South Dallas squad on the trip to mobilization camp, and so I appointed him leader, with Doc Coleman as his assistant."

North Dallas Contingent.

The North Dallas board sent sixty-four men, the largest contingent of any of the local boards. Their names are: Will Bright, Curtis Harris Moore, Alonzo Powell, Leonard Halloway, Herbert Riddle, Leon Malone, Murphy Clarence Minor, B. L. Harris, Walter E. Tulane, William Green, Willie Howell, Arthrow Bowman, James Friar, Lonnie Elliott, Reuben Grayson, L. O. Rogers, Luther Dryver, Joseph Wilson, Eddie Lemons, C. L. Marcom, Leroy Grissom and Henry D. Stokes.

Lonie Elliott and James Friar were appointed by the board as leaders of the North Dallas squad on the trip to the camp.

South Dallas Sends 39.

The South Dallas contingent of thirty-nine men entrained last night was composed of Coleman Wilder Stokes, Robert Wallace, Corry Bates Emory, Willard Richardson, George Shaw, Erick McVey, Ernest Jackson, Cephas Carmicha, Vastine Harris, Walter Reeves, Leaston Chase, George Cozzie Smith, Joe Thomas, D. G. Gibson, Simon M. Jones, Daniel Howard, Doc Coleman, Ira Crump, Samuel Justice, Ellis Jackson, Roy Preston, Rufus Goodson, Frederick Hill, Joe Davis, Alsia Barron, Frederick Smith, John Freeman, Frank Garrett, Arthur Banks, Charlie Scott, Arthur Wilson, Eddie Goodson, Crockett Wilburn, Manuel Boyd, Larry Berliner, Fred Cooper, Milt McCan, Walter Hendricks and Oliver Sanders.

East Dallas Quota.

The East Dallas Board sent seventeen men as its quota in this movement. These were Artis Allen, Roy C. Middleton, John Henderson, Ray Jones, L. E. Smith, Sidney Wright, Luther Sanches, Albert Clem Long, Ed Davis, Jim Leonard, Charlie Wesley, J. P. Morgan, Tom Hayden, King David Robertson, Melville Posey, Earl Luckett, E. P. Jackson, Ed Vincent, Jim Ford and Harrison Cox.

Oak Cliff Sends Eight Men.

Roy Page Glasgow was appointed by Chairman Simpson of the Oak Cliff board to be the leader of that board's quota of eight men. Others in this contingent were Willie King, 525 East Jefferson; Walter Haley, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Gus Smith, 1116 East Ninth; Angus Walker, 1120 East Ninth; James Richie, Springfield, Mo.; Eddie Henderson, 107 South Fleming, and Noble Grand Penn, Pilot Point, Texas.

Dallas County Contingent.

Forty-seven men were sent by the Dallas County board under the leadership of Frank Anderson. Those in the squad were Foster Davis, Clarence McBride, Gene Medlock, John Simpson, James Dennis, Floyd Bogan, Felix A. Giddings, Lige Jackson, Charlie Lowe, Alfred Jones, Spencer Davis, Johnie Jones, Roy Scott, Jessie Ming, Elija Brown, William Barclay, Thomas Cobbs, Nathaniel W. H. Lacy, Joe Jones, Isaac Henderson, George Fields, William Wade, Albert Gillett, Jackson A. Howard, Robert Jones and Dock Randall.

Within the next ten days there will be three additional movements of men under the selective service act. On May 2 the Dallas boards will send forty-five men to Fort Sam Houston, May 7 eighty-seven men to Camp MacArthur, Waco, and on May 10 ninety-six men to Fort Sam Houston. Other calls are expected within a few days.

South Dallas Board Moves.

The South Dallas board moved its headquarters yesterday afternoon to rooms 322, 323 and 324 in the Slaughter Building. Recently when the Government asked the boards to secure quarters free of rent if possible G. G. Wright, manager of the Slaughter Building, tendered Chairman Hatcher his choice of rooms on the third floor or on the fifth floor. He selected those named above and moved his records and office furniture late yesterday evening.

NEGRO TROOPS PASS IN REVIEW

12,000 DRAFTEES FROM CAMP MEADE—FOUR DIVISIONS—PRES. WILSON AND CARDINAL GIBBONS IN REVIEWING STAND

Baltimore, April 10.—Probably the biggest impression made in the parade of 12,000 draftees from Camp Meade last Saturday was that of the 368th Infantry, composed of colored draftees from the counties of Maryland, Pennsylvania and Tennessee. There were four divisions, the 3,600 men of the 368th forming one.

From the time the men of the regiment began their march in East Baltimore, until they passed the reviewing stand at Mt. Royal avenue and St. Paul street, where President Wilson and a distinguished party sat, they received a continuous ovation. And the regimental band, with A. J. Thomas, played airs that caught the 400,000 people that lined the streets. Then there was the Drum Major, Sergeant Landers, a Philadelphian, whose masterly handling of his staff was the talk of the town. Each of the daily papers was loud in its praise of the band, drum major and regiment.

When the regiment reached the stand where sat the President, his attention, that of Cardinal Gibbons and other notables were immediately centered upon the masterly way the drum major handled his staff. Then the regiment band tarried and played patriotic airs, while the men filed by with heads erect and exact military step. The President seemed pleased at the appearance of the men. The soldiers began their hike to Baltimore from Camp Meade last Thursday. They arrived Friday, and when the 368th marched up Fulton avenue with some whites to camp in Druid Hill Park, they were applauded all along the line. They brought all of their army equipment with them. The men broke camp Sunday morning, hiking all the way back to Camp Meade, where they arrived a tired and happy lot Sunday night, singing all the way.

LINCOLN DIVISION TO HAVE "TANK"

Latest Engine Of War Said To Be On Way To Camp Taylor.

LOUISVILLE KY HERALD FEBRUARY 14, 1918

"Tank" practice may be next on the Camp Taylor program. An armored field tank is said to be on its way here, and officers and men anticipate lessons in the operation of one of the latest implements of war.

In the field officers' school at Camp Taylor, which has been under way for some time, officers are learning minute details of modern warfare as practiced on the western front.

Officers attend this school every day, and, added to general principles and the old army manual governing military activities, the latest tactics and forms of strategy are studied from books and pamphlets recently issued and bearing fresh news from the European fronts.

Every trick invented by the Germans, considered of any importance, will be improved on, if possible, by men at Camp Taylor. Officers are being taught how to conserve the lives of their men and at the same time make all the forces in the field most effective. Conservation of man-power will be considered as important as conservation in other directions, and men at the front will be used so that the greatest good may be accomplished with the least number of casualties.

Negroes Expected Soon.

Five thousand negroes, it is said, are expected to be part of the new increment of drafted men to arrive at Camp Taylor Saturday, February 23. They will be temporarily at least made part of the First Provisional Regiment (negro), now under command of Col. Knight.

One of the saddest deaths of the year took place at the base hospital yesterday when Private Ferdinand Alvey, 24, of Hanover, Ill., and member of Company M, Three Hundred and Thirty-third Infantry, succumbed of pneumonia after a brave fight for life. He had twice undergone operations. His mother, Mrs. Kate Alvey, recently came from Hanover to be at the bedside of her boy. He was the youngest of four children, two of whom she had given to the army.

Another death at the base hospital yesterday was that of Jonas Redding, 23, of Birmingham, private in the First Provincial Training Battallion of the One Hundred and Fifty-ninth Depot Brigade. Pneumonia was also the cause.

A new building fitted up as a cooks' and bakers' school near the Forty-sixth Infantry has been opened for instruction, and is rendering valuable service.

Plan Building For Officers.

In its first efforts to care for the officers separately from enlisted men, plans for a special officers' building to be located near division headquarters, have been drawn by architects of the Y. M. C. A., and as soon as a definite location is decided upon it will be constructed.

D. M. Warren, of South Greenfield, Mo., graduate of the School of Journalism of the University of Missouri, has begun his duties at Camp Taylor as publicity manager of the Y. M. C. A., with headquarters at the executive building.

THE NEGRO AND THE WORLD WAR

(By Harrison Rhodes in the October issue of Metropolitan Magazine.)

There are something like twelve million Negroes inhabiting these United States; roughly speaking, one in every ten of us Americans is black. A statement of the large numbers of Negroes in the country is usually a prelude to the consideration of the black man as a problem." It is here suggested that in time of war the question had perhaps better be how much is he a national asset.

Before the outbreak of the war the Negro had for some years been represented in the Regular Army by the 9th and 10th Cavalry and the 24th and 25th Infantry. These regiments saw service in the Philippines in Hawaii and in the far West, where the Indians called them "Buffalo soldiers"—a name now assumed with pride by the 367th or "Buffalo" Regiment.

In Mexico, particularly at the ambuscade of Carrizal, they demonstrated their value, and the services rendered by black troops in Cuba, notably at San Juan Hill, are still vivid in the public mind. Negroes here and there complain that the courage of their troops there was never sufficiently recognized by the nation, but most white people could assure them that theirs was the best-remembered military exploit of that Cuban campaign; not the less well-remembered, of course, because it afforded an opportunity for good-natured jibe at the popular Rough Riders.

There were colored officers, too, before the war. One Negro, Charles Young, a graduate of West Point, who organized the Liberian Constabulary in the Republic of Liberia as the representative of the American Government, and performed a similar work in the Republic of Haiti, rose to the rank of colonel. The race had one major, Benjamin O. Davis, of the 9th Cavalry; several captains and a great many non-commissioned officers.

With the coming into being of the National Army, the number of colored soldiers has greatly increased. In filling the first draft quota of 687,000 men, the number of colored men called for entrainment was 94,483, almost fourteen per cent. And on June 1st the available figures were that an additional 62,213 had already been called since the first draft, making a total of 156,696.

About 1,000 Negro line officers have been commissioned in the National Army as captains, first and second lieutenants, with approximately 250 colored medical officers in the Medical and Dental Reserve Corps. The 92nd Division and the 93rd Division (Provisional), the first comprising about 30,000 Negro soldiers and the latter so far about half that number, made up of National Guard Units, have been organized, and are commanded by Major-General C. C. Ballou and Brigadier-General Roy C. Hoffman, respectively.

These divisions will embrace, when fully constituted, practically all branches of military service, including Infantry, Engineer and Artillery (Field and Coast) Regiments, Signal Corps (radio or wireless telegraphers, etc.), Hospital and Ambulance Corps, Medical Corps, Aviation Corps (Ground Division), Service Battalions, with men technically trained in all branches of scientific work.

The training of colored officers, after being considerably hesitated over and debated was undertaken last year at Fort Des Moines, Iowa—the Negro Plattsburgh. The training camp was quickly filled up for the four months' course and about 750 commissioned officers were turned out, a large part of them already college graduates.

A colored man from Tuskegee, Emmett J. Scott, is Special Assistant to the Secretary of War, and George M. Haynes, from Fisk University occupies a similar position in the Department of Labor. Mr. George Creel's Bureau thinks it important to send out speakers to the colored population. So that one may say that in many if not in most ways the administration, which might colorably be accused of being Southern in composition and tone, has gone a very long ways towards recognizing and utilizing the colored citizen, soldier and civilian.

One black man in a remote Florida cabin wrote, in some trust and simplicity, a letter to the President of the United States about the drafting of his son, and received promptly a reply from the President's secretary himself, a message of explanation and encouragement to a fellow American citizen which will be treasured many years in the pine woods.

RECORDS OF BLACK BRAVERY.

There were pleasantly picturesque black notes in the war scene at the very beginning. At the declaration of war, it was colored troops who were set as guards around the White House. Some Negroes cynically observe that when one of their officers died, a colored Major, he was not offered a military funeral. But such a disturbing note did not for most Negroes appreciably diminish the compliment to the one part of the American population in which, it was jocosely said, there couldn't possibly be any Germans.

There is a rumor, which though cannot be authenticated, will not down, that General Pershing, when he went to France, absolutely insisted that he should take Negro troops with him. And almost at the outset of America's fighting on the Western front there came home the stirring tale of two black heroes, Needham Roberts and Harry Johnson (it is rather pleasant that it should be Mistah Johnson) who though both wounded by enemy grenades, one on the elbow forearm and left leg, the other on the right hip and left leg, beat off a raiding party of twenty-five Germans, killing or wounding five of them.

It was a good fight, with grenades, rifles and at last a bolo knife. These were cited to receive that wonderful Croix de Guerre of our sister Republic, and it would not perhaps be possible to better the simple description of them in the final phrase of the French text of citation—"good and brave soldiers."

The news was received at home with delight by the Negroes, and for the most part with simple ungrudging and unsurprised admiration by the white press. Indeed on the whole it may be said that whatever may be thought of the colored man in times of peace, we confidently expect him to be brave in war.

There is indeed a long tradition of black bravery, from the day when a Negro, Crispus Attucks was the first man killed in the Revolutionary War, down. There are famous names in the roll, famous that is to Negroes, possibly to them only. Students of America might profitably read this chapter of the nation's history, possibly, shall we say in the Pullman Porters' Review, an admirable publication which probably few people who travel on sleeping cars know.

There are, it appears, 1083 stars in the Pullman Company's service flag; 1083 blacks who hitherto were only modestly ambitious to keep the world well brushed and are now risking their lives to keep it safe for a better future. There has perhaps been in the past something faintly comic in George the porter now he gives you a deepened sense of the solidarity of America, and a renewed conviction that this war is essentially every American's war.

Even before the news began to come from France, experts of fighting thought well of the colored soldier. Colonel Moss, a Louisianian, who is in command of the 367th (Buffalo) Regt. has been considerably quoted. At the outbreak of the war he asked for colored troops and he believes they make good soldiers. But he is scrupulously temperate on the subject and says that it is unwise to talk too much about anyone, black or white, being "able to lick his weight in wild-cats."

But his imperturbability is not perfect for he permits himself to say with an ill-hidden light of enthusiasm in his eyes that "they are the only soldiers that will go into a fight singing." He corrects this betrayal of enthusiasm by an extremely shrewd observation concerning our attitude towards the race. The Negro, he says, gets too much credit when he does a good thing—but he gets also too much blame when he does a bad thing.

Colonel Roosevelt, speaking to the Buffalo soldiers at Camp Upton, made his own pleasantly turned comment on this tendency when he assured the boys that General Bell was there to see that they got what they ought to have when they behaved themselves and also to see that that got what they ought to have when they didn't behave themselves. And the boys roared with delighted laughing appreciation of his humor.

Humor is perhaps not commonly enough considered in appraising the mental equipment of a good soldier. A young lieutenant of the Buffaloes, a Des Moines graduate, puts stress on this point. A soldier who can laugh and sing like the Negro cannot, he points out, be unhappy long nor troubled by premonitions of evil. Not to "care which way the river runs" is in this case a virtue. It does away with complaining and the colored soldier in the camps sums things up with a cheerful philosophy when he says "it's a great life if you don't weaken."

It would be pleasant to linger on this topic with an anecdote or two. The two colored soldiers who in the early days were whittling out dummy rifles from pine boards for drill purposes expressed no impatience with the war department's delays, they only remarked as they plied their jackknives that they were glad they were not in the artillery! A race naturally inclined to contentment.

Let us delay what reports there are from the trenches of actual battle performance and consider something of the situation of the Negro at the beginning of the war. It is rarely plain sailing for that race and so it need surprise no one to learn that at the beginning at least it was not always made easy for the black man to be a patriot and a soldier.

Anyone who was in the South during April and May of last year knows how immediately after the declaration of war a wave of hysterical apprehension ran over the land. It was suddenly declared that the German propaganda had been long and successfully at work among the colored population. There were wild rumors of secret drilling and hidden stores of arms. One lurid unauthenticated tale was of a burial suddenly stopped by the authorities because of the suspicious heaviness of the coffin, which, being opened, disclosed no stiff black corpse but cartridges and rifles!

In some districts there is no doubt that parts of the white population genuinely believed that the supreme horror of the South, the bloody black uprising was at hand. In such moments actual facts count for very little, and there is always the danger that wild talk and armed vigilance committees will bring about the very dangers they seek to avoid. It is a considerable evidence of the South's real deep-lying conviction of the Negro's loyalty that there was as little trouble as there was. In many parts the responsible leading Negroes of the community held public meetings and did all they could not only to rouse the patriotism of their own race but to increase the confidence of the whites.

Gradually, by June or July, the fear died down. Most Negroes will tell you however that the danger was more from the whites than from the blacks. In any case it was a feverish frightening time, and it is just possible that the aftermath of that early suspicion has been the unhappy increase of lynching in the country during the past year, a phenomenon which has certainly not made the path of patriotism any easier for the race of its victims.

The question of course may still be asked—was there German propaganda? And it may be deliberately said in reply that there undoubtedly was. It is extremely difficult to bring forward definite detailed proof. The subject brings into evidence the age-old tendency of the Negro to keep certain things from the whites even from those with whom he is on friendly and confidential terms. This habit is violently denounced by many whites, especially in the South, but it may at least be said that caution and secretiveness are a legacy from slavery days, the persistence of which it is not difficult to understand.

But there is no question but that odd travelers in the backwoods dropped hints at dusk into black ears that the Negro had no flag, and told of some mysterious black republic which the Kaiser at Berlin would like to see in existence. Some facts concerning the treatment of natives in the German colonies in Africa might easily have disposed of the whole matter, but there was no American propaganda at work.

It is almost certain that Berlin, with its almost unfailing misreading of conditions in English-speaking countries had counted on the "black terror." A well-known woman in New York, whose two-starred service flag floats over the most magnificent part of Fifth Avenue, states categorically that an evening some years before the war, on the deck of a yacht at Kiel when she was talking to the Kaiser he turned to her with a certain air almost of gay mischievousness and said:

"I expect in many ways I know as much about America, Mrs. ———, as you do. In some ways I expect I know more. I know things that may happen which you Americans never suspect."

She protested deprecatingly and the night and the Imperial mood being propitious to confidence, he continued.

"You don't know, of coruse, that if America were at war—with me, for example, all the Negroes would rise and join the enemy."

The Germans knew of the days of slavery, they knew too of the feeling

most Negroes have that the process of emancipation is only half completed. Berlin could foresee that even after the war had begun Negroes could scarcely help saying that a nation warring to make the world safe for democracy ought to make itself democratic at home.

And it may have known from spies that before America's entrance into the war many Negroes of the upper and more thinking classes took the Presidential proclamation of neutrality literally and tried to obey it, keeping themselves to a certain extent aloof from the Great War in feeling. To that degree they were pro-German. But the Kaiser and Berlin knew very little of Negro psychology. They did not know that temperamentally it is extremely difficult for the black man to cherish rancor.

He blusters a bit, he talks, but he really does not do much because he does not like to hate his neighbor. One of the most eloquent of Negro orators claimed lately for his people, in a noble passage, that the race is almost the only one which has learned the lesson of not bearing malice. Indeed if it were not so how, after slavery had disappeared, could the two races so soon have settled down into what was after all a pretty fair friendly relation? The carefully built-up structure of Negro disaffection indeed crumbles like a house of cards, if you touch it. And the Negro's attitude to the German propaganda can perhaps be disposed of in a story which Negro audiences greet with uproarious amusement and patriotic delight. The Hun propagandist is represented as buttonholing a black boy and telling him that the colored drafted men are going to get special positions assigned to them.

"Yes, you'll be right forward in the first trenches. And when there is an attack to be made the white men are going to put the colored men all in front of them."

"Is they?" the black boy replied, grinning. "Well, that's all right; that's one time the white folks ain't going to be running over the colored folks!"

Funny, certainly, but, if you think it over, deeply pathetic.

When the war came at last the Negro race rose to the occasion, with really touching simplicity. No observer could fail to see that the Negroes thrilled deeply to the thought that the American flag was their flag and that it was not only their duty, but their privilege to defend it. What ever we may feel them, the colored people feel themselves not African but American.

Have they not indeed drunk of our wells and eaten of our bread for three centuries? The German propagandists told them the flag was not theirs. But it is the only flag they have ever had, and under it, in spite of adverse conditions, they have attained to a degree of civilization and prosperity and happiness, which their fellows have reached under no other. We must remember too that American citizenship, of which some of its white possessors think lightly enough is for the Negro still a great, almost romantic privilege, and that all his hopes for the future are summed up in complete attainment of it and full enjoyment of all its rights and advantages. The race is emotional and the days are propitious for an emotional patriotism.

It is too a simple race, still, as far as the vast majority is concerned, uneducated. There is something very engaging in the direct and definite way the Negroes view war, something also very manly and helpful. In these days of bothersome intellectual sophistications it is encouraging to find one class in the community which thinks that the whole business of a soldier is to kill Germans, a necessity that some whites lose sight of in war talk.

One black soldier told an officer whom he didn't recognize as his general, "No, boss, I ain't exactly thinking about laying down my life for my country. I'se thinking about how them Germans is going to lay down their lives." Nearly every black soldier has cheerfully promised someone at home to bring back the Kaiser's head on a platter. The black imagination jumps all the stages from the registration table to the front line of trenches.

"Well," said one lad as soon as he had signed his name, "when you want me to fight?"

"Ever seen military service?" asked a colored member of an exemption board. "No? Well, you're going to!"

The colored people believe in the colored troops. They truly believe that when enough Negroes are in the fighting line the war will be over. It may be untutored and naive, but it is such beliefs that win wars, such passionate faith behind the lads in khaki that drives them forward irresistibly. Its very simplicity saves it from being braggadocio and makes it instead a home fire burning as all such fires should.

HE DOES HIS BIT FINANCIALLY.

The Negro is of course in no position to give the war the financial support possible to the white. But what he has done will perhaps surprise many. There is time for only a few examples. The North Carolina Mutual and Provident Association, a Negro corporation of Durham, N. C., has taken a total of $100,000 worth of Liberty Bonds. The Mosaic Templars of Little Rock, Ark., subscribed for $80,000 worth. The Knights of Pythias of Florida took $25,000 worth. One Tuskegee Institute graduate, William V. Chambliss, bought $20,000 worth. The congregation of the Ebenezer Baptist Church in Pittsburgh, Pa., invested to the amount of $10,000 and churches, fraternities and clubs all over the land place large blocks of their savings and surplus funds in Liberty Bonds through their official authorities.

The War Savings Stamps campaign resulted, to take one example, in $800 a week being collected in the colored public schools of the capital. A colored banker of Waco, Tex., contributed a full page advertisement of Liberty Bonds and war stamps, as did groups of colored citizens at Louisville, Kentucky; Daytona, Florida, and doubtless other towns.

There are several Negro organizations for doing war relief work, the Circle for Negro War Relief, the National Colored Soldiers Comfort Committee, the War Chest, and so forth. To all of these funds are contributed by Negroes, perhaps the most touching gift of all being one hundred dollars sent to the Circle for Negro War Relief by colored prisoners in the New Jersey State Penitentiary. To the Red Cross too colored people have given money and service, though often under difficulties and discouragements which must be spoken of later.

Difficulties and discouragements must indeed now claim attention, since some knowledge of them will perhaps help the nation in utilizing more fully its colored population.

Even the North had a record of not being wholly favorable to the Negro as a soldier. The old Fifteenth Regiment (colored) of the National Guard, which from France sent back the first stories of Negro bravery and won there its two Croix de Guerre was organized in the face of determined opposition. A bill authorizing such a regiment was greeted with violent protests when it was introduced in the New York Legislature of 1911. Passed in 1912, it was vetoed by Governor Dix. Finally, in 1913, it was passed and signed by Governor Sulzer. Now when Negro troops parade up Fifth Avenue they receive a hearty welcome,—the press almost instinctively writes of "Bronze heroes."

But though the friendliness in the North is fairly evident, there are lingering traces of an inability to take the raising of a colored army seriously. A popular magazine in New York lately printed a would-be popular article entitled "Mobilizing Rastus." This, treating the colored soldier in a humorous and friendly way was quite probably designed to give him and his humble friends pleasure.

Instead it roused among Negroes generally a very genuine indignation They want their soldiering to be taken seriously, and they are undoubtedly over-sensitive about the matter. Yet it is unquestionably true that being a good soldier is a serious thing. As a contrast to Rastus one might quote from a Negro poet who spoke of the colored troops going to France as "Ethiopia paying her debt to the nation which gave the world Dumas!"

The attitude of the South toward the Negro soldier is complicated, difficult to understand, often self contradictory. In the beginning there were undoubtedly many who felt that this was a "white man's war" and who viewed with apprehension the existence during the war and the return after it of a large body of Negroes who had fought on equal terms and who had learned their power to fight. Exactly what was feared it would be difficult to say; probably not armed uprising of the race, but only a general tendency for the Negro to "feel his oats."

And of course any race may "feel its oats" too much. The mere wearing of a uniform makes some people lose their heads. And in any case no one will try to deny the Southern contention that there are "good niggers and bad niggers." Bad Negroes make bad soldiers. There were unhappy outbreaks of violence and lawlessness in some of the Southern camps, and perhaps more such than ever will be known were avoided by tact, diplomacy and persuasion from Washington.

And besides the naturally lawless there is the tendency of a very considerable part of the colored race to make the war and the uniform an occasion for a firm stand for equal rights. It was possibly against this tendency that Major General Ballou's much discussed statement was aimed when he urged his troops not to force the issue of race equality. There had been no definite and final public pronouncement by the War Department on this subject, but it may be here stated with authority that the Secretary of War has taken a firm stand, which is perfectly understood by those leaders of the colored race whom it chiefly concerns.

His attitude is, concisely, that the purpose of the United States army is to win the war, not to settle race questions. If race questions could be settled doubtless no one would be more pleased than he, but such settlements must be incidental to the greater one of defeating Germany.

On the whole it may be said that the apprehensions before the advent of the Negro soldier have not been justified by the results. Governor Manning of South Carolina, for example, made a trip to Washington to protest against the placing of Negro soldiers in the training camps of his State. It was possible lately to read in one of the leading newspapers of Columbia an editorial highly praising the colored recruits for their behavior and saying in effect that it had been a pleasure, if not even a source of pride to have them quartered there.

It was said that the necessity of white privates saluting colored officers was an intolerable, almost insuperable difficulty. There were people who talked as if it might almost be better to give up the war rather than to try to enforce any such discipline. But we hear almost nothing of all that now. The simple common sense of the American army declined to exaggerate or lend undue significance to a mere disciplinary form.

Some of the things which have happened at the cantonments indeed show an almost fantastic disregard of the race feeling which it was said would be so dangerously rife. There are colored Y. M. C. A. huts at the camps and in some of the camps they are constantly resorted to by white and even Southern white soldiers. And at one Southern camp an order had to be issued forbidding white soldiers to use the colored hut, as there was not sufficient accommodation for both races. And it almost came to a point where the segregated white soldiers protested for their equal rights!

The "Buffalo Auditorium" erected at Camp Upton by the 367th Infantry at their own expense or with money raised by them and presented to the camp is the theatre of constant entertainments, and when the "Darktown Follies" or other classics of the colored theatre are presented the white audience is as big if not bigger than the colored, and often bigger than the audience at the white camp theatres.

The singing of the colored soldiers which has been developed under competent training has doubtless had much to do with the promotion of good feeling. No one who has heard a few hundreds or thousands of black boys singing "The Old Flag Never Touched the Ground," "Swing Low Sweet Chariot," or "Little David, Play on Your Harp" can keep from at least a momentary friendliness towards the singers. And when Little David is enthusiastically conjured to jump on his harp and even to slide on it the infectious good nature of the black race generally conquers the listener.

So much for the problem of the actual mingling of the races in the camps. One Negro lad laughingly assured a white boy that there was no harm in their soldiering together he too, so he said, had white blood in his veins, as his ancestors had once eaten a Baptist missionary!

So far we have dealt only with white objections to the Negro's being a soldier—we have still to touch on too great eagerness to force him into the ranks. In some parts of the South—by no means all parts—there appeared on the announcement of the draft a feeling that the Negroes must be taken for "cannon fodder" before the white were heavily drawn upon. The Local Boards of Exemption of Fulton County, Georgia (Atlanta the county seat) and Taliaferro County were so unfair to colored draftees that the Secretary of War ordered their immediate discharge or removal.

In the cases of both of these Boards there were wholesale exemptions and discharges of white men for all sorts of causes or excuses, and (in the case of the Atlanta Board), only six discharges or exemptions granted colored draftees. The unfairness and discrimination was so manifest that the Secretary of War did not hesitate for a moment.

These are of course exceptionally flagrant cases, yet the figures of the first draft are food for thought. 26.23 per cent. of the colored men examined were certified for service, while only 24.75 per cent. of the white men were taken. The Provost Marshal General's office officially says that this difference between colored men and white men is "probably not due to either a diference in physical qualifications, nor to a difference in the applicability of the several legal grounds for exemption and discharge." One can only comment, probably not. But if the Negro is really so much stronger, so much more available for military service than the white man, so much more is he a national asset.

Even outside actual military service there have been what seemed to the Negro discouragements to patriotism. It seemed for example that colored trained nurses should be enrolled and allowed at least to give their aid to the ill and wounded of their own race at home and abroad. No very strong argument against this enrollment was advanced, but for a long time it did not take place. And the Red Cross, which has as a national organization, all the best intentions in the world toward the colored race, encountered many difficulties in carrying them out.

Membership in the Red Cross was, fantastically enough, conceived in some parts of the country to be a social distinction which could never be bestowed upon the Negro. It was even suggested that a "Black Cross" be organized. Difficulties were put in the way of organizing colored chapters, badges and pins were withheld, and surgical dressings produced by Negro women were rejected wholesale. Yet the colored people persisted. The nurses raised money to present an ambulance and Red Cross branches were formed and knitting and sewing do go on.

The Negro is after all an optimist, an opportunist, and something of a gambler. He believes that the war presents the greatest opportunity of service to the country which has ever been offered his race. And broadly speaking he is content to wait for his reward rather than to fight for it now. He believes that if he proves himself a brave soldier in France and a patriotic citizen at home both the white soldier in France and the white civilian here will gain some new conviction that the Negro is a true American and perhaps even a brother American, and that after the war the gates of opportunity will open wide to him.

Of course this attitude seems to trusting to many Negroes, who are instead determined to win recognition as they give service. And what may be termed the "black intellectuals" often say they must "know where they are going in this war." This temper of mind we often encounter in "white intellectuals" who seem incapable of abandoning themselves to the simple patriotic elan. Perhaps neither class quite represents the feeling of the whole people.

A NEW DAY FOR THE NEGRO IN THE SOUTH.

A very prominent Negro said lately that already in the last six months his people had made more progress than in any six months since Lincoln's time. Mr. Emmett Scott's appointment in the War Department is very significant, as is the later one of Dr. George Haynes to the Department of Labor. Mr. Scott's attitude is frankly that he is not in the Department to explain the administration to the Negro but instead to explain the Negro to the administration.

The Ft. Des Moines camp too is symptomatic. One of the chief contentions of the Negroes has been for years that they should be allowed to fight and to work under leaders and supervisors of their own race. When the Government no longer puts out posters advertising for "white men accustomed to handling Negroes,, great step will have been taken, according to the views of the colored people. And every time that a ship or a factory puts Negroes in charge of Negro laborers—as is happening now—an advance has been made.

The enormous migration of Negroes from the South to the North during the past two years is also speeding up the settlement of various problems touching on colored labor. The South is facing the simple fact that the Negro is leaving because he is not satisfied with either social or educational or economic conditions there. And all over the South the better and the more thoughtful element among the whites is coming forth frankly to say that the Negro is so valuable to the South that fairer better conditions must be made and made at once so that he may be induced to stay.

There are of course fire-eaters here and there who say if war is to mean that the Negro is to get equal rights the war had better not be fought. And there is of course the contradictory and saddening increase of lynching which has been one great cause of the migration. And yet on the whole this is a new day for the Negro in most parts of the South.

In the North the war shortage of labor has also given the Negro a new value. Up to the present perhaps, the greatest disadvantage under which he worked was his exclusion from the ranks of organized labor. All efforts by the laboring class for the improvement of their conditions were efforts exclusively for the white man. The Negro, whether he would or not, was looked on largely as a "strike-breaker" and an outcast.

Now at last the American Federation of Labor has made the move, and it is now possible for the Negro to enroll himself. He will thus be brought to the notice of a large element in our population as a fellow worker and even possibly as a human being.

The first international riveting prize went to a Negro, and everywhere hammers in black hands moved more swiftly and more proudly. Provision is now being made by the Government for special training of the young men of the race in technical and mechanical work, which will add to their efficiency as a factor in the army and render them capable of earning a better livelihood for themselves at the close of the war.

Definite arrangements and contracts have been made with several standard schools to give selected students training during the summer and fall in such branches as radio engineering, general engineering, wood-working, electricity, carpentry, auto-mechanics, blacksmithing and operation of motor vehicles of many kinds. Accommodations had in June been provided for about 3,000 men. Several other institutions were under contemplation and the number of men to be provided for will reach about 4,000.

In the army itself the mechanical ability of the Negro is being fostered and utilized. Educated colored men have been afforded opportunities to enlist or qualify for such branches as the Field Artillery, and there are now in active service three regiments—the 349th, 350th and 351st Field Artillery. A training school to prepare officers of the race for these regiments has been established at Camp Meade, Maryland, and it is said that the young men detailed for this training are showing marked adaptability for the intricate work involved.

Many of them are college-trained—graduates from Amherst, Harvard, Yale, University of Pennsylvania, Chicago University and other institutions of the first rank in America. The Personnel Officer of the Coast Artillery has thrown open the doors of this branch to colored men not yet called into active service and announces that there is a need for college equipment and Negroes with the necessary educational qualifications will be warmly welcomed into the Coast Artillery.

There is one regiment of Engineers (the 317th) at Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio, under command of Col. Early I. Brown, and many of the officers are colored. The race is also numerously represented in the Signal Corps at this station, and an opportunity is soon to be given the colored men in the Aviation Corps there or elsewhere.

Thus again we come back to the army and the Negro as a soldier. But as the war progresses it is the Negro at the front in France who seems to call for notice. Here on the battle-line is his real test as an American in the year 1918. Here he, as well as other races not of the old American stock, hopes to be fused into the new Americanism which embraces all. Here on this old and scarred soil, the Negro hopes not only to receive the cross from France but from America his own America, as he feels it, the even greater prize, American citizenship in a broader, deeper sense than ever before.

Testimony must come straight from the front. And happily it is possible to reproduce here parts of a letter to Mr. Emmett Scott from a commanding officer of one of the first Negro regiments to see active service in France. Himself a white man, he speaks for us all with authority.

"I have two battalions in the trenches. The three rotate. Our boys have had their baptism of fire. They have patrolled No Man's Land. They have gone on raids and one of my lieutenants has been cited for a decoration. Of course, it is still in the experimental stage, but two questions of the gravest importance to our Country, and to the Negro race have, in my opinion, been answered.

"First: How will American Negro soldiers, including commissioned officers (of whom I still have five), get along in service with French soldiers and officers—as for instance a Negro regiment of Infantry serving in a French combat division?

"Second: Will the American Negro stand up under the terrible shell fire of this war as he has always stood up under rifle fire and thus prove his superiority spiritually and intellectually to all the black men of Africa and Asia, who have failed under these conditions and whose use must be limited to attack or for shock troops?

"We have answered the first question in a most gratifying way. The French soldiers have not the slightest prejudice or feeling. The poilus and my boys are great chums, eat, dance, sing, march and fight together in absolute accord. The French officers have little, if any feeling about Negro officers. What little, if any, is not racial but from skepticism that a colored man (judging of course by those they have known) can have the technical education necessary to make an efficient officer. However, as I write these lines Capt. ——— and Lieut. ——— are living at the French officers' mess at our division Infanterie School, honored guests.

"The program I enclose gives you an idea of the way I've cultivated friendship between my boys and the poilus. You should have seen the 500 soldiers, French and mine, all mixed up together cheering and laughing at the show while the Boche shells (box car size) went screaming over our heads.

"Now on the second question, perhaps I am premature. But both my two battalions which have gone in have been under shell fire, serious and prolonged once, and the boys just laughed and cuddled into their shelters and read old newspapers. It was getting very warm around the rolling kitchen. The cooks went along about their business in absolute unconcern until the alarmed French soldiers ran to them and told them to beat it. One of the cooks said, "Oh, that's all right, boss. They ain't hurting us none.'

They are positively the most stoical and mysterious men I've ever known. Nothing surprises them. And we now have expert opinion. The French officers say they are entirely different from their own African troops and the Indian troops of the British, who are so excitable under shell fire. Of course, I have explained that my boys are public school boys, wise in their day and generation, no caste prejudice, accustomed to the terrible noises of subway, elevated and street traffic of New York City (which would drive any desert man or Himalaya mountaineer mad) and are all Christians.

"Also that while the more ignorant ones might not like to have a black cat hanging around for fear it would turn into a fish or something, they have no delusions about the Boche shells coming from any heathen gods. They know the d——— child-killing Germans are firing them with pyrocellulose and they know how the breech mechanism works.

"I am proud of what we've done and are doing. I put the whole regiment through grenade (live grenade) practice. Nasty, dangerous business. They did it beautifully. I found one rank, arrant coward, who refused to throw. Said he couldn't. Another threw prematurely after igniting the bomb. We asked him why he did not wait for the command to throw (Barrage.) He said, 'Kunnel, that old grenade—she began to swell right in my hand.' The boys keep writing home that the 'war is not so bad if you just go at it right.' Well, a very wise command somewhere, I don't know where has let us go at it right.

"You know I've always told these boys I'd never send them anywhere I would not go myself, so I went first to the trenches, prowled around, saw it all and came back to the regiment to take in the battalion which was to go in first. When they saw me covered with mud, but safe and sound, they said, 'How is she, Kunnel?' 'She's all right.' I said. They all laughed and then the sick and the lame of that battalion began to get well miraculously and begged to go. Capt. Clark called for twelve volunteers for a raid and the company fell into the last man—all wanted to go—and he had to pick his twelve after all.

"Do you wonder that I love them, every one, good, bad and indifferent?'

May one not add here, do you wonder that they, every one, good bad and indifferent, love the colonel?

There is more pleasant talk, a mention of Jim Europe, and of the fact that they loyally call their village "Bakersville." And finally a cheerful statement that they will "plant the hobnailed boots of the Heavy Ethiopian foot in the Kaiser's face all right." Does anyone much doubt that such soldiers will? Is it not a newer better world where all America's children can so gaily, passionately fight for her? And if we fight for Liberty and win it, shall we be sparing of it to any soldier boys when peace shall come?

NEGRO RECRUITS BREAK TENSION

Relieve Tearful Scene of Departure With Melody, Jokes.

TOLEDO OHIO BLADE
APRIL 29. 1918

A score of negro recruits livened up what otherwise might have been a disheartening departure of 225 selected men for Camp Sherman, O., Saturday morning.

They laughed, joked and sang while on parade and after they entered their coach. Their friends, too, who were left behind, seemed to regard the leave taking philosophically.

Two young girls collapsed near the Union station following the entrainment of the new soldiers. They were taken in an automobile to a physician's office.

The movement was marked by weeping and hysteria. Numerous women, reluctant to see the men go, marched with them from the Armory to the station.

The increment was represented by a large percentage of Jewish young men. In observance of an ancient custom they kissed their fathers, brothers and friends good bye.

The train pulled out at 10 a. m. to the customary accompaniment of whistles. There were 255 recruits, including 109 white and 12 colored men from the Second district, and 92 white and 12 colored men from the Fourth district.

The procession through the downtown section attracted a large crowd because of the entertaining antics of the colored marchers.

Members of the Toledo Patriot league, standard bearers, and a band escorted the increment.

The present movement will be completed Monday morning at eight, when the First and Sixth districts send their quotas.

COLORED MEN CHEERED

NEW BRITAIN CONN HERALD

Members of Draft Board and Friends of Two Registrants Give Them Rousing Send-Off This Morning.

John W. Allen, Stephen Robb and Dr. D. W. O'Connell, members of the second exemption board, today accompanied the two colored draftees to the railroad station at 11:04 a. m. and joined with a big delegation of their friends in giving the men a rousing send off. The two colored men who left were Samuel Hobson and James Mosely, the first colored contingent to leave this city.

There was a good sized crowd of colored people at the depot to bid their friends farewell and one of the men, Moseley, insisted on taking an affection farewell with each of the several colored girls who were present. There was a general spirit of cheerfulness.

THE COLORED MEN OF DIVISION THREE

"Colored applicants are ineligible for Infantry Officers' Training School at Camp Fremont, Cal. "Transportation will be furnished accepted applicants by their local boards to Camp Fremont, Cal."

Three letters of recommendation are necessary by applicants for this school. Lieutenant Fessler has suggested that it will be a saving of both time and money if out-of-town applicants will obtain the classification whenever possible from their local board before calling on the examining officer.

CROQUET GETS GRIP ON UPTON

N Y C EVE SUN
AUGUST 22 1918

Negro Troops Enthusiastic Over Their New Pastime.

Special Despatch to THE EVENING SUN

CAMP UPTON, N. Y., Aug. 22.—Camp Upton's third development battalion offers an interesting commentary on the moral condition of American troops. The colored men in the organization pay no attention to crap shooting and have taken up croquet.

They have not adopted it in dilettante fashion, toying joshingly with the mallets, but have gone after the game in wholehearted soldier style until the battalion area is a maze of wire entanglements, and the balls strew the ground. Every spare moment is given to the pastime.

A croquet epidemic has broken out and a tournament is under way. There are to be croquet leagues, croquet clubs, and croquet lectures by authorities on the game.

The substitution of croquet for crap shooting is considered an achievement, and all the money which would be dedicated to the "knuckle pot" normally is being diverted into the new channel. Lieut. J. E. Rice, battalion athletic officer, is promoting the croquet enthusiasm.

First Lieut. Edward Koenig, a native New Yorker, has resigned his commission and assumed his old rank of regimental sergeant major in order to join a unit which will leave reasonably soon for overseas. Koenig has been in the army fifteen years. Last January he was made a second lieutenant, and soon afterward was raised to first lieutenant.

GEN. O'RYAN STOPS MINGLING OF RACES AT SPARTANBURG

N Y C EVE WORLD
MARCH 16, 1918

Issues Drastic Orders to Prevent Possible Disturbance at Camp Wadsworth.

(Special to The Evening World.)

SPARTANBURG, S. C., March 16.—There has been little if any intermingling of soldiers with negroes here since Camp Wadsworth was opened, but in order to forestall anything of the kind Gen. O'Ryan has issued an order forbidding soldiers to enter the homes or stores of negroes or to loiter in the sections of the City of Spartanburg inhabited by negroes. The order is drastic and will take place with Gen. O'Ryan's famous "Order No. 9" against the use of alcoholic liquors while on the Mexican border.

There has been no complaint on this line among the people here, but Gen. O'Ryan is determined that there shall not be grounds of complaint during the few weeks that the 27th Division is to remain.

Some weeks ago the War Department announced that post exchanges might take stocks of goods with them overseas, but this permission has now been withdrawn and announcement was made to-day that all the post exchanges in camp should go out of business as soon as the stocks of goods on hand are disposed of.

Officers of the 3d Pioneer Infantry (formerly the 5th Massachusetts) paid a formal call in a body yesterday afternoon on Brig. Gen. Guy Carleton commanding the Pro[illegible]al Depot for Corps and Army troops. They took their band along and a feature of the occasion was the music by the fife and drum corps of the regiment. Fife and drum are not provided for in the present tables of organization, but this regiment has always been fond of this class of music and maintains as a volunteer organization a fife and drum corps of 24 pieces, two men from each company. This was the first public appearance of the corps since the regiment came here and it created a sensation.

Officers of the 1st Anti-Aircraft Machine Gun Battalion were hosts last night at a smoker given the officers of the 2d and 3d Anti-Aircraft Machine Gun Battalions. The work is new to all the officers, but they are keenly interested in it. The smoker last night was given as the result of an agreement that the battalion making the lowest score in the first examinations of the officers' school should be the hosts at an affair of this kind. There was not much difference in the ratings, but the officers of the 1st Battalion insisted that they had lost and insisted on giving the smoker.

UPTON'S ROOKIES BECOME VETERANS IN A FEW HOURS

N Y C EVE WORLD
APRIL 29, 1918

Saturday's 3,000 Are Fighting Men Now and 1,600 More Are Due To-Day.

(Special From a Staff Correspondent of The Evening World.)

CAMP UPTON, April 29.—More than 3,000 soldiers from New York, who were not soldiers on Saturday, were initiated this morning in military life when they were roused from slumber by the bugle sounding reveille. One-half of them had slept in barracks over night and the remainder were veterans of forty-eight hours. An additional 1,600 will arrive from the metropolis during the day.

The latest bunch from New York were soldiers before they realized it. The first contingent reached the cantonment shortly after noon Saturday. Before night they were assigned to their companies and housed in barracks in the Depot Brigade. Previous to this they had undergone their physical examination and had been innoculated and card indexed.

Being card indexed means that the qualifications of every man, his occupation, mental and physical make-up and everything about him which is needful to Uncle Sam, has been made note of and filed away where it can be reached in less than a minute. When the first draft reached Camp Upton last September, fifty vocations were noted on the qualification cards. This has been supplemented by sixty more, for Uncle Sam has been learning more and more about the war business every day in the interim.

Among the new vocations in the supplement are included lawyers, laborers, business men, machinists, gunsmiths, mecnanics, coopers, civil engineers, musicians, boatmen, barbers, printers, foremen, construction foremen, refrigerator men, photographers, stenographers, rubber workers, architects, artists, laundrymen, millwrights and writers.

There is use for all classes mentioned and for a whole lot more. In Camp Upton women fill two classes of work, the telephone and the laundry. All other work is done by enlisted men, no matter what it may be, from line work to the laboratory and from carpentry to camouflage. The boys who arrived here yesterday and Saturday were put through their initial course of sprouts in record time. From their physical examinations they were hustled to the Personnel Office, in a building just across the street, where their statistics were noted and each was given a card of identification, so that he couldn't get lost in this city of 40,000 souls.

HERE'S THE REAL THING IN A "FIVE-FIFTEEN."

In charge of the Personnel Office is Capt. William E. Hoyer. He is the P. O., and for assistants he has Lieuts. N. M. Converse, Thomas B. Niles, Richard B. Rosenblum and Frank M. Hourigan. Their work is speeded up by a corps of officers who come down from New York with the men of the draft. There is an officer to each car, and by the time the train reaches camp they have checked off each rookie, taken up his card, answered a million questions about the military and assigned each man to his position and movements. Then the officers hurry back to New York on the 5.15 train to catch the batch coming down on the following morning.

The 5.15 train, instead of being the commuter's transport home, is the theatre train for Camp Upton. Up to New York on the 5.15 and home again on the 11.44. This is the programme for Saturday night for the men and officers who can get away. And all day Sunday, a holiday, they stand around and yawn.

The train pulls out on the minute of 5.15, gets about four blocks away and stops. Starts up again, and just as it gets its momentum stops again for water. Then it goes ahead and then backs up again for more water. Awful thirsty engines. It's off again at express speed, and just as everybody settles in his seat and says "Ah!" it slows down again and stops for no apparent reason. Away it goes again and then comes to a full stop for the same reason. It rattles like a Church Avenue trolley, lumbers like a freight train and spurts like a flyer.

Ample opportunity is given to study the landscape. Trees and more trees and telegraph poles; Medford, Brentwood, Central Islip, a cemetery and the Hicksville Pickle Works. It lumbers through Mineola and dashes into Jamaica—all hands out—and the electric glides into the Pennsylvania at 8 o'clock, without time for a wash-up, let alone dinner. And the theatre lets out in time for the 11.44. Oh, wonderful train is the 5.15.

AN INTELLIGENCE OFFICE THAT HAS INTELLIGENCE.

At the head of the Intelligence Office of the Depot Brigade is Lieut. Joseph Morschauser, a son of Judge Morschauser of the big city. The Lieutenant was destined for a limb of the law, following in the wake of his illustrious father. He graduated from Fordham College Law School, hung out his shingle, and then Uncle Sam said, "Let's be a soldier." So up to Plattsburg went the young lawyer, and in due time came back a young First Lieutenant.

Assisting Lieut. Morschauser is First Lieut. D. L. McCuen, another graduate of the first class of Plattsburg. He, too, was a lawyer, and practised for awhile in New York.

"He's a Philadelphia lawyer," said Lieut. Hourigan, with a merry twinkle in his Irish eyes, "if you know what that is."

Lieut. Hourigan hasn't been out of service for more than a month during the last two years and a half. He was Sergeant of the machine gun company of the old 12th for years and years, and was down at the Mexican border with the former 27th Division of New York. The 12th was about the last regiment to return from Texas. Hourigan had a month's rest and then went to Plattsburg and came back a Second Lieutenant.

He went to Fort Sill and took the machine gun course, and now has the reputation of being the best machine gun man in the National Army, with the exception of some regular officers. Blindfolded, he can take a Lewis machine gun down and assemble it again in three minutes. Lieut. Hourigan is married and has four kiddies.

To expedite the work of singling out men of any avocation who may be wanted in a hurry, the soldiers are listed by numbers, and stickers put on their cards to show the class to which they belong. A green sticker means "expert," an orange sticker, "not so good," and a black, "just fair." It isn't because of the great work that the old 69th has done in France that the green outranks the orange. It is merely a coincidence.

The latest romance of the camp is the engagement of First Lieut. George Ogilvie, assistant to the cantonment Adjutant. It goes to show how swiftly things move in wartime, and that the arrows of Cupid are as true as the shots of the big centimetre guns. Lieut. Ogilvie, who formerly lived at No. 244 West 42d Street, Manhattan, met Miss Augusta Schmidt of Montreal two weeks ago. They are to be married on June 15.

The romantic meeting occurred in camp. Miss Schmidt is a cousin of Mrs. Capt. Hiscoe, and the Captain is Assistant Chief of Staff at Upton. It hasn't been decided whether the wedding shall take place at the home of the bride-to-be in Montreal or at the home of her aunt, No. 27 West 54th Street, New York.

WOE, WOE, FOR THE COLORED BROTHERS.

The 367th (colored) Infantry Regiment is shy one big "Buffalo," George Bell, the seven-eleven negro (that's his size in feet and inches, nothing to do with craps), who came down here last week, blown in by the draft, which he tried to dodge because he didn't like to fight, and has been blown out again on account of overweight. The doctors had to get a stepladder to give "Gawge" a shot in the arm, and the giant thought he was a dead man when they brought up a six-inch needle and a bicycle pump. They couldn't get two cots to fit the giant, and the biggest uniform they had looked like a bathing suit on the Buffalo. Te biggest pair of shoes they had in camp looked, alongside his two steam rollers, like a debutante's dancing pumps. Overheight and overweight was why they let "Gawge" go back to the ranks of Chu Chin Chow."

The crack nine of the 367th (Buffaloes) played a rattling game of ball on Saturday with the Depot Brigade nine, and were beaten in the ninth inning by a score of 11-10. The score was 10 to 12 in favor of the Buffaloes at the opening of the eighth inning, when Lieut. Thomas Ryan, who used to be with the shipping house of Grace & Co., opened up the pearly gates with a three-bagger and the Depot Brigade never stopped till it marshalled seven runs.

This got the Buffaloes' goat, for they seemed to read the handwriting in the sky—come seven, come eleven. And that's what happened. In the last of the ninth the Depot Brigade popped two more runs, making the required 11.

The 367th is very proud of the fact that they have in their regiment a Y. W. C. A. colored hostess house which was dedicated last week. The women were trained right in camp. At the head of the hostess house is Mrs. L. B. Hope, wife of the President of Moorehouse College, in Georgia.

This happened somewhere in America, but was brought back to camp by Lieut. Quigley, who was in charge of a troop train. "Somewhere" on the way his train backed down to another troop train laden with negroes. The colored soldiers were strung along the tracks eating sandwiches and sipping coffee in leisurely fashion, when Lieut. Quigley yelled to them to get out of the way. One darkey made his way across the track, when a fellow Buffalo cried to him from a car window:

"Say, Mo, didn't yo' all hyar the officer tell yo' all to get off the track?"

"Yes, I done hyar'm. Ain't I a gettin' off?"

"Wal, if you all doan hurry, niggah, yo' gwine get yo' 'xemption right yar."

DRAFTED NEGROES OF ALABAMA ORDERED TO CAMP SHERIDAN

Hubbard Also Receives Call For 2,900 White Men to Report to Augusta Camp in July

Two calls have been received by Adjutant General G. J. Hubbard, one for 2,900 white men and another for 4,000 negroes, the negroes to report to Camp Sheridan, Montgomery, for training.

The order for the 2,900 white men asks for men qualified for general military service to entrain during a five-day period beginning July 22 for Camp Hancock, Augusta, Ga., and the 4,000 negroe sare to entrain during a three day period beginning July 29 for Camp Sheridan, Montgomery.

It is ordered that these men be alcted and inducted into the service with the least amount of disturbance agriculture and industry as possible.

CONDITIONS ARE BAD IN FOURTH WARD

Houston Observer 4/20/18

The attention of The Observer has been called to the conduct of women of our race, who are having illicit associations with the white soldiers of Camp Logan in the Fourth Ward around the high school and the cemetery on San Felipe street.

It is also claimed that they carry the white soldiers into their homes and then purchase booze from these ward saloons and beer joints and "tank" the troopers up on liquor.

The Negro ministers had a meeting Wednesday morning at the Carnegie library and laid plans to abate the bad practice, which is going to result in untold trouble if continued.

The ministers further aver that the loose women of our race and the ward saloons combine to throw the most demoralizing influences around the men from the camp and that these conditions can never be remedied so long as the disorderly women and the residential saloons are permitted to operate.

The matter has also been called to the attention of Mr. W. E. Hopkins, executive secretary for the war service commission in Houston and something tangible and definite is imperative at once.

The ward saloons breed and develop this species of women and men and with their continuation in our midst in Houston Uncle Sam is going to lose many soldiers of both races and the city officials are going to have a world of trouble, to say nothing of the federal authorities coping with bootlegging cases.

In the language of Bre'r Ned: "Sumptin' must be did and did at once!"

500 Go to Camp Upton—Will Be Under Command of Race Company Officers

CHICAGO DEFENDER NEWS SERVICE

Washington, D. C., April 5.—Five Hundred splendid young men have been taken from Camp Lee, Petersburg, Va., and sent to Camp Upton, N. Y.

They will there be connected with the 367th Infantry and will be under the command of Colored company officers.

Others transfers are also being made from Camp Lee to other camps, where the men will be under Colored company officers, and it is probable that shortly there will be no Colored drafted men at that camp, from which camp so many complaints have come. This solution of a situation which has given the Colored people and the War Department considerable concern, will be warmly welcomed.

It looks as if the leaven injected into the Camp Lee men by Emmett J. Scott is working admirably.

Believed That the Negroes Will Be Placed in Labor Battalions Near Battle Front

Advertiser 9-15-18

Drafted July 29 and now on their way to a port somewhere in America for embarkation to France, is the record which has been made by the negroes of Alabama. That is 1,500 of the 4,000 have left to join labor battalions and may soon be found on the other side doing their all to win the war for Democracy and justice.

The selectives from Alabama arrived at Camp Sheridan on July 29th and the few days following. They were immediately examined, equipped and in a few short days were in the field drilling as hard or harder than they have worked in a field of cotton, with the sun beaming down and making a temperature of nearly 100 in the shade. The men worked hard and many times it has been remarked by officers and civilians that a more willing bunch of men were never gathered together in any one camp, for they showed readiness to do anything and the work of learning the drills was to their liking, it seems from the fine showing that was made and the quickness in which they were found fit to be sent away.

The 2,500 now in the provisional depot brigade are working hard and looking forward to the time when they will be called to be sent over and it cannot come too soon to better please the men. The men are delighted with what they have seen of army life and especially are they pleased with the "grub" as they call it and the "grub" is having a fine influence in keeping the men in shape to stand the hard tasks which they are given by the officers.

THE GAME IN PORTO RICO

SPRINGFIELD MORNING REPUBLICAN
SEPTEMBER 29, 1918

Negroes Best Players Among All Enlisted Men on the Island

A letter from J. B. Maccabe, director of army athletics in Porto Rico, indicates that the garrisons there are just as keen over baseball as anywhere else and maybe more so, for they will have all year round to play. Maccabe writes that they have been playing an interregimental league tournament, that "is causing no end of interest and excitement." There are four clubs, one representing the training station detachment, the others representing the 373d, 374th and 375th regiments, the latter being a Negro regiment.

Writing of the [illegible] regiment and the parts its members have taken in athletics, Maccabe says: "In justice to the 375th, it is only fair to say that it has thus [illegible] a team made up of enlisted men only. If the regiment had played its whole strength, that is to say officers and men, it would be easily in the lead in the league race. It averages highest, up to date, in all lines of sport."

Evidently the 375th officers, much as they are interested in baseball, draw the line on playing on the same team with their Negro soldiers. The officers of the various military detachments in Porto Rico have a ball team of their own and it is stated that soon an all-star team, made up of officers and men, white and Negro, will be organized, indicating that the spirit of democracy is growing.

In addition to the teams mentioned company teams are being organized all over the island, now that it's getting cool enough to play ball, and the game is booming in Porto Rico.

HOUSTON TEX POST
JUNE 30, 1918

Texas Negroes as Writers.

To the Editor of the Star and Stripes.

The worthy activity manifested by "Our Paper" that led to the sending of a shipload of Mothers' letters across the sea to the ones waiting back home was, it struck the writer, about the last word among its collection of worthy stunts—even topping by a shade, in my humble opinion, the orphan movement.

In my capacity as commander of a company of 250 men, of whom 27 are white noncommissioned officers and 223 are drafted Texas negroes, I did my best to rise to the occasion at the pace you set. I plastered pages of "Our Paper" all over the bulletin board, talked "Mother" to the boys, and had the orderly room supply the stationery (envelopes stamped in vivid red—a violation of A. R. 822, amply justified by circumstances—as per your specifications), and the C.C. pass it out at Saturday inspection.

The results overwhelmed us. They all did it. Saturday night and Sunday morning everybody was doin' it. And Sunday we all worked. That night my mail orderly took a suitcase full of letters to the base censor headquarters, and some unknown captain just shutting up shop peeled off his raglan and sat him down then and there to affix the Great Seal of the B. S.

But this is the thing that will interest: Did you ever censor a letter from a Texas cotton patch darky to his mother? I was irresistibly moved to make pencil extracts from three, anonymously, of course. They weren't ALL like these; but, no matter how high the education of their writers had progressed, those letters all breathed the same spirit—the spirit that makes the American soldier, by and large, a sort of nut that no victim of the Prussian iron heel can ever crack, much less crush. Regardez:

"Mother, when I stop to think what I am here for, and of the thousands that are here with me fighting for the same cause, it makes me feel big and proud to know that the good Lord has given me health and strength to be one of the number. And, mother, you must think often of your soldier boy, and pray that he may return to you, when our country is at peace, just as strong and healthy as when he left you."

That extract is verbatim—not edited in the least by myself. Its writer never had a college education. Had he been just two weeks older the draft would not have called him. He is married, and, as the allotment records show, a class A provider. Also, he is what is termed a 100 per cent man—he is a confidential orderly and never forgets a detail of instructions or routine.

Here is another:

"I never shall forget what you and papa said to me before my leaving for Camp Travis—'My boy, in all your trials do not forget to be true to your country and your God; and, whatever you do, obey orders.' I have been trying to do this—not only while here, but I mean to keep that in my heart throughout my life; not that I may be praised, but that people may see you and your raising in me."

That chap, a full-blooded, dark-skinned, fine-looking negro, was an undergrad in a Southern college for negroes when he was drafted. Like the writer of the first extract, he is a natural leader among his fellows—one of the sort we depend on as a nucleus for good discipline in a command. This extract is likewise verbatim.

And here's another bit, thrown in for good measure—from a letter by a youngster who has rambled over the face of God's leather and learned a few things in the big school, but is not a college man:

"Mother, I am a long way away from you, but my thoughts are always with you. Every day is Mothers' Day for me, for I think of you by day and dream of you by night. Don't worry about me, for I am getting along fine.'"

Pretty good doctrine for all of us of the A. E. F., enlisted men or officers though we may be, to "try on." And may I query: "Was any letter to mother, homeward bound on that famous ship, truer in its ring or tenderer in its sentiment than these three, picked at random from the outgoing mail of a 250-man company? Could any one of us do better than to trim his sails according to the second sentence of that last extract?

And remember: The writers of those letters were our Southern darkies—many of them descendants of black men and women brought to America in the slave ships of the '40s and '50s for which the beautiful French river city of Nantes was noted. It is a romantic circumstance that many of these fellows are here as American soldiers on French soil, offering their lives for the country whence, in less enlightened times, came those who took them from their native Africa to enslave them in the sugar lands of the very nation to which slavery in any form is today the most abhorrent.

The men who sanctioned my making anonymous extracts from those letters are all enlisted men in company B, —— engineers. It must be added that every letter that went out from this company had enclosed with it the touching Mothers' Day pamphlet distributed by the Y. M. C. A. "The Old Man."

Negroes, Using Bayonets, Surely Inspiring Sight

FARGO N D FORUM
APRIL 25, 1918

"One should watch the negroes at our camp attack the dummies with their bayonets to know what a power they will be in Uncle Sam's fighting machine," stated Robert Flynn, former Fargo-Moorhead boy, who is on a ten-day furlough from Camp Dodge and is spending a part of the time in Fargo and at Perham, Minn. He reports that thousands of negroes are in training at the camp and are doing wonderful work with their bayonets and knives.

"Providing they do not get scared they are going to make wonderful fighters and every officer knows it," said Mr. Flynn. "A regiment of negroes from the United States in the front line trenches in France is certain to make a name for its members. I have never seen men grasp the essentials of bayonet work as the colored soldiers at our camp. They attack the dummies with vigor and never seem to tire."

Mr. Flynn is enthused with army life, and says he wants two years more of it before he thinks of returning to civilian clothes. After a trip to Perham, Minn., and then into Itasca State park, Mr. Flynn will return to Camp Dodge. He expects to leave the cantonment in June for France.

Christian Advocate 5-2-18

Of the 150,000 drafted men for the United States National Army whose mobilization was ordered to begin last Friday, 33,365 were Negroes. In some cases States were directed to send their men to camps other than those to which they had been previously sent, due, probably, to the crowded conditions in some camps. The order as affecting Negro troops designated the camps, with totals assigned to each and the States from which they come, as follows: Camp Devens, 557; Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, Rhode Island; Camp Joseph E. Johnston, 2,236, Florida; Camp Lee, 1,886, Virginia, Tennessee; Camp Sheridan, 531, Ohio; Camp Upton, 543, New York; Camp Jackson, 3,512, South Carolina, North Carolina; Camp Custer, 2,023, Alabama; Camp Funston, 505, Oklahoma, Missouri, Kansas; Camp Dix, 298, New Jersey, Delaware; Camp Gordon, 3,499; Georgia; Camp Grant, 3,010, North Carolina, Illinois; Camp Travis, 3,487, Texas; Camp Meade, 2,604, Tennessee, District of Columbia, Pennsylvania; Camp Pike, 7,474, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi; Camp Taylor, 1,350, Indiana, Kentucky.

CHEERFULNESS

A few days ago the war department sent out a request asking home folks to write encouraging and hopeful letters to the soldiers at the front and in the training camps. Says the department: "They should be frequent, cheerful, hopeful and appreciative of the sacrifices the soldier is making for his country. They should be full of family incidents and gossip, all of a cheerful character. They should not contain anything about the trifling alarms and small annoyances of everyday life. They should encourage him by giving him full confidence that his family and his friends stand behind him in the great enterprise he has undertaken."

The value of cheerfulness has always been recognized—both in times of peace as well as in times of war. In this respect our colored friends have set us a good example, and are teaching us a valuable lesson. A colored woman in Memphis was asked the other day what all the racket was over at her house the previous night, and gave her white neighbor the following explanation: "We was dancing and jollificating our husbands and brothers to the war. White folks mou'n their men when they are leaving, and send them away with sad hearts, but we dance ourn, and send them off with songs and laughter and all sorts of happiness."

It might be well for the white people to learn from the colored people in this respect. Anyone who has opportunity of talking to soldiers will soon learn that the most depressing experience to them is to see friends and relatives of departing soldiers accompany them to the train weeping and mourning as if they were going to their funeral, when they should be in the highest spirits possible. We ought to send the young men away in the best of spirits. These separations and farewells make lasting impressions, and for months and months the soldier will think of the last time he saw his loved ones, and the mood in which he left them will be his mood as he reviews the incidents of his departure in memory.

SOUTHERN SOLDIERS HERE IN NEED OF CARE

N.Y. Age 5-16-1918

Camp Upton, N. Y., Jan. 30, 1918.
The Amsterdam News.

Dear Sir: The result of a meeting held last Sunday evening in Brooklyn at the home of Mr. Adrien Smith leads me to think that the public are somehow ignorant of the fact that on account of not being well informed through selefishness or slowness of certain individuals, and on the other hand our people are a bit slow to ask questions, or else they would know the present situation at Camp Upton.

Quite a number of Leagues recently formed for the welfare of the 367th infantry (known as see it through) with the understanding they are the only coloured soldiers of Camp Upton However, the writer wishes to say the 351st Machine Gun Battalion are strictly coloured and deserves looking after, and for simple reason they are from the South recently know no one here; the 367th more or less are of this State, accustomed to going to town occasionally and particularly their relatives, friends and even sweethearts are coming here to visit them, but those from the South (351st M. G. B.) see no one other than the sparrows. Nevertheless, with their machine guns they will surely clear the way, as they are known by their colors wth the inscription "Clear the Way." The public at large are invited to come and see the boys. They also composed a song which in reality they meant, as follows:

We are going over, we are going over
To settle up the fuss, they put it up to us.
Oh, what do we care? oh, what do we care?
Sailing across the sea.

We will hold the kaiser and hang him on a sour apple tree, and we'll all come marching home.
Thanks very much.
Yours respectfully,
LIEUT. WILFRED F. BRAZIL,
351st M. G. B.

The city exemption board yesterday sent out calls for 26 colored men, who will be sent to Camp Lee next Monday morning. The board has been directed to provide 22 men, but 26 have been called, in order to make up any deficiency that may exist when the men report.

They are under orders to present themselves to the exemption board at 5 o'clock next Saturday afternoon, when they will be sworn into the Federal service, a captain placed in charge, and then the men will be furloughed until Monday morning.

FIVE HUNDRED TO GO TO CAMP UPTON—WILL BE COMMANDED BY NEGRO COMPANY OFFICERS—HAPPY SOLUTION OF VEXATIOUS RACE PROBLEM.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 8.—Five hundred splendid young men have been taken from Camp Lee, Petersburg, Va., and sent to Camp Upton, New York, one of the most liberal of the cantonments of the National Army. They will there be connected with the 367th Infantry and will be under the command of colored company officers.

Other transfers are also being made from Camp Lee to other camps where the men will be under the command of colored company officers, and it is probable that shortly there will be no colored drafted men at that camp, from which place so many complaints have come, growing out of race issues.

This solution of a situation which has given the colored people and the War Department considerable concern, will be warmly welcomed, and promises to yield helpful results.

NEWPORT NEWS VA HERALD

Orders have been received by the local selective service board to send 11 colored men to Fort Wayne, Mich., May 2 at 12:05 o'clock. Orders for white draftees who will be called in May have not yet been received.

Twenty-six colored men left April 26 for Camp Lee. It is understood that there will be approximately 13 white boys to be sent there early in May.

The local board reports that there are more than 100 registrants who did not return questionnaires, or who paid no attention to calls for medical examination. They are being sought by department of justice agents.

CAMP READY TO RECEIVE 2,800 NEGROES MCH. 23

Consolidated

Colored Georgia Selectmen Will Be Assigned to Fighting and Labor Forces.

Plans for the reception of 2,800 negro selectmen from all parts of the camp when they begin arriving at Camp Gordon on February 23 are being made by officials at division headquarters, and even at this early date the destination of the negro soldiers, so far as assignment to organizations are concerned, have already been determined.

Of the 2,800 negroes who will be ordered to report at the camp, 1,800 are to be chosen for their fitness for combatant duties, and this number will be assigned to duty as infantrymen in the colored training battalions of the Eighty-second division.

The remaining 1,000 will be placed in the casual detachment of the 157th Depot brigade to be used ultimately as military laborers. The selection of the negroes for these two types of service will be begun as soon as they begin to arrive at the camp.

The new soldiers will be received as usual in the national receiving station where they will be mustered and assigned to their organizations. Plans for their reception are now being worked out by officials of the receiving office.

The movement of selectmen to complete the first draft will not be completed within the five days following February 23, as originally planned, but will extend into March, according to information received Thursday from Washington.

Camp Travis Letters

AUSTIN TEXAS STATESMAN
AUGUST 25. 1918

Camp Publicity Office, Camp Travis, Texas, Aug. 24, 1918.—The color line plays no part at all in the efforts made by the United States to train, equip and make suitable for the supreme effort against the Germans the men responding to the call to colors under the selective draft act. White man or colored, they are equally well provided for, notwithstanding some of the arguments made by German sympathizers.

Never before in his lifetime has the negro had such opportunities accorded him as he has at the present time in the service of the United States. No more must he keep on a continual scramble for such employment as will afford bread and meat and clothes for himself and family, to the absolute annulment of any chances to better himself. As a soldier in the great armies of the country the black race has an opportunity long desired, but never possible before.

At Camp Travis, for instance, the negro soldier has opportunities of schooling, of training along mechanical lines, of training along hundreds of other lines of work that will better fit him when the war is over to take his place in the world. Thousands of negroes have gone from Camp Travis in engineering units, or stevedore companies or in fighting branches. In every instance they have been able to accomplish much. Especially in the work of fighting men have they called forth the praise of General Pershing and of the French and English military officials.

Aside from his work at drill, with his rifle on his shoulder or in his studies in the camp bakeries or cooking schools, or in the mechanical repair shops, or constructing bridges and roads according to the most approved methods, there also is plenty of pleasure for the negro soldier. The schools are open for his study of English, for reading and writing. Thousands of library books are at his disposal. The Y. M. C. A. has a branch open to the negro where he has the benefit of everything the Y. M. C. A. can give him for good.

Entertainments of a literary and athletic nature are provided by the commissions on these various activities. Recently at Camp Travis there was organized a negro band of more than fifty musicians that is developing into one of the finest of its kind in the country. A negro minstrel show displayed such talent that it was invited to perform at neighboring camps and the money thus acquired will be used in the purchase and erection of a negro dance hall near the camp. At certain intervals great field meets are held with cash prizes for clog dancing, jigging, for boxing, wrestling, leap frog racing, etc. Then there is competitive athletic drill as well as military drill. These are but a few of the advantages offered the negro of today.

Added to this is the fact that in the Government service the soldier as a private receives $30 a month, with his clothes, bedding, a place to sleep and three good square meals per day. Medical attention also is provided when necessary. The negro in Uncle Sam's army has in opportunity to develop physically, mentally and in every way to make him a better citizen.

There has at last been accorded the women of the United States an opportunity of showing their reverence and respect for the Stars and Stripes when the "Star-Spangled Banner" is played or the uncased colors of our country pass in parade or review. It is now proper and fitting for the women to stand at attention at such times. Where before they remained seated, they must now stand erect, heels together, knees straight without stiffness, hips level, chest thrown out, arms hanging naturally at the side, facing the music or colors, head and eyes directly to the front, with the chin drawn in slightly. It is an opportunity that long ago should have been accorded the women of the country to show their love for the red, white and blue.

Also it is worthy of calling the attention of the civilian of today to the fact that when the flag passes in parade or he passes a flag in an army camp, or the "Star-Spangled Banner" is played, he should remove his hat, holding it in the right hand against the left shoulder until the music is completed or the flag is passed. These things should be practiced and remembered. It is a fitting tribute to our colors.

NEARLY 400,000 NEGROES IN KHAKI

Special to THE NEW YORK AGE.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Conservative estimates place the number of colored soldiers now in the United States Army establishment on both sides of the ocean at little less than 400,000.

THOUSANDS CHEER COLORED MEN OFF TO CAMP FUNSTON

Cheerfulness and Enthusiasm Marks Departure of 36 Draftees Last Night

WICHITA KANS EAGLE
AUGUST 4, 1918

FINE BODY OF MEN

Thirty-six colored draftees of Wichita entrained last night for Camp Funston, to start training for battle against the kaiser and his Hun hordes.

Escorted by the Kansas State Guard, the colored Red Cross and the Liberty Drum corps, and accompanied by a large crowd, the men marched from Main and Douglas streets to the union station, where they were given a rousing sendoff.

The men were made to feel that their services are appreciated; that they are doing their part in winning the war the same as their white brethren.

True to the traditions of their race, there was little sadness in the leave-taking. The draftees were in a happy mood, and so were their relatives and firends who accompanied them to the train.

There was no formality in the leave-taking. "Good-bye, I'll see you next year," and "So long, gal, take care o' yo'self," were the words in which they said their farewells. One big fellow who will make a splendid Boche killer, kissed his sweetheart from the car window, which aroused much enthusiasm from the other occupants of the special coach to which the draftees had been assigned.

The train pulled out from Funston at 11:55.

COLORED MEN OFF TO CAMP JACKSON

Twenty-two colored men of the county and forty-eight colored men of the city reported to their respective exemption boards yesterday afternoon ready to entrain this afternoon at 4:55 o'clock for Camp Jackson, Columbia, S. Previously, the contingents of colored men from both city and county were sent to Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill., except a few who were rated as delinquents and who were sent to Camp Jackson.

Neither of the exemption boards here have received any notification as to when the registration will begin of young men who have recently attained their majority, according to the recent enactment of congress. Both boards, however, are momentarily expecting instructions along this line.

DIVISION THREE'S COLORED QUOTA

Major Walcott Refused Sanction to Send Them to Camp.

Board No. 2 Received Assurances of Their Men's Acceptance at Devens.

NEW BEDFORD MASS STANDARD
FEBRUARY 14, 1918

When Division 2 sent five colored soldiers to Camp Devens upon the assurance of the military authorities that they were ready to receive them Division 3 board wrote to the adjutant general asking for authority to send to Camp Devens 10 colored men, the balance of the quota, and yesterday a reply was received refusing the necessary authority.

Roger Walcott, major, Inf., U. S. R., the officer in charge of the draft, wrote as follows:

"Replying to your letter of the ninth, advise that colored men may not be sent to complete the balance of the present quota, according to instructions from Washington for the mobilization this month. Colored men may be voluntarily inducted into the service under induction call No. 5, circular letter No. 51.

"I think there must be some mistake as to local board, Division No. 2, being authorized to send its colored men to Camp Devens, because no such authorization has been issued from this office."

As the outcome of Division 3's letter, Major Walcott wrote to the Division 2 board yesterday that in accordance with Circular Letter 68½, only white men should be sent to camp. The board's reply was to the effect that the colored soldiers were mobilized before the receipt of the circular and accompanied a copy of the authorization from Camp Devens.

"As a matter of fact,, the occasional colored man has been accepted at Camp Devens from the outset," said Chairman Hough of Division 2.

"One of the first men to go from division 2 had as much Negro blood in his veins as any one of the five who went this week. Through the blunder of the registration official he was listed as a Caucassian, and though the army officials quickly recognized his race, they accepted him. I know of several other colored youths who were sent from southern Massachusetts. With these cases in mind, our board decided that there was no reason that the patriotism of our New Bedford colored boys should not be rewarded. We took the matter up with the military authorities at Devens, who said they were ready to receive them at any time."

Coloured Regiment, in Particular, Makes Hit With Colonel O'Meara

77th Division, National Army.

Camp Upton, L. I., Feb. 4.—After a tour of the camp under the guidance of Captain George Harvey of Co. A, 308th Infantry, Lieut.-Col. J. S. O'Meara of Quebec, Eighth Regiment, Royal Rifles, declared he was very favorably impressed with all that he saw, but laid particular stress upon the 367th Infantry, the coloured soldiers, who are commanded by Col. James A. Moss. The 367th, which is largely made up of coloured men from New York, is not a part of the Seventy-seventh division. It is in the Ninety-first division, which has its headquarters at Kansas City.

The lieutenant colonel covered considerable ground, despite the fact that he spent nearly an hour watching the coloured soldiers drill. By sheer chance it happened that half the strength of the outfit was out on the parade grounds when he happened by. There was plenty for him to watch. The men were manouvering in squads, platoons and companies, each distinct company working inedpendently of the others. The men had not the faintest idea that they were under inspection and their work was simply the hard daily grind which they are going through.

That they came in for especial comment from the visiting officer speaks well for their progress, as they did not get fairly started in their work until well along in November. It is generally accepted in camp that the coloured soldiers will be "hell with the cold steel," as the men refer to the bayonet. A bayonet class was hacking away at the dummies during the time the lieutenant-colonel watched them. Discussing his inspection tour informally, Lieutenant-Colonel O'Meara said the coloured men were among the snappiest and most responsibe units he encountered, and further stated that if he were given his choice of assignments he would prefer that regiment above all others.

According to one of the officers who heard him, "he could not see any other outfit but those Buffaloes," as the regiment is known.

BIG SEND-OFF FOR 18 COLORED DRAFTEES

Laurel Weekly Leader

Patriotism reigned supreme Monday night at the colored Methodist church, when the large church was packed to the doors by members of the colored population assembled for the purpose of giving the eighteen draftees of their race a proper send-off.

LAST OF SECOND DRAFT CONTINGENT STARTS FOR UPTON

N Y C EVE WORLD
APRIL 30 1918

John F. Sinnott, Mayor Hylan's Secretary, in Brooklyn Quota Going to Camp.

The last hundreds of the 6,000 drafted men of the second contingent got away from the Pennsylvania Station and the railroad terminus in Long Island City, bound for Camp Upton, near noon to-day in the highest fever of martial excitemet that has marked the passing of any of the National Army recruits. Fom Manhattan, Brooklyn, Flushing and Jamaica there were 1,618 white boys and an hour later a train filled with 548 negroes pulled out on the road for the big camp where civilians are whipped into soldiers.

John F. Sinnott, Executive Secretary to Mayor Hylan, was among those who left with the Brooklyn contingent of drafted men from Local Board 77 for Camp Upton. He was accompanied to the Carlton Avenue station of the Long Island Railroad by Miss Virginia Hylan, the Mayor's daughter, James P. Sinnott, his father, and a large delegation of friends.

The going away of the drafted men was robbed of the usual mournful atmosphere of clinging kisses and long farewells by the presence in the station at Long Island City of 1,700 khaki-brown men with guns and service packs who had come up from a certain Southern cantonment and were on their way to Camp Upton as the last leg of the hike to France. This made the war seem very close to the raw youths who were going to the soldier factory.

Mayor FitzGerald, Rev. Dr. Goin and G. W. Crawford Speak at Send-off.

Forty-three men, New Haven's first quota of colored draftees, left this morning on the 10:31 train for Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass. No send-off was given the men this morning but at 10 o'clock when the men gathered at the various draft boards many of their friends and relatives accompanied them and walked to the station with them.

At the big send off tendered the men at the Dixwell Avenue Congregational church last night Mayor David E. FitzGerald was the principal speaker. The mayor told the men of their new duties as members of the great national army and dwelt at length upon the times after the war when colored people will receive the justice due them both north, south, east and west.

Other speakers were the Rev. Dr. Goin, pastor of the church, Attorney George W. Crawford and Dr. Sorcom, prominent New Haven colored citizens.

A banquet was given the men later in the church parlors and Mrs. Brent, president of the Ladies auxilliary spoke to the draftees.

Of the 43 men leaving today Draft Board No. 6 furnished twenty-five of the men as follows:

April 20, 1918.

AT HEAD OF COLUMN.—GOOD AT KEEPING STEP.—FEW NOW WITHOUT UNIFORMS.

Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass., April 13, 1918.—Amid snow and slush the 151st Depot Brigade put on its first parade at 8.30 this morning. The brigade is the receiving department for draftees as they are sent from their local boards, so that the march this morning was not a showingo f the best the camp has to offer. Led by Lieut. Col. J. B. Kemper and Lieut. Col. Paul Hurst, brigade adjutant, the recruits hiked around the back road of the camp and swung down by division headquarters to be reviewed. The two battalions of Florida Colored men were first in line.

For all the blizzard the Colored troops enjoyed it. The brigade fife and drum corps was piping merrily in front of headquarters. Colored soldiers have learned to keep step more readily than many white recruits; music has been used freely in their training here.

Despite all the difficulties in fitting them with regulation sizes of uniform there were surprisingly few who still wos their Florida's clothes. One wore a bellboy's hat, a few checkered caps, but the majority of heads were covered with Uncle Sam's broad campaign hat.

They wore heavy trench shoes and picked up their feet spryly for all that. Under the long overcoats legs without leggins showed occasionaly, and here and there a pair of civilian trousers.

THE HUMAN SIDE OF THINGS.

COLORED PREACHERS' IN CAMP.

It was probably inevitable that in the mobilization of 50,000 southern negroes there should come to camp many "licensed" preachers. Probably 1,000 of them are in the national army. They have been drafted. Camp Dodge, where there were 4,200 colored men from Alabama for the winter, had the distinction of having at least 100 such men, more than five to a company. A single barrack in the colored brigade contained no fewer than nine "licensed" preachers.

The draft could not prevent them from carrying their professions of ecclesiastical dignity and oratory with them into the camps. Probably there is no Sunday afternoon or evening in the colored barracks when the "licensed" preacher is not actively promoting a religious meeting, a fervent exhortation or an evangelistic appeal to an assembly of comrades gathered in informal but attentive array about him. He is only a private, but he readily finds an audience to listen to him, and as often as not he manages to mingle religion and patriotism in such a way that the colored troops are benefited. He probably knows his men more thoroughly than any other man who has access to the camp.

These preachers are doing much to explain the whys and wherefores of the war o the colored troopers. To a greater degree than among the white troops, the olored men are asking questions about he war and the part which they are to lay as national defenders. Like the hite troopers, they are open minded, ager for instruction and information of patriotic as well as a military nature. heir whole future holds opportunities d possibilities which they are now benning to realize and to take advantage . Naturally, a large share of the exanation devolves upon the "licensed" eacher who is one of their number, o eats, sleeps and has his being with em as a comrade in their barracks. To is man so peculiarly and yet so intiately associated with the colored troops comes a rather heavy responsibility; e, in fact, that he may proudly aspire discharge as becomes a soldier a riot.

housands of these colored sol lize that the national draft means re to them in new opportunities than thing that has ever taken place in ir lives. As a result they are keenly e to their new chances and are open ded and receptive.

Moline Branch Arranges Reception for Soldiers At Velie Plant

ROCK ISLAND ILL DN
APRIL 16, 1918

Plans are completed for a patriotic demonstration and reception to be given by the Moline branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Wednesday evening, at the colored Masonic hall, Third aveiue and Seventeenth street, Rock Island. The demonstration is to be given in honor of the colored soldiers and non-commissioned officers stationed at the Velie Motor corporation.

It is hoped that as a result of the meeting a branch can be started in Rock Island, so that it may take a part in the nation-wide "Moorfield Storey drive" for 50,000 members. This drive has been undertaken as a testimonial to Moorfield Storey of Boston, Mass., the president of the association, for his great achievements during the past year, and especially in the segregation case at Louisville, Ky.

The program will begin promptly at 8:30, and includes speeches by several of the prominent colored people of the community. The program is as follows:

A NEW REGIMENT OF COLORED MEN IS ON SCHEDULE

Camp Dodge Herald
AUGUST 9, 1918

Arrival of 4,000 Negro Recruits, With More Coming, Forecasts Organization.

By the first of September Camp Dodge will have as many colored soldiers in training as at any previous time since the cantonment was built. This week 4,000 colored recruits were received at the mustering office and assigned to the depot brigade. Three thousand more are scheduled to arrive some time this month. Besides these there are the Negroes now training in the 804th Pioneer Infantry regiment, organized at Dodge several weeks ago.

That one or two new regiments of colored fighters are to be formed here soon is now thought probable. Designation of the 804th as a "pioneer" organization indicates that men of this regiment will be ready for overseas duty in less time than is ordinarily required for training.

The 4,000 colored recruits received this week came from Indiana, Oklahoma, Missouri, Illinois, Minnesota and Iowa. They began coming in last Monday morning and kept the mustering office clerks busy from then until Wednesday night when the last increment arrived. Among the colored men are college graduates, ministers and business men, as well as Pullman porters, bootblacks and laborers.

The average intelligence of the recruits is declared to be equal to that of the Tennessee men who reported here several weeks ago. The new men were cheerful when they arrived in camp and when, as they were released from each building and waited in line to the next step in the routine of being mustered in, they would at once start singing.

A bunch of the recruits began a rendition of "Over There" Wednesday afternoon. An Indiana Negro heard their vocal efforts and objected to the way the song was being techniqued.

"That's not the way to sing that song," he shouted. "Don't sing it like this—O—ver the—re, O—ver the—re," he urged them, illustrating the manned in which they were dragging out the words. "Put a little pep into it, like this—" and he led them while they sang that song and several others with great zest.

(Special to The Daily Herald)

New York, March 24.—The great patriotic and military event toward which New Yorkers had been looking since Feb. 22, came to pass on Saturday when the "Buffaloes" 367th Infantry from Camp Upton paraded from the old 69th Regiment Armory on Twenty-sixth street up Fifth ave. and through the streets of Harlem.

It was frankly stated that from the time the regiment headed by its band and mounted escort of police, they made a lasting impression upon the public that they were a manly set of men well trained and officered by men of their own race, except Col. Moss, who is the commanding officer.

Fifth avenue did itself proud in bestowing unstinted honor upon the "Boys." The line of march was thronged with spectators from the down town section to Harlem. Governor Whitman and staff and other state and city officials reviewed the regiment and gave the men hearty greetings. At the Union League Club where the Governor, through Colonel Moss, presented the national colors to the regiment wild cheering songs and hand clapping ensued.

On Sunday members of the regiment were with their home folks and worshipped at the various churches winding up with a concert at the Manhattan Opera House. This is the last appearance of the 367th here. When we hear from them again it may be from the battlefield somewhere "Over There."

MORE NEGRO TROOPS REACH CAMP BOWIE

FORT WORTH TEX RECORD
SEPTEMBER 28, 1918

Negro selectmen continue to come to Camp Bowie in truck loads, over 1,000 arriving Friday. The entire quota will not be completed until Sunday morning at which time there will be about 3,000 in the detention camp.

As a whole they are far above the average negro troops examined for the army. They have more education, less disease and show better spirit and morale than other negro troops examined by members of the personnel and medical staffs at Camp Bowie who have had experience with negro troops elsewhere.

Lieutenant John L. Moore is equipping them with clothes as fast as they are examined and passed. Although pouring in day and night, not a hitch has occurred in the medical, personnel or supply departments in handling these negroes.

NEGRO DRAFTEES TO GET BIG SENDOFF

The 810 Memphis negroes who entrain Thursday for Camp Dodge, Ia., as prospective Sammies, find themselves truly lucky. They were the guests of exclusive entertainment Monday afternoon at Church's park, given by the courtesy of J. W. Sanford, vice-chairman of the Solvent branch of the American Red Cross.

Reports of entertainments are being made the selectmen and nothing is left undone by the officials to make the soldiers-to-be a good time. The board chairmen are planning a giant parade Thursday afternoon when the negroes entrain. It is probable they will march down Main street with a brass band leading them.

The white selectmen will entrain June 25 and 28. On the first date boards Nos. 2 and 4, with county board No. 2, will send 310 men to Camp Gordon, Ga., and three days later city boards Nos. 1, 3 and 5 and county board No. 1 will entrain 397 for the same camp.

Parades probably will be arranged for both contingents. The June draft is three times as large as the May 22 draft, which in itself was larger than any previous call from the local district. A total of 1,517 will go from Memphis, 707 white and 810 negroes.

NEGRO SELECTS LEAVE FOR CAMP NEXT WEEK

CINCINNATI O TRIBUNE
JUNE 11, 1918

Early Wednesday morning, June 19 Hamilton County's contingent of 13 colored Class 1 registrants will entrain for Camp Sherman, O., where they are scheduled to arrive shortly before noon. Secretary H. A. Dunbar of the Y. M. C. A., 636 West Ninth street, has arranged to have the association band lead the contingent on a short parade thru the basin and subsequently to the railroad station from which they depart.

The men have been put thru a short course of intensive training by Captain E. T. Rockwell and it is believed they will make a more soldierly appearance on their departure than any increment ever entrained from Cincinnati. "Major" James A. Marshall, special representative of Draft Board No. 7, which is sending eighty men in the movement, will assist Captain Rockwell.

Captain John G. Maycox, mobilization officer of Hamilton County, will have charge of the movement. Draft officials said Monday that the entire contingent will entrain from one of the basin railroad terminals.

FORT WORTH TEX RECORD
SEPTEMBER 27 1918

About eleven hundred negro selectmen arrived at Camp Bowie Thursday. They were brought from the railroad to the camp in the big army trucks and as they rolled up to the detention camp the negroes there greeted them with great, lusty cheers. They are immediately taken in charge by the personnel department and prepared for medical examination. As a whole, the negro selectmen examined in the last two days have been of a very high physical condition and but few are being rejected. They seem to be in excellent spirits and want to get some action."

RIOT AT STATION AS NEGROES LEAVE

Mob Beats Officer Severely Is Subdued Only After Hard Fight.

KANSAS CITY MO JOURNAL
AUGUST 3, 1918

A near riot occurred in the Union station last night when relatives and friends of the 500 negro drafted men rushed the gateway down to the tracks where the soldiers were being entrained.

First signs of a riot began when one of the negroes, apparently determined, started taking off his clothing, flinging the garments in all directions. Red caps were trying to arrange the crowd in regular order when the rush started.

H. G. Clark, a police officer, attempted to stay the oncoming mob but was knocked unconscious after his club had been taken from him. He was sent to the General hospital.

A riot call was sent in and more than sixty patrolmen, traffic officers and detectives responded from central station, and No. 6 station. Captain Ennis and several lieutenants and sergeants were sent out.

One traffic officer's gun was taken from him but later he recovered it. After several arrests were made and clubs were used fiercely the crowd calmed down and was allowed to pass through the gates.

The departure of the large troop train—twenty-two cars long—was an impressive sight. This was the second quota of negroes to be drafted in Kansas City. A third quota will leave today, which virtually exhausts all of the Class 1 negroes in the city.

Thousands of negroes from Kansas City and the surrounding counties swarmed over the tracks. It was probably the largest crowd that has seen a troop train off this year. Marching behind the Sixth regiment band it escorted the boys through the downtown streets to the station.

The usual troop train scenes were in evidence, only whereas the white boys had one sweetheart to bid them farewell, each negro boy seemed to have two. A truck load of ice was cracked up and distributed in small quantities to each man. One negro patriot started at the first car and ended at the twenty-second, bidding a personal farewell to each man.

Cecil, who holds the American Medal of Honor, the most eagerly coveted prize that can come to the American soldier, is to command a new infantry regiment of negroes to be organized at Camp Zachary Taylor, the number of which has not yet been designated. Maj. Harod Thompson and Maj. Henry C. McClain are transferred to this regiment with Col. Cecil from the 159th Depot Brigade.

The brilliant military history of Col. Cecil, who is one of the twenty-five Medal-of-Honor men now alive, began in 1898 when he enlisted as a private in Company H, 4th Tennessee Volunteers, and took part in the Cuban campaign of that year.

In 1899 he was commissioned as Second Lieutenant of Infantry at Fort Monroe, Va., and from 1899 to 1900 he served in the Philippine campaign on the Island of Luzon under Gen. Henry Lawton and was in the engagement at San Matic where Gen. Lawton was later killed He served in the campaigns on the islands of Pany and Cebu in 1900, being commissioned as First Lieutenant of Infantry in 1901, serving in 1901 and 1902 in various campaigns on the islands of Negros, Bohl, Samar and Leyte, returning to America in 1902, being stationed from 1902 to 1905 at San Francisco and Portland, Ore. He returned to the Philippine Islands in 1905, was in the campaign on the island of Mindanao, and on the island of Sulu. He received his commission as Captain of Scouts in 1906, was commissioned as Captain of the 18th Infantry at Sheridan, Wyo., in 1909, as Major of Infantry at Honolulu in 1907, and as Lieutenant Colonel of Infantry at Honolulu in 1917, and then ordered to Camp Zachary Taylor.

On account of conspicuous bravery in leading a charge in the engagement of Bud-dajo on the Island of Sulu with the forces of the Sultan of Sulu, in which some 600 men lost their lives, the American Congress on March 6, 1906, awarded to Col. Cecil, the American Medal of Honor, which is an honor bestowed upon army and navy officers and men for specific services, and is regarded as a higher token of the war hero than the Victoria Cross of England or the medal of the Legion of Honor of France. It is given, not for the sheer performance of duty, no matter how hazardous that duty may be, but for some voluntary act of valor beyond the bounds of mere obedience to orders. It has been given to men who have braved dangers they were not expected to brave, and who overcame difficulties regarded by the rest as insurmountable.

The Medal of Honor is conferred by the President of the United States after the recommendation of superior officers of the man to be decorated. who were eye-witnesses to the distinguished deeds of gallantry in action against the enemy.

The great honor, so modestly borne by Lieut. Col. Cecil, was conferred by former President William Howard Taft.

LIEUT. COL. JOSEPH S. CECIL.

The call will take men from 41 states and the District of Columbia.

The quota for Washington is 78, Oregon 50, Idaho 50 and California [illegible], all to go to Camp Lewis. Montana's quota is 337; of these 101 are to go to Camp Lewis and 236 to Camp [illegible].

COLORED BOYS FROM N. E. AT DEVENS—WILL BE SIFTED FOR OFFICER MATERIAL—NON-COM SCHOOLS AT DEVENS.

(Special Dispatch to Herald and Journal).

Camp Devens, Aug. 1, 1918.—Just as their forefathers fought on the same battlefields with their white comrades more than 50 years ago, 1200 Colored recruits from New England began their army training here today. Special trains brought htem to camp and they were assigned barracks in the artillery brigade. This will probably be the permanent station of the 13th battalion, since the 12th division artillery is to be trained in the West.

Within a week non-com schools will be started to make corporals and sergeants of the most promising recruits. Later selections will be made of those recognized as officer material and the men sent to Negro officers' training camp. Meanwhile white officers and non-coms will train them t obe soldiers.

Camp Community Service Eliminating Social Snares in Path of Colored Soldier and Organizing Positive Influences That Send Him Abroad Fit and Self-Respecting

JUNE 30, 1918

By Rebecca Drucker

WHEN the history of the forging of our many diverse and conflicting elements into a citizen army is written it will be found that the smelters, as they poured the negro element into the melting pot, did it in a gingerly way and then stood back to see if there would be an explosion. Whether it would blow up or fuse into the whole no one could tell. And that it has fused is due to the fact that for the first time we have handled this material in an intelligent way.

In the early days of the planning of our National Army one of the great problems of the Administration was finding sites where large bodies of negro troops could be trained. In a spirit of complete abnegation Georgia said that Ohio, having shown such sympathy for the negro since its abolition days, could not fail to welcome him to train there. Ohio politely but hastily rose to disclaim any desire to uproot the Southern negro from his home. It would be far better, said Ohio, to train him in the familiar surroundings of the South. South Carolina suggested Long Island, and Long Island returned the suggestion to South Carolina with thanks.

The quartering of troops aggravated by the race question brought to communities visions of undeniable dread—the memory of riots in Houston and Brownsville. Which makes the fact more remarkable that large bodies of negro troops are now being trained in both Southern and Northern communities, and there is no disorder.

The intelligence in the handling of the negro has in large part been supplied by the War Camp Community Service, which forms the right wing of the War and Navy Departments' Commission on Training Camp Activities, headed by Raymond B. Fosdick, which was formed by the President in the earliest days of the war.

Has Special Lookout For Negro Soldiers

This national commission takes in all the effort on behalf of the soldier outside the camp. The Y. M. C. A. work supplies most of the needs of the soldier inside the camp. For greater efficiency the work of the commission outside the camp has divided itself into two wings—the Law Enforcement Division and the War Camp Community Service. The law enforcement work lines up all the agencies by which the areas surrounding the training camp are, through legislation, through police and detention work, through education in social hygiene and clinical work, made safe for the soldier. So thoroughly has it done its work that it is said in some communities there is no cleaner place than the five-mile area surrounding a camp.

The War Camp Community Service does the constructive social work that is essential to the building of that mysterious and potent force—morale. At the outbreak of the war there was no time to form new organizations—it simply went up and down jerking awake dormant organizations, assisting some, consolidating others. All the welfare work that is done in behalf of the soldier outside the training camp is its concern.

For example, your boy in Camp Gordon, Georgia, writes you that there was a swell entertainment near the camp last night—Charlie Chaplin, Garaldine Farrar, Houdini or some such topliners. And you needn't worry about his being homesick. He's got acquainted through a church sociable with the nicest kind of family in town—drops in to see them every time he gets to town. And, don't smile—just for the joke he's joined the community chorus—sings bass. That dance the Odd Fellows gave the boys last Saturday night was a hummer. There's to be another next Saturday night, given by the King's Daughters. Well, behind all these activities stands the War Camp Community Service, working through all the agencies in a community, letting them have all the credit, merely lining them up, raising the funds locally and supplementing shortages from its national treasury, setting all the wheels in motion and seeing that there is no duplication of effort. To many people with sons and brothers and husbands in the army the War Camp Community Service is not even a name, so unobtrusively does it work.

Negro Neglected Outside of Camp

But its work among the negro troops has had to be of a more intensive character. His need was so much greater and the field so much less explored. The negro was usually sent to train in the same camp with white soldiers—but wholly separated from them. He had his quarters in another part of the camp, his own Y. M. C. A., his own place for religious services—but there was not the same solicitude on the part of townspeople to entertain him outside the camp. His days on leave might be spent in an aimless or dangerous wandering about the town, or he might gravitate to what dives had not yet been closed in the camp town. In either case something would be sure to happen that would justify the worst suspicions of the not too kindly disposed townspeople. To avert serious disturbance needed work of insight and foresight. Because this work seemed so important the Rockefeller Foundation has made a special gift of $25,000 to have the whole programme worked out at once in a typical camp community.

This money is to be spent under the auspices of the War Camp Community Service in conducting a single, special experiment. It is to go toward forming a model community centre for negroes, men and women, that will prove to other camp cities what can be done in making the negro a positive factor in the winning of the war. It is something over and above the regular work of the War Camp Community Service that the gift of the Rockefeller Foundation enables it to do.

To go back a little. There was an element in the South at the outbreak of the war that hoped for the exemption of the negro from military service. This element resented his loss industrially. It looked for the rising of violent antipathies in the sight of a "cocky nigger in uniform." It marked apprehensively the arming of a force that might even prove a hostile element. The cheering for colored troops marching into encampment was faint.

On the part of the negro, he was drafted into service for a war whose aims, in the nature of things, were, with rare exceptions, incomprehensible to him. He had his apprehensions too—being herded and discriminated against were only a few of them. The burden of responsibility of being obliged to fill one of the cardinal duties of citizenship bewildered him. He had little heart for the thing at first.

We now accept the fusion of the negro into our National Army as so much a matter of course that we scarcely wonder what were the forces at work with him. So quiet and intensive were they that unless we know something of them there is great danger that with the passing of the war we will discontinue them—and so lose something of incalculable value.

Organizing Outside Influences for Good

The forces within the camp that are bending him to habits of discipline, understanding of fair play and respect for himself would be so much wasted effort if the old conditions of bootlegging and vice, license and brawling which surrounded a camp lasted as in former war times, when a training camp was likely to be a scourge to a community. The Law Enforcement Division has done its work well. Where whiskey is exiled the greatest force for evil is eliminated. But this is a negative element. The positive work of surrounding the negro with conditions favorable to his development, of studying his needs and thereby helping him to help himself, has never been attempted seriously before.

The War Camp Community Service, as its first act after the gift by the Rockefeller Foundation, organized the following committee, which is making a special study of the negro situation: Joseph Lee, chairman War Camp Community Service; John L. Einstein, Virginia secretary, who is to be in charge of the work at Newport News; James H. Dillard, Wallace Buttrick, Thomas Jesse Jones, Frank W. Darling, James E. Gregg, L. Hollingsworth, Wood Jackson Davis, George Foster Peabody and Julian Rosenwald.

To gain a sympathetic comprehension of the workings of his mind and his racial aspirations this committee on negro work at its first meeting added to its membership five negroes of recognized achievement—Major Robert R. Moton, president of Tuskegee; Emmet Scott, aid to the Secretary of War; J. M. Gandy, president of the Virginia Normal and Industrial Institute; George E. Haynes, assistant to the Secretary of Labor, and Mrs. Harris Barrett, director of the Virginia State School for Colored Girls. Most negro educators believe that salvation must come to the negro by his own effort. Others can help a little or hinder a great deal.

The committee first sent out T. S. Settle to make a survey of the conditions surrounding camps where there are negroes. Mr. Settle is young, dynamic and a Southerner. He understands the Southern negro and the Southern white.

His survey was chiefly in the South, where the Jim Crow laws bar the negro from every first class entertainment. He found that the negro on leave must satisfy his play instincts in questionable dance halls, inferior moving picture houses and in what resorts he could find. Negro Y. M. C. A.'s, where they existed, were feeble. The whites of a community were indifferent. Curiously enough, Mr. Settle encountered opposition on the part of negro preachers. Their uncompromising orthodoxy made them look with suspicion on the suggestion that they open their churches to entertainments for the soldiers. It would establish, they feared, a precedent of frivolity and laxity in the Church. In so many cases, too, preachers had warned their congregations against the immorality of the soldier that he was looked on suspiciously.

Breaking Down Religious Prejudice

To break down these prejudices Settle called meetings of leading colored people, especially teachers and preachers, and explained that where they refused the colored soldier decent entertainment they drove him to the other sort. He roused their pride and their patriotism. He formed a committee among them and went on to the prominent white people. To them he explained the advantages of directing the energies of the colored soldier in an orderly way—and roused them to their responsibility. The usual procedure then was to levy upon each camp town a certain amount to be raised locally—to be supplemented by a certain amount from the national treasury.

Where there was a colored Y. M. C. A. already in existence it was bolstered up. Where there was none, whatever suitable building was available was taken over and put into condition. In Petersburg, Va., they found a building that had had a feeble existence as a colored Y. M. C. A. It flickered out after a brief period of life and its place was taken by a colored dance hall of questionable repute. When the War Camp Community Service took it over it made thorough renovation. In the process it had to blot out such expressive reminders of its previous existence as the signs "No shimmy-wabbling allowed" and (tribute to the "razor-toting nigger") "No gutting allowed here."

Then a mass meeting was called at the camp, at which the men were asked to state what entertainment they wanted to have furnished them. R. C. Stearns, an organizer, making a report of the meeting, says: "I have never seen a more responsive or grateful body of men. To have a nation or a city with the most benevolent intentions come to them and say 'Now what do you want—for we are trying to give you exactly what you want?' was a revelation to them."

The men asked for the following: Club or rest rooms; good toilet facilities; writing facilities; typewriter, Victrola, piano; sleeping quarters; opportunity to attend church; opportunity to spend several hours and take a meal in respectable homes; special gatherings in the club with opportunities to meet women; pool tables. The last was too much for a tall negro preacher who was present at the meeting. "Pool!" he shouted. "We need Jesus, and here comes a nigger talkin' pool." No hissing greeted this rebuke; on the contrary, there was prolonged applause.

The articles they asked for could be furnished to them easily enough. But to meet the greater social need of the soldier required the creating of a negro community life that should express itself through native channels. To express his spiritual and emotional life it would have to be motivated largely by religion and music. In these two are the greatest allies for his education.

The War Camp Community Service ranged up its churches. Once convinced, they worked with a will—they gave church suppers and dances, picnics and prayer meetings; they urged the hospitality of members toward the soldiers. Then the Community Service organized the great community sings—that start with "Over There" and "Star-Spangled Banner" and finish up with crooning, poignant "spirituals," men, women and children taking part. No one who does not know the negro understands the degree of spiritual and emotional satisfaction the negro gets out of music. It intensifies and purges his every mood.

But the churches might welcome him and his fellow negroes fall to the work of entertaining him with a will—he still had no place where he might go at will and where certain practical provisions, like a decent place to eat and sleep, would await him at any time. This necessitated establishing central quarters for him, which has gradually developed into the larger idea of a community centre.

The Rockefeller Foundation's gift of $25,000 is to be spent in erecting such a model community centre for negroes in Newport News. It has stipulated that the money shall be spent in one model community centre to serve as a demonstration to other cities of what can be done. Newport News was chosen because its need is perhaps the greatest. There are five camps in close proximity to the town. A plot of ground is to be bought and laid out as a playground, with a baseball and athletic field as its main features. On it is to be erected a large building that will have on its first floor a reception room with writing facilities, books, magazines and comfortable chairs, and an auditorium in which will be given motion picture shows, concerts, etc. On its second floor will be dormitories, showers, lavatories and offices. Club rooms already opened will be turned over to girls' clubs and Red Cross, etc., when the new clubhouse is ready.

The activities of the women will centre here. For the problem of what to do for the soldier is twofold. On its reverse side it automatically presents the question: "What is to be done for the women of a camp town?" Without direction they form more than half the problem. In fact, they provide a whole problem of their own. So in the plan for a model community centre is included a community house where the women may spend their impulses in war work. In this second building there will be rooms for Red Cross work, a Y. W. C. A. canteen, classes in conservation, all for women.

Planned for Use When Peace Comes

The significant fact in all this is that it is being planned for permanence. It may require modifications to suit it to uses in times of peace, but the need for it will be just as great. For the community centre aims at something larger than war work—it aims to satisfy the need of the negro for expression in healthful, normal channels. It will be a place where he will be free from the furtive, degrading consciousness of inferiority. He will learn there to bear himself like a citizen—and so eventually be one.

The negro is more susceptible to influences than the white—good as well as bad. Music and the fervor of religion are the most powerful factors in working with him. That means that he can be reached by simple means. A social worker said, "In making the negro happy and getting results you can do more with five dollars than you can with a hundred for the white."

And after a year of this work it is already having its result. A negro soldier coming to town goes about his business. He knows he has his place in the community. He bears himself well and the townspeople treat him accordingly. It all bears directly on his work within the camp—which in the final analysis is the work of winning the war. It shows itself in his zest, in his company pride, and, most critical test of all, the attitude of the troops toward him. Ask any white officer what he thinks of his negro soldiers. He will tell you of their unfailing good nature, of their quick response to a call and their desire to please whom they respect. A white leader prefers to believe that the negro would rather have a white leader. It gives a paternal touch to his attitude toward his troops which the men like. But it has been shown that they stand up just as well under colored leadership. The life of most of them is, perhaps for the first time, filled with purpose. As a civilian the negro worked spasmodically and lived an irregular, if sometimes cheerful, existence. In the camp he works harder, but is fed and housed better. He is in fine physical trim, his energy is directed and he is achieving a greater measure of respect.

He is having the time of his life. On the long marches his singing never flags. He pours out his inexhaustible heritage of songs. Some of the good old classic rags have been revamped and given a military cast. "It Takes a Tall, Dark Gal to Make a Preacher Lay His Bible Down" is now "It Will Take a Tall, Dark Man to Cut the Kaiser Down." And his fighting spirit—just mention to a colored soldier that you think his regiment is destined for stevedore service overseas! You'll start trouble.

He is wonderfully responsive to the entertainers that are sent to him in camp, but he has a great fund of native talent that he just can't suppress. Every once in a while it breaks out and carries off the laurels. The white soldiers of the same camp, hearing of it, clamor to be shown, and then follows an interchange of local talent. A camp often prefers its negro talent to professionals, and very often these are so good that they are sent out on a tour of the camps.

The most marked result of all is shown in the quotas of drafted negroes who are continually coming into camp. Where at first they came fearfully, and sometimes sullenly, they come now cheerfully, knowing they will be fairly treated. Consequently, it takes half the time to make a good soldier of him. All this has penetrated to their families at home. It has enlisted them, too—conservation, the Red Cross, Thrift Stamps, Liberty Bonds—they have adopted the whole programme of war work. The service flag is, perhaps, even a trifle more overworked there than it is in white quarters. Johnson, the husky negro who captured seven Boches at an outpost and marched them into camp at the point of his bayonet, was asked how he managed the seven. He is reported to have replied: "I just had to get seven. They've got me on seven service flags back in the States." The seven, it was figured out, were his church, his Sunday school, his job, his lodge, his mother, his wife and his ex-wife.

The War Camp Community Service attempts to raise as much money for negro work among negroes as it can, but, of course, it must be satisfied to get a small proportion of the required funds from this source. It is a significant testimony to the rousing of social consciousness that the money which is raised locally comes largely from white people. In Petersburg, Va., where $15,000 was raised, $8,000 was cheerfully given by white men for negro work. Here at last is the placing of social responsibility. Race prejudice laid aside for the duration of the war cannot return with quite so much force. Segregation may be as complete as before, but it is not fraught with so much bitterness.

In utilizing the negro's patriotism in this war we are at last beginning dimly to realize how much we have overlooked heretofore in taking stock of our national resources. The spirit of the negro that, almost unaided, is beating out its way to civilization and culture—that incredible, indomitable spirit of Booker T. Washington—is something we cannot afford to waste in our national life. There is a special reassurance for those who believe in the hope of negro citizenship in what Major Robert R. Moton said to the people of his race in a recent address at Hampton Institute: "The most important and vital business that faces America is that of preparing people to fight. We are fighting not simply to kill men—that is an incident—but fighting to kill autocracy. In justice and fairness, it is not necessary for colored people as a rule to emphasize the importance of loyalty and patriotism. They have always had it. It is right, however, to reëmphasize their importance. Passive indifference is dangerous among any people, white or black. Every American should give his country everything that he has, every ounce of loyalty, sympathy and backing. We are going to do all we can to perfect ourselves in our attitude, conduct and spirit toward our country. That will make the morale which ought to be back of our government and back of our men in the trenches. We must stand by our President and his advisers."

Community Service To Raise $12,000,000

All this cannot fail to have its leavening power on the negro problem. It is largely a matter of education, and, like the rest of us, the negro will emerge better educated. The War Camp Community Service has seized on the war as the pretext for doing a work of education that is necessary at all times. The cornerstone is laid for fine work.

The work of the War Camp Community Service as a whole has had too little recognition by the general public. It is second to none in importance. It is doing a creative work among soldiers, white and black, that will stand in times of peace. Next October the War Camp Community Service plans a drive to raise $12,000,000 for the national work. Along with the dollar that you are putting away for the Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A. put away another for the War Camp Community Service, for it belongs to that noble company.

MEN FROM TWENTY FIFTH WARD SENT TO CAMP PIKE ARK.

First St. Louis Registrants To Be Taken to Southern Cantonment—Drastic Law Hits Delinquents

The eighteen drafted men from the twenty-fifth ward, whose names were published in the last issue of the Argus, were sent to Camp Pike, Arkansas, Thursday night at 9:05 via the Missouri Pacific. This is the first contingent of Colored men sent from St. Louis to a southern cantonment. They conclude the class 1 call, for August and no new order is expected until after the first of September, when a draft will probably be made on the June 5, 1918, registrants. There are 123 Colored boys in the 17th ward, of this registration placed in class 1. The other wards total over 300.

A general cleaning up of all the men left in Class 1 of the 1917 registration will be made September 1. These will include the sixteen men remaining in the Twenty-fifth Ward and a few scattered among other wards, who have for various reasons been given extra time or have had appeal cases pending. This will leave only the 1918 registrants remaining.

Delinquents Go To Funston

The following delinquents were sent to Camp Funston from the 17th ward Wednesday night; Wm. Shakesphere, John Spurlin, Leon Vaughn, Alfred Pitts, John Williams, King Bolden, Wilkens Brown, Charlie Terrell, Parker Baker and Wm. Jackson.

The 17th ward also announces the following boys of June 5, 1918, class have failed to return their questionnaires: Charles W. Jones, 5236 North Broadway; John Pe[illegible] Pine; Robert Whitfield, 2815A Clark; Wm. A. Harrall, 3123 Pine; Amos Lucas, 3000 Pine; Sam Taylor, 2601 Pine; Howard Hill, 2641 Pine, and Wm. A. "American Black Devils—St. Louis to Berlin" on Banner Carried by Class 1 Negroes in Parade

ST. LOUIS MO POST DISPATCH

NO recent parade here has been attended by a larger or more enthusiastic "gallery" than that which trailed a procession of several hundred Class 1 negroes through downtown streets at the noon hour yesterday. The crowd of men, women and small boys which followed, on the sidewalks and in the street, was almost as numerous as the procession.

At the head of the parade was a banner inscribed, "American Black Devils—St. Louis to Berlin." William H. Butler, of 3510 Cozens avenue, a negro Spanish War veteran, arranged and led the parade.

The marchers formed at Twelfth and Chestnut streets. The vanguard was composed of four mounted policemen and a negro band. Three negro women in Red Cross uniforms also were near the front.

The men marched by wards. They showed the result of having been drilled for several months. Their evolutions were precise and their bearing soldierly. The crowd on the sidewalks, irrespective of color, cheered them enthusiastically, and doffed hats as the colors passed.

"Who says them boys can't fight as good as any white men?" shouted an old negro.

"There's my Jim. Lordy help the Kaiser if my Jim gets his hands on him," said another.

All the marchers carried small American flags on their shoulders. After being reviewed at the City Hall by city officials, the parade continued to Pine street and Compton avenue, where it was disbanded.

How Negroes Go to Camp.

COLUMBUS O DISPATCH
JULY 23, 1918

"Twelve hundred colored drafted men went down one winter night to Camp Upton. They arrived in the dark about 11 o'clock. It was raining and freezing. Many of the men were without overcoats. And they were soft, having been waiters, clerks, and in other indoor occupations. They arrived in camp soaked to the skin, tired and hungry. Were they cursing and grumbling? No. They came in singing:

"'Good-bye, Lenox Avenue; Hello, Berlin!' And their melodious negro voices rang out in cheerful defiance to the angry night, to the hard life before them, and to the possible death that awaited them! That's the stuff that is in Americans—and it is war that is bringing it out."—American Magazine.

Negroes Parade Here In Honor of 965 Selects Inducted Into the Draft Army

SHOWING THE COLORED BAND FROM THE QUARTERMASTER'S DEPOT IN JEFFERSONVILLE

Several thousand negroes participated yesterday in a parade in honor of 965 selects of their own race who were inducted yesterday into the National Army at Camp Zachary Taylor. Several negro bands gave further life to the occasion, while patriotic slogans and banners told the onlookers of the great things the men will do overseas. Various negro lodges were in line, also many gayly dressed women and hundreds of children marching and riding in large trucks.

At the head of the long line were automobiles in which rode the draft board officials and others activein arranging the parade, these being the only white persons in line.

Before disbanding at the High School, at Eighth and Chestnut streets, the crowd, halted to hear addresses by local draft board officials, members of the army camp social service and others.

NEGRO RECRUITS ARRIVE AT CAMP

Between seven hundred and a thousand negro recruits from Alabama, Georgia and Florida arrived at Camp McClellan Sunday and Monday and the full allotment of two thousand from the three states are expected by the middle of the week.

The recruits are quartered in the eastern area of the camp and will be kept in detention for the regulation time provided by the army regulations before they are permitted to have the privileges of the camp or city.

CROWDER ORDERS MOBILIZATION OF 40,000 NEGROES

WASHINGTON, June 5.—Orders for the mobilization of forty thousand negro draft registrants qualified for general military service to entrain from June 20 to June 25 were sent out today by Provost Marshal General Crowder. The registrants will come from twenty states.

J.; Georgia 4,000 to Camp Gordon, Ga.; Kentucky 2,000 to Camp Taylor, Ky.; Louisiana 5,000 to Camp Funston, Kansas; Mississippi 3,000 to Camp Grant, Ills.; North Carolina, 1,000 to Camp Taylor, Ky.; Oklahoma 500 to Camp Funston, Kansas; South Carolina 3,000 to Camp Jackson, S. Negroes To Ft. Riley, Kas. Amid Tears And Cheers Of Relatives

MC ALESTER OKLA CAPITAL

With a spirit that one would expect to find in a bunch that were departing for some point to play a game of base ball, rather than to the training camp to train for soldiers who may soon be face to face with death, the ten negro selected men of the local board departed today for Ft. Riley, Kas.

Cheers and tears, and the customary joking commingled as the men bid their relatives and friends good bye. And judging by the crowd that was present to see them off, the men have many of both, the platform being jammed with men, women and children of their own race and of the white race, as well.

This is the first increment of negroes to be sent to a training camp by the local board since last fall. The men sent out at that time went to Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio. The departure of the men today leaves but seventeen negroes on the local board's list.

DETAILS OF AUG. 22 CALL GIVEN OUT ON THURSDAY

2,000 Negroes Go to Southern Camps—500 Whites Go to Greenleaf.

Full details of the draft call of August 22, which will begin the military training of considerable per cent of the quota of approximately 10,000 Georgians due to be inducted into the service during August, were given out yesterday by Major Joel B. Mallett, selective service officer.

In nine Georgia counties, on August 22, a lone negro will board a train for Camp Gordon to begin his training as a part of 2,000 Georgia negroes who will be sent to Camp Gordon in the five-day period beginning on that date. It just happens that under this call the quota of the counties of Butts, Dade, Habersham, Haralson, Harris, Spalding, Turner, Walker and Whitfield is one man each.

None of the men in this call will come from the larger cities of the state. During the same five-day period, however, it was announced by Major Mallet, 1,152 negroes will be sent to Camp Jackson, Columbia, S. C., the majority of these to be drawn from the larger cities and counties. Of this number Atlanta will furnish 184, divided as follows: Fifteen from division 1; one from division 2; 22 from division 3; 80 from division 4; 18 from division 5; 16 from division 6; 32 from division 7.

Augusta will furnish 143, division 1 sending 7 and division 2, 66. Macon will send 121, division 1 contributing 75 and division 2, 46. Savannah will send 300—158 from division 1 and 148 from division 2.

Bibb county will supply 34, Chatham county 17, Fulton county 8, Muscogee 15, Richmond 16.

These calls represent a portion of about 10,000 selectmen to be sent to camps from Georgia this month. Yesterday 500 white men were sent to Camp Greenleaf. In the five-day period beginning August 26, Georgia boards will send 2,750 white men to Camp Gordon.

If possible all these men will be drawn from class 1 of the 1917 registrants. The class of 1918 will be invaded only in case the quota cannot be filled from the list of class 1 registrants of 1917.

Maryland has just sent 2500 men to Camp Meade. 40,000 draftees, mostly from Southern states were sent to camps last week. Counting the 4,000 men sent to various colleges and technical schools for special training in radio and general engineering, electricity, and mechanics, blacksmithing and operation of motor vehicles and the 400 medical officers in the Medical and Dental Reserve Corps, there are in round numbers 202,000 Negroes in the National Army. There is no more noteworthy and valuable part of America's forces. In the Navy—well Daniels is still secretary of War. Nothing doing for colored men. "Cooks wanted only."

40,000 COLORED MEN TO BE CALLED TO CAMPS JUNE 20

St. Louis Globe 7-31-18

St. Louis Class 1 Registrants Begin Training In Earnest. Additional Instructors Appointed

Information reaches St. Louis that the War Department plans to call 40,000 Colored men to different camps about June 20. No definite order has been issued thus far, but it is learned that the largest quota will go to Camp Funston. If the call is made as indicated it will mean that more than 400 Colored men will be sent from St. Louis next month.

Class 1 Men Drilling

Several hundred class 1 men reported for drill Tuesday night. The largest number were at Ewing and Lucas, but nearly a hundred put in an hour at Whittier and West Belle. Major Butler visited the men and was well pleased with the attendance. The boys have gone at the work in good spirit with a determination to take advantage of all that advance military training will mean to them when they reach camp. They are to drill twice each week until called. Four additional instructors have been assigned: Leon Simpson, Geo. W. Boggans, E. J. Victoria and Joe C. Thomas. More than 3,000 men are to be trained and there is opportunity for several more instructors who have had military experience.

Men Parade to Coliseum

Two hundred and seventy-five Class 1 Colored men attended the military meeting at the Coliseum Wednesday night. The men, headed by the First Regiment K. of P. band and each carrying an American flag, assembled at Compton and Pine and marched to the Coliseum. As they entered the building Chairman Selden P. Spencer proposed three cheers "For the Colored soldiers of the United States, of whom we are very proud."

MacArthur Gets Negro Draft Men From This County

HOUSTON TEX CHRONICLE
AUGUST 2, 1918

The local draft board for Harris County will send out 155 negro registrants this evening to Camp MacArthur, Waco. All of the boards have been asked to send men to this camp, during the five-day period from August 1 to 5. When these calls have been filled, the boards will have very few negro registrants of the class of 1917 left. There are no more calls for negroes on hand, but more are expected for August to cover the new registrants.

The local boards have not completed the physical examination of all the registrants of 1918, but will have most of it done by Monday. Board No. 2 has mapped out a big job for Sunday evening. They will send 95 men to Camp MacArthur and have notified all the registrants of 1918 who are in class 1 to appear for physical examination the same evening. They want to get the whole thing done at once, so that the report can go in, board members say. General Crowder is holding up his big draft calls for August until all reports are in.

Local board No. 4 has moved from 1101 to 1103 Union National Bank Building. Volunteers for the call for August 15 for Camp Mabry are still needed by this board. The call is for three men, but only one man has volunteerer. Another call for August 29 for three men has already been filled by volunteers. It seems as if the latter call is more convenient for the registrants.

COLORED BOYS ACCORDED GREAT DEMONSTRATION

BIG PARADE AND A LARGE CROWD OUT IN THEIR HONOR.

NURSES COMPLIMENTED

Auxiliary No. 2 Makes a Fine Showing in the Parade Yesterday Afternoon—Lively Times at the Union Depot as the Soldiers Entrained for Camp Funston—All Were Anxious to Go and There Was No Sadness Except From Parting With Relatives.

LEAVENWORTH, KAN. TIMES
JULY 29, 1917.

The thirty-three colored boys who started for war yesterday afternoon were given a grand send off. The parade was probably the largest of the many that have been given in honor of Leavenworth county soldiers departing for the training camps. There was a big crowd at the depot, made up of colored and white friends of the young men who are going to fight and offer their lives for their country, if necessary.

A more happy set of men never started for war. There were tears of sadness from their mothers and sisters and relatives and it effected the boys in parting, but aside from this they were enthusiastic and happy for the opportunity to show that they were willing to do their part.

On the roll call at checking in every man was present. They answered proudly as their names were called out. There were a number on hand waiting to go in case any one on the assignment could not be present. One young man on the army registration list tried to get some one to give way for him when he was informed that this could not be done and he would have to wait his turn, which will be early in August.

A FINE PARADE.

The parade from the court house to the depot was made up in this order: County and city officials; city police force; Soldiers' Home band; members of Auxiliary Red Cross Nurse Unit No. 2, sixty strong, headed by their leader, Mrs. Mary Jackson; the thirty-three national army soldiers going to Camp Funston; Leavenworth Colored band; Walker's Guard of the Knights of Tabor; Mounted Detachment No. 2, Army Service Schools, under command of Sergeant William Carter; men and women and children in automobiles and on foot.

Every organization in the parade made a fine showing, and the colored nurses neatly dressed in white came in for many compliments. The colored cavalry troopers looked like fighting men, and they are the kind that will go through the German lines if given an opportunity to do so.

The national army boys were under command of William V. Majors, who was designated as captain, and Thomas Tabb, carried the flag. All the soldiers were presented with a new testament with the American flag on the cover; packages of tobacco and carnations from a purse raised by Carl English, an active young colored man. Many of the colored girls brought flowers for the boys.

There were lively scenes at the depot until the boys pulled out with the cheers of their friends sounding in their ears. Those who entrained to go to war yesterday, were:

MUST SEND FOURTEEN MORE.

Word came into the Leavenworth County board yesterday that fourteen white men would have to be supplied from here to supply the places of those rejected recently because of physical defects. These men found unfitted for war service when they reached the army training camp are only seventeen left in class [illegible] the white men and all but three of [illegible] will be sent on in a few days.

This means that the next call for August quotas will have to be filled from selections from the deferred classifications in the 1917 registration and the young men of the new registration of last month.

A letter was received by the local draft board yesterday asking that John A. Gallohue, telegraph operator at Lenape, Kan., be given deferred classification. The letter from the Union Pacific Railroad superintendent stated that the government was operating the railroads and that he ought to be kept out of the draft because he was helping the government. The board has not passed on this request but will do so soon.

COLORED TROOPS ARE GOING THROUGH FAST

[illegible] 10, 1918

Colored troops are being moved through Danville in large numbers. The Cairo division of the Big Four railway had two special troop trains into the city Sunday. At Lyons engines were changed and the specials went out over the New York Central to Schneider, where they were transferred eastward to South Bend and thence over the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern railway. The first train passed through Danville about 9:30 o'clock Sunday morning and consisted of twelve cars. The second train passed through at 1:25 o'clock in the afternoon and had eighteen coaches.

On the Wabash railway at 1:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon another train of colored troops passed through. This train consisted of fourteen cars.

Many of 691, "Going Noath" for First Time But They Make It Happy Occasion

BANDS AND COLORED NURSES IN "PARADES"

"Look Heah, Boys, You'd Better Run, 'Cause They'ah Gettin' Everybuddy in No. 1"

You probably noticed them marching through the streets Wednesday and Thursday morning.

Usually, there was a band, some negro Red Cross nurses, and 50 or 60 of the negro drafted men. They were on their way to the station and they were marching through the streets of New Orleans as a sort of goodbye.

Down in their own districts, the people on the sidewalks cheered, and gave voice to comments of various nature, most of it of obviously humorous intent. In the downtown districts the life of New Orleans stopped for a moment as the negroes went past. That was all.

But the little processions didn't need any particular response from the audience. They were having a good time of their own. Six hundred and ninety-one New Orleans negroes were being sent to the army. New Orleans evidently wasn't greatly concerned about it, but the drafted men were going to make an event out of it anyway.

So the bands played, and the little processions marched through the streets to the various stations—91 men from division No. 2; 66 from division No. 6; 22 from No. 8; and about 300 more from the fifth, 10th, 14th, 15th, 16th and 17th.

The latter left Thursday morning over the Illinois Central—all headed for Camp Funston. Most of them were "going Noath" for the first time in their lives. They were on the way to land of strange people, strange climate, strange customs. Many of them might never come back.

But the ebullient Afro-American spirit triumphed over these petty details and the three hundred were smiling when they left. Those that weren't smiling were singing, and those that weren't doing either were getting ready to do one or the other.

"Look heah, boy, you'd better run, was one of the favorites and it was sung to the tune of the "Hesitation Blues" with real feeling.

"The most cheerful lot of drafted men that have gone out of this station yet," was the verdict of J. O. Young, of the Illinois Central, who was in charge of the departure, after the train bearing the 300 had pulled out. "If they keep it through the war, they'll be the best soldiers any nation could want."

NEGRO SOLDIERS WILL COME HERE

CHARLOTTE N C OBSERVER
JUNE 23, 1918

North Carolina Boards to Send 2,000 to Camp Greene.

Nine Thousand Men of This State Ordered Drafted Before August 1, Says Young.

Special to The Observer.

Raleigh, June 22.—Orders came today to North Carolina military headquarters here for 5,000 additional men to be called into the service, 3,000 white, and 2,000 colored.

The white men are to be entrained for Camp Hancock, Augusta, Ga., July 22-27, and the negroes for Camp Greene, Charlotte, July 29 to August 1. This call is in addition to the call Friday for 4,000 men to be brought into service in this state July 1-16, of which 3,000 are to be negro registrants. The adjutant general figures that North Carolina has in service, under training, and being called in the orders just issued, about 80,000 men. There will be left in the state about 1,000 class one men when the present orders for induction into service are completed, not including the registrants of June 5.

Efforts made late yesterday in Charlotte and at Camp Greene to obtain information having a bearing upon the announcement from the office of Adjutant General Young that 2,000 negro drafted men would be mobilized at Camp Greene failed to develop anything of a definite nature. Army officers at the camp in position to know of the plans for the immediate future for the camp denied knowledge of the expected arrival of negro soldiers there.

The local selective service boards had not late last night received orders to send negro men to Camp Greene.

In the absence of information to the contrary, the dispatches from Raleigh were generally accepted here by civilian and military officials as being correct and official.

Mayor McNinch last night declined to comment on the report.

Under these calls Tennessee will furnish 5,000 white men and 3,000 Negro men. The white men will be sent to Camp Gordon, Atlanta, Ga., and the Negroes to Camp Dodge, Des Moines, Ia. The quota is to be filled exclusively from men in Class 1, if found possible to do so without seriously interfering with farming operations. Maj. Rutledge Smith has instructed the local boards that where men are actively and continuously engaged in the planting and cultivation of crop they will be allowed to remain at their work, but that if it is found impracticable to fill the quotas from Class 1, then to take such farm workers as can best be spared.

CUSTER NEGROES HARD TO HANDLE

KALAMAZOO MICH. GAZETTE
MAY 4, 1918

GOOD-NATURED LADS, BUT NEW TO ARMY DISCIPLINE AND MICHIGAN WEATHER.

BY BURR OSBORN,
(Staff Correpondent.)

CAMP CUSTER, Mich., May 4.—By far the most picturesque group of rookies that has yet arrived in camp is the increment of 2,000 Negro soldiers who disembarked from the southern troop trains last Sunady. These men came direct to this cantonment from their homes in Alabama. Many of them have never been away from their home communities before and the varieties of wearing apparel displayed would do credit to the most vivid imagination.

Of course the arrival of these plantation Negroes created more of a sensation in camp than the incoming of any previous increment. They have been quartered for the present in barracks at the easterly end of the cantonment just to the west of Y-36. Here they are members of the 160th Depot Brigade for the next two weeks at least and are also under quarantine for that period.

CURIOSITY STANDS OUT.

Curiosity stands out in the faces of hundreds of the colored lads. To them this is the greatest experience of their lives. They are very frank in expressing their opinion about Michigan weather. Of course it rained when they arrived as it usually does when any new soldiers come into camp. Since then the weather man has had the chilly atmosphere stop pulled out and the darkies do not like it. Another feature which they dread is the innoculation for typhoid and smallpox. However they have all been through that process now and have recovered from whatever discomfort was caused by it.

While it is true that many of these southerners are very ignorant and are typical plantation workers nevertheless there are a large number of well educated and very intelligent Negroes among the new men. Many of these are university graduates and these men have aided the officers materially in handling the newcomers during the first few days.

DRILL WORK STARTED.

Drill work has already been started and many of the colored men have at least part of their regulation equipment. With the issuing of army clothes the nondescript appearance of the outfit disappears and the men straighten up and compare favorably with any other group of soldiers in camp.

There were many amusing experiences during the first few hours which the colored boys spent in camp. Being absolutely unfamiliar with the routine processes which are a part of the first day's work here, the Negroes were considerable of a problem for the officers in charge. Getting them all properly accounted for, tabulated in the Division records, keeping them fed at proper intervals and then getting them assigned to their respective barracks proved considerable of a task.

A story has been told up and down the camp of a lieutenant who marched his newly acquired company over to a mess hall for their noon chow. Other companies were also fed there and when the lieutenant was ready to march his men back again he found that he did not know which were his men. He commanded that the men of his company step forward but only a few were at all sure that they belonged in his company. Several other expedients were tried without results. Then a Negro sergeant hit upon a happy stunt. He commanded that all who remembered hearing "Mississippi Blues" played on the phonograph that morning should step forward. Without hesitation enough men for one full company stepped out and the lieutenant was relieved from a very embarrasing situation.

COTTON CLOTHING.

Cotton clothing is to be issued to the Negroes but they are being given heavy underwear because of the cold weather which seems to be fashionable this spring. Comparatively few of their number have been reported for sick list. Four were sent to the Base Hospital on Sunday, one of these having diptheria. Seven more have since been admitted but no more cases of diphtheria have been discovered. There is an unusual prevalence of venereal disease among these men.

Because of the interest taken in the Negro soldieds less attention than usual has been paid to the arrival of the 7,000 white soldiers who have come during the past week. These men are being rapidly fitted out with regulation equipment and will soon be as much a part of the camp as the veterans.

I ran across Don Wallace and Franklin Faush Tuesday afternoon. They have been assigned to barracks 237 and although still members of the 160th Depot Brigade they are quartered with one of the Machine Gun companies. Wallace recently spent several months in camp as a Y. M. C. A. secretary.

NEW MOBILIZATION ORDER.

Crowder Calls Out 240,000, Including Negroes, Last of June.

Rhode Island's Quota of 1,200 Registrants Will Be Sent to Camp Meade, Md., June 24.

NEWPORT R I NEWS

Provost Marshal General Crowder has issued orders to the governors of [illegible] except Arizona [illegible] mobilization between June 24 and 28 of 200,000 more registrants. In addition, 40,000 negro men are requisitioned from 20 states, bringing the total number of selective service men called to the colors to 1,598,704. When they are in camp the nation's army will number well over 2,000,000 men.

Rhode Island's quota under the new call is 1,200 registrants, who will be sent to Camp Meade, Md., June 24, leaving Providence in two special train sections at 10:30 o'clock in the morning. Captain George H. Webb, draft director for the state, who received notice of the call a week ago, but was instructed to withhold the information, says all preparations for the summons are made, and the apportionment, which has been issued confidentially to boards will be made public later. This levy will further exhaust Class 1, and with additional June quotas will reduce the available number of men to 1,100.

Assignments for the men called to the colors under the new order indicate the rapidity with which the troops are now moving overseas. In nearly every instance the registrants under this requisition are assigned to National Army cantonments, whereas recently, when calls were made, it was necessary to send the men to National Guard, reglar army and other camps, because the cantonments were filled.

Illinois is asked to furnish 28,500 men under the latest call, New York 14,000 and Pennsylvania 12,000. The quotas and camp assignments include:

Connectict, 12000 to Camp Meade, Md.; Massachusetts, 1400 to Camp Devens, Mass. New York, 1000 to Camp Upton, N. Y.; 4000 to Camp Wadsworth, S. C.; Rhode Island, 1200 to Camp Meade, Md.; Vermont, 400 to Camp Devens Mass.

The House military committee has reported a resolution making retroactive the bill basing the draft quotas on the nmber of men in Class 1, to legalize any exceeding of authority as to the number or quota which may have been made in the first drafting of men. The resolution was recommended by the War Department, it is announced.

Custer Gets 6,000 Race Contingent

FIFTEEN THOUSAND SEE NEGROES LEAVE

Baby Is Trampled to Death by Crowd at Union Station.

WILD WITH ENTHUSIASM

Police Unable to Hold Throng of Blacks Assembled to Bid Farewell to 250 Draftees—Negroes Are Happy.

APRIL 29, 1918

One of the wildest patriotic demonstrations which was ever seen in Memphis was staged last night when 250 drafted negroes departed from the city for Camp Lee and Camp Meade. Fully 15,000 negroes assembled in and around the Union Station to yell farewells to the departing negroes.

A negro babe was knocked from its mother's arms in the Union Station and was trampled to death by the milling throng before the mother could pick it up. Two broken arms—the result of mad attempts to clamber over the picket fence separating the waiting pavilion from the train sheds—were reported to the police, and there were numerous minor injuries. There was no disorder of a criminal nature and not even a fight marred the spectacle.

Police reserves were utterly unable to hold back the tremendous throng of negroes who fought, pushed, pulled and jammed forward in an effort to get to the train which held the drafted black men.

Parade Precedes Departure.

The departing negroes assembled at the police station beginning as early as 3 o'clock. By 6 o'clock the draftees from four boards had assembled there. The Royal Circle Band—a negro organization—played patriotic music and the negroes' fervor of patriotism rose with each number. When the time came to begin the march to the Union Station the draftees was a wildly cheering, ready-to-fight-the-kaiser mob.

At 7 o'clock the parade moved south on Main Street, headed by the band. The negroes carried banners of various sorts, including several labeled "To Hell With the Kaiser," "Black Faces But Red Blood" and "Good-by, Beale Street; Hello, France." The latter sign was a relic of the first black military exodus from Memphis.

A big throng of spectators followed the parading negroes down Main Street, but the "reserves" were on Calhoun Avenue and Rayburn Boulevard. Calhoun Avenue was packed and jammed with cheering, shouting, hilarious negroes. They filled the street from curb to curb and barely left room for the marchers to pass through.

The steps of the Union Station were literally covered with them. They filled every available nook and corner about the depot and stretched two blocks southward on Rayburn Boulevard. Inside the waiting room and pavilion was so tightly filled that only a narrow walkway was left the draftees to pass through.

Music Sets 'Em Crazy.

Two platoons of patrolmen were able to control the crowd for a time. The negro band marched through the crowd and out under the train shed beside the special train which bore the draftees to their camps. Only the draftees were permitted out under the train sheds.

Then the band struck up "The Memphis Blues" and the crowd went wild. They shoved forward and literally were bending the heavy iron fence inward in their efforts to get to the train. Negro men and some women climbed over the 10-foot fence and were driven back by police officers.

The crush of the ever-increasing wall of black humanity finally grew so great that train and police officials decided to open the gates and let the whole crowd through. The gates were opened and the crowd rushed in. Some clambered atop of trains and others fought their way to the roof of the train sheds. The special troop train was surrounded by a mass of laughing, shouting, dancing people who just couldn't keep still as long as their band hammered out music. They cheered for "The Star Spangled Banner" and "America," but when the black musicians swung into "Beale Street Blues" they fairly lifted the roof off the station.

There was no sadness at the parting. Of course there probably was some, but it didn't show. The negroes just shouted and laughed and sang.

And the departing negroes? Were they sad or downhearted? Not a bit of it. It was the one big adventure of their lives and they were out to make the most of it. They were happier than the rest and they certainly gave everyone a fine lesson in patriotism.

Leave Two Hours Late.

Because of the stupendous crush of people it was impossible for draft board officials to check up their lists and see if every negro was ab[illegible] train. They tried to and couldn't. [illegible]ly the troop train was pulled out into the yards and away from the crowd so the officials could do their final work.

By that time it was pitch dark. There were no lights aboard the train and the checking of the lists was done by candle and torchlight. And when draft officials finished their work they found that not a single negor was missing. Every one was in his place, despite the tremendous crush of people which would have made escape infinitely easy.

Nearly two hours late the train finally pulled out for Camp Meade and Camp Lee. Only a few hundred spectators remained for the final departure, but they gave a long ringing cheer for the soldiers-to-be, who answered with a long triumphant shout that bespoke courage and patriotism of the "nth" degree.

CUSTER GETS 6,000 NEGRO CONTINGENT

Men Show Aptitude for Work in Engineer Unit; Two Bridges Built.

DETROIT MICH FREE PRESS
AUGUST 1, 1918

June and July Selects Will Be Put in Physical Trim for Hard Work.

BY GEORGE B. DOLLIVER,
Staff Correspondent of the Detroit Free Press.

Battle Creek, Mich., July 31.—Six thousand Negro selects, from Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Michigan and Wisconsin will be brought to Camp Custer within the next fortnight to undergo training.

Pennsylvania and West Virginia each will send 2,000 and Michigan and Wisconsin about 1,000 each. The Negroes will be assigned to the colored detachment of the One Hundred and Sixtieth depot brigade, instead of existing Negro units in the camp.

Detroit Negroes who recently came to camp 1,000 strong, are now known as a "colored detachment unassigned." They are quartered in what was formerly the field artillery end of the camp several miles from the only other large Negro organization in camp the Five Hundred and Thirty-sixth engineers. Major Dean, late arrival from the Philippines, is in command.

Negro Engineers Build Bridges.

Major Christophel, of the Five Hundred and Thirty-sixth engineers (Negroes), has taken his men to woods south of camp and is teaching them the same engineering problems he gave his white soldiers in the Three Hundred and Tenth engineers, from which he was transferred. Two trestle bridges have been constructed, the material being hewn from the woods, covered with branches and then earth and yet so strongly put together that they will stand artillery traffic. One of these bridges is 150 feet long and Major Christophel says the work is equal to that done by white pioneers. In some ways the Negroes are even better workers, for they respond to orders, work hard and are husky enough to stand pressure. Their spirit is splendid.

Companies A, B and C are working in one woods under Major Christophel; Company D in another, under Captain John Lawler.

The Five Hundred and Thirty-sixth has also organized a regimental band of 18 pieces, under Corporal Lett, a Tuskogee Institute graduate, and a regimental orchestra, which plays with some regularity at the officers' mess.

The presence of between 7,000 and 8,000 Negroes, including those now here and those about to come, may tax the local Negro soldiers' club provided by the war camp community service board.

Eighty-fifth Methods Abandoned.

The work of making soldiers of the June and July selects is under way. The methods are not the same as they were when the Eighty-fifth division was trained. With the new division, no recruits will be given bayonet exercises and tasks calling for strength until the strength has been put into their arms and backs by physical preparation.

Wednesday for the first time the new men tackled the Kubu system. With their shirts "peeled" they were put through exercises that showed thousands of them they possessed lungs, and yet had never used them in full capacity. Men will not be asked to take long hikes until breathing and leg exercises have made them fit for this strenuous work. Training 14 to 20 miles on sheer nerve results in ill effects that may be lasting. Lieutenant Kubu points out.

All but one battalion, the headquarters company, and the machine gun outfit of the Tenth infantry, are now here, from Fort Benjamin Harrison.

The regular army men have instituted a custom new to Camp Custer, placing their regimental colors before organization headquarters every day. This is army custom for field service and a training camp is considered as such. Accordingly, all regiments of the new division probably will follow this custom.

A custom observed by the Eighty-fifth division, but lately discontinued, was revived Wednesday when a field meet was conducted by soldiers of the One Hundred and Sixtieth depot brigade, headed by Lieutenant Quadigroh, brigade athletic officer. "Pat" Thacker, Y. M. C. A. athletic officer for this section of camp, also assisted, and the program consisted of approved field events, with boxing and wrestling.

A rumor reached camp today that Major-General Forsythe will be the next division commandant, but it is impossible to confirm the report. Mail is arriving for the next commanding general and the camp looks for a new official family to arrive within a few days.

Colonel Burkhardt has not changed the rules regarding admission of civilians to the camp and it is believed he will leave this to the next major general assigned to Custer.

D. W. Springer, educational director of the Y. M. C. A. at camp, Wednesday announced his withdrawal as a candidate for congress from the Second Michigan district. He figures the camp needs him more than the halls of congress.

Camp Custer Notes.

Non-English speaking soldiers are now segregated in a separate development battalion where they get at least one and half hour of instruction every day. Under the old plan English was taught out of working hours, which was unfair to the men as they were tired from their drilling and showed far less interest in their study than is displayed under the new plan.

Soldiers who had some experience in civil life to make them adapted to the work are helping teach the foreigners, and the teachers, in turn are coached by John Dague, formerly connected with the educational work of the Ford Motor plant in Detroit.

Fred R. Youngblood, a North Dakota select, discharged from Camp Custer as physically unfit, left the camp to become a federal prisoner, charged with breaking the seal on a car handling interstate commerce. He was subject to arrest when he left home as a draftee.

NEGRO SELECTMEN, 810 STRONG, OFF TO ARMY CAMP

MEMPHIS TENN SCIMITAR
JUNE 20, 1918

Thousands Cheer Enthusiastic Recruits Marching to Entrain for Camp Dodge. White Men Leave June 25.

Amid one of the most enthusiastic demonstrations ever accorded a contingent of Memphis selectmen, 810 local negro draftees paraded down Main street to the Union depot Thursday afternoon to the vociferous cheers of 25,000 persons and entrained at 4 o'clock for Camp Dodge, near Des Moines, Iowa, as a portion of the June call.

Leading the gigantic parade were delegations from several fraternal orders, including the Knights of Pythias, Masons and Knights Templars, followed by several jazz bands merrily reeling off ragtime and patriotic selections. Cheer after cheer arose from the thousands lining Main street, and the men replied with shouts of "Berlin or bust!" "We're going to Chateau Thierry," "Good-bye Beale street, Hello France," and so on.

Fully 15,000 relatives and friends saw the men as they marched down Main street. At the depot were another 10,000 onlookers to see the prospective Sammies off. Forty patrolmen were necessary to rope off the crowd while roll call was in progress. After this the relatives were allowed an hour with the selectmen.

The parade formed at the police station at 2 o'clock. Men from city boards Nos. 2, 3 and 5, with county board No. 1, began their march—240 strong—on Adams avenue and turned into Main street amid cheers. At Union avenue they were joined by the 74 negroes from city board No. 4, and the march completed to the depot.

The 114 negroes from city board No. 3 were seated in automobiles and were led by Chairman A. J. Williford. The autos were furnished free by patriotic citizens.

The 165 negroes from city board No. 1 had a parade of their own, marching from their headquarters at McLemore avenue and Rayburn boulevard, north on Rayburn behind a jazz band. They joined the others at the depot. County board No. 2, Binghamton, entrained its 175 selectmen from there, making the grand total of 810.

The remainder of the June call of 1,517 men, composed of 707 white men, will entrain for Camp Gordon, Ga., on June 25 and 28. On the first date, 310 will leave from city boards Nos. 2 and 4 and county board No. 2, and one June 28 the remaining 397 will entrain from city boards 1, 3, and 5 and county board No. 1.

Griggs in Address.

In addressing the draftees, Rev. Sutton Griggs said:

"Nations and races are being tested by this great war, not only on one point but on all points; not only on the firing line, but in the home land as well. Success is not come through the possession of some one virtue, but through the sum of many virtues. It is not enough for the soldiers at the front to have courage. The people at home must have the spirit of sacrifice to correspond with the courage. The Russians were brave in battle. They were not conquered on the firing line. The governmental structure behind them went to pieces. The soldiers were not adequately supported.

"We have no misgiving whatever as to what our soldier boys are going to do at the front. They are going to live up to the best traditions of the race. When the hour comes for the great American offensive, they are going to toss all fear to the wind. They are going to march steadily in the face of the gun fire until they reach the enemy's hiding place. Using bayonets or rifle butts—and when they are gone, their feet and their fists—they are going to play their full part in routing the foe.

Must Be Worthy.

"We who have been left behind must be worthy of them. When they come back to us we want to be able to look them squarely in the face and tell them that we did our part, however humble, in supporting them, while they risked their lives for the great cause.

"The big Liberty bond issues tested the rich people of the nation, and they stood their test nobly. The war savings stamp drive is to be the test of the man of moderate means—the test of the toiler. The struggle is dire, the cost is staggering, and our government needs the small sums that we can spare. Have the masses got ears to hear the call of the government? That is their test.

"Let me make a prediction in the presence of these departing soldiers: When in training camps they open their newspapers on the morning of the 29th, they are going to behold our actions on June 28, when we go to our several school houses to subscribe for war havings stamps, are in harmony with this great demonstration today.

"With that further proof of our deep interest in them, though out of our sight, they will cross the waters with smiling faces and lighetr hearts to receive their baptism of fire in this, the world's last great war."

NEGRO SELECTS GONE. TWO DROP OFF TRAIN

Station Jammed Yesterday Morning While Kitchens Missed Their Cooks

If your cook was missing when the breakfast gong sounded yesterday morning, never mind!

It isn't every day that 192 "gemmun" of color entrain for the war zone via training camp and it has gotten to be a sign for half-holidaying among the colored people of the city when their brethren in the draft pile up at the union station to sing their last farewells (for some time) to Tampa.

There were only two things yesterday to mar a perfect record for the day. They were John Henry Harrison and Jim Allen, who were mysteriously missing from among their fellow selects when the train had passed Plant City, and it is very strongly suspected that the men dropped off there—deserters.

Both men were under the jurisdiction of local board No. 3 for Hillsborough county and both negroes were Plant City men and will be hunted until they are found. Telegrams were sent back to Tampa telling of their minusness after the train had passed out of Hillsborough county. The rest of the crowd from this section was intact.

Six Girls to a Man

The station yesterday morning had a record-breaking crowd and the efforts of Mayor D. B. McKay and the colored Rev. Griffin to say good-bye to the men on behalf of the city were fruitless. The disturbances and confusion at the station was too much, and the men were too busy saying good-bye on their own individual hooks. "Yaller" girls and brown girls and black girls lined the platforms in a tremendous array of color and it seemed as if each man who was about to start on his long journey to "over the top" and victory had half a dozen or more young women to his credit—at any rate there were a half dozen of them claiming almost every man in the crowd.

The selects assembled in the morning at the headquarters of their respective local boards and marched in a body to the station, where colored Red Cross workers had lunches packed and ready for distribution. It was planned that the train leaving Tampa would be made up into another section at Jacksonville last night at 6:30 o'clock, allowing two hours for supper and a change of cars for a solid tourist sleeper train through to Camp Dix, where the men will land Sunday morning at 6:30.

Captain Lewis of the medical corps and Lieutenants Underhill and Sinneath were sent here from Camp Dix to take charge of the men on their journey to the camp and in addition selects were chosen from each board for immediate supervision of the men. These were Robert Evans, from board No. 1, Lewis Harvin from No. 2, and Otis Dunbar from No. 3 board.

500 DALLAS NEGROES LEAVE FOR CAMP

DALLAS TEX. TIMES HERALD
JULY 31, 1918

Tuesday night about 5000 negro friends and relatives gathered at the Union station to bid good-bye to 500 Dallas negroes who entrained for Camp Travis. All of the negroes paraded down Main street in honor of those leaving to join the colors. The route of march was lined with hundreds who cheered. The colored Knights of Pythias band furnished the music and the members of the Negro Junior Red Cross dressed in red, white and blue led the parade. Two Red Cross nurses carried the American flag from a Red Cross ambulance.

The enlisted negroes have been feted for two days by their friends. A series of informal receptions have been held hourly at a theater all day Monday and Tuesday.

When the enormous crowd gathered at the station, the entire vacant block in front of the station was covered with negroes. Standing room within a block of the station or close to the enlisted men was at a premium.

Monday night a mass meeting was held at the county court house and the negroes were addressed by N. W. Harlee, W. E. King and John L. Jones.

THOMASVILLE NEGRO SELECTMEN HONORED

Thomasville, Ga., July 20.—(Special.) Eighty-five colored selectmen left here yesterday for camp, the largest number that has gone from here so far.

With their car profusely decorated with flowers, watermelons for their consumption en route, boxes of lunch tied up with ribbon, cigarettes and candy, the draftees felt that they were the heroes of the hour, and as one colored bystander remarked: "Dem niggers looks mo' like dey was goin' to er weddin' den to war," and it was with cheers and laughter that they rolled out of the station. Each man also carried a comfort bag and a Testament.

The members of the Colored Auxiliary of the Red Cross, under the direction and with the assistance of the Thomasville canteen, had arranged to make the going of these draftees a sort of gala occasion for them and the crowds of their relatives and friends down to bid them good-by were greatly impressed and pleased.

2,000 NEGROES TO BE INDUCTED

ATLANTA GA GEORGIAN
AUGUST 9, 1918

Nine Georgia Counties Will Send One Man Each to Gordon August 22.

In nine Georgia counties on August 22d a lone negro will board a train for Camp Gordon to begin training to join the ranks of those who are fighting in France for Liberty.

They will be part of 2,000 Georgia negroes who will be sent to Camp Gordon in the five-day period beginning August 22. It just happens that under this call the quota of the counties of Butts, Dade, Habersham, Haralson, Harris, Spalding, Turner, Walker and Whitfield is one man each.

None of the men in this call will come from the larger cities of the State. During the same five-day period, however, it was announced Friday by Major Joel B. Mallet, selective service law officer, 1,152 negroes will be sent to Camp Jackson, Columbia, S. C. the majority of these to be drawn from the larger cities and counties.

Of this number Atlanta will furnish 184, divided as follows:

Fifteen from division one; one from division two; 22 from division three; 80 from division four; eghteen from division five; sixteen from division six; 32 from division seven.

Augusta wll furnish 143, division one sending 77, and division two 66.

Macon will send 121, division one contributing 75, and division two 46.

Savannah will send 306—158 from division one, and 148 from division two.

Bibb County will supply 34; Chatham County seventeen; Fulton County, eight; Muscogee, fifteen; Richmond, sixteen.

These calls represent a portion of about 10,000 selectmen to be sent to camps from Georgia this month. Today 500 white men were sent to Camp Greenleaf. In the five-day period beginning August 26 Georgia boards will send 2,750 white men to Camp Gordon.

If possible all these men will be drawn from Class One of the 1917 registrants. The class of 1918 will be invaded only in case the quota can not be filled from the list of Class One registrants of 1917.

Blytheville Ark Herald Aug 1918

CAMP PIKE NOTES.

Camp Pike, Ark., July 29, 1918.

Iowa now has more representatives at Camp Pike than any other state. Twelve thousand men from Iowa came last week, the first time that any of their selective draft men have been sent here direct. Last fall quite a number of Iowa men came to Camp Pike and Camp Dodge near Des Moines, but the present delegation came through direct from their home towns. Already plans are under way in Little Rock for the formation of an especial interest in making the newcomers feel at home and in assisting in making their stay at Camp Pike a real pleasure.

Ten thousand negroes are now living in tents here, eight men to a tent. Some four thousand of them are in the tent area just east of the Belmont ball ground, at the east edge of the camp, while the others are in the new section at Fort Logan H. Root. The negroes were moved into the tents to make room for the new white arrivals of the past ten days. A number of white casual companies are located in the open stables on the south side of the camp, where they are using field stoves and getting a taste of real army life. It is most pleasant there this warm weather and will be fine unless they have a severe storm. In that case, some one is very liable to get wet.

Benton county, Arkansas has eight "Y" secretaries in Camp Pike, the largest number from any one county. Secretaries W. O. Burns, J. L. Mathis, R. L. Meigs, G. E. Ackland, Volney Fenno and W. N. Gaither are from Siloam Springs, and Secretaries T. J. McSpadden and Erwin Funk are from Rogers. At present there are some seventy secretaries in the Camp Pike Army Y. M. C. A. work, which includes the force at Eberts Aviation Field at Lonoke and the general hospital at Fort Logan H. Root. The physical equipment includes nineteen buildings, all manned with secretaries save the big "Y" auditorium. The Camp has a full equipment of secretaries now and the work is making splendid progress along every line.

An old army sergeant recently visited the camp and had his first view of a non-com with chevrons on the right arm only. He walked around the soldier a couple of times and then demanded, "What kind of a soldier are you, anyhow? One side of you says non-com, while the other side says buck private."

Poindexter Hill, Democratic nominee for the lower house of the Arkansas general assembly from Independence county, came to Camp Pike last week as a member of the last selective draft quota from that county.

"Taking the leisure time of the soldier from transforming it into a military asset of the nation," is the real work of th Army Y. M. C. A. said the Rev. A. J. Derbyshire in a recent address at the camp. He has just returned from a six months stay with the French troops as a "Y" secretary and is very familiar with the work and its influence upon the troops of all the allied nations. General Pershing and every army officer who has been asked to express an opinion on the matter have repeatedly affirmed their belief that the Army Y. M. C. A. is a very important factor in the success of the Allied troops and declare that its scope and the number of secretaries must be increased rather than curtailed at any point.

A number of the Army "Y" secretaries were detailed last week to accompany the troop trains from the home towns to Camp Pike and they report some very interesting incidents. As a rule, the home folks are learning to send their boys away with a smile and a happy God-speed, but here and there some woman would give way to her grief and cause a scene that would dishearten the entire train load of men for an hour or two. The Home Service work of the Red Cross is showing its work at scores of places, and with a knowledge that the "Y" will look after the men in Camp, while the Red Cross will look after the ones at home, the home partings are much more cheerful than earlier in the year.

Most of our readers are of course familiar with the words of the popular army song, "Long Boy," but the following parody may be new to them:

"Good-bye ma; good-bye pa;
Good-bye mule with yer old hee-haw,
I may not know how this stew is made,
But you bet, by gosh, I'm not afraid.
And, oh, my sweetheart, if I die,
They cannot say I didn't try;
For I can swallow what I can't chew.
And that's about all a feller can do."

An inquiry a few days ago came to Trench and Camp with regard to the age limit for chaplains. A chaplain cannot be older than 45 at the date of the issuance of his commission. Inquiry was made as to the training school for chaplains. The school is located at Camp Zachary Taylor Louisville, Ky., and the function of the school is not to teach men to become clergymen, but to instruct preachers how best to administer their duties to the soldiers. It is not a theological seminary, but a regular training school for soldiers. A chaplain is a lieutenant and he has to learn the business from the ground

Although the rapidly changing conditions of the camp greatly handicap the Army "Y" in establishing classes in educational, physical and religious work, there is no let-up in the regular program and an effort is made to speed up a little faster and give the soldier just as much as possible while they do have him. The men are proving very responsive to the opportunities for study and many of them are receiving their very first school instruction now.

The semi-annual report of the "Y" activities at Camp Pike shows that for the six months ending June 30th the total sale of stamps was nearly one hundred thousand dollars, while more than a quarter of a million dollars worth of money orders were sold. This tells the story as to why men of business ability are needed in the camps for "Y" service. The attendance in the buildings during this period was one and one-half million, while the number of free envelopes given away was more than that. Figures get large when one begins to apply them to the Army "Y" work at Camp Pike.

More Negroes Are Coming to Wheeler

With New Draft Quotas Announced, Total Will Soon Be in the Neighborhood of 8,000.

MACON GA TELEGRAPH
JULY 24, 1918

Camp Wheeler will soon have about 7,500 negroes according to the latest calls.

Just at present there are nearly 3,000 negro troops at the camp, including a negro battalion and several other companies which recently came down from Camp Gordon.

On July 25 to 26, 1,000 more Georgia selects are due to arrive, while later on the local boards in this state will have calls for 3,350 negroes all of whom will be sent to Camp Wheeler for training, and it is believed that a large number will be trained for the line, infantry and artillery,—perhaps, mostly infantry.

If the negroes now at the camp are not moved away when the last of these calls are filled the cantonment will have more negroes than it has had since being opened last fall. The 4,350 new negroes who will be selected from the local boards of this state will fill something more than one of the provisional regiments in the receiving camp and it will take about 500 old men to train them for the first few weeks.

May Go To Labor Battalions.

Plans for the training of these negroes will be worked out later. Just what will be their service once they are mustered into the army is not now known. If new organizations are made some of the Fourth Training Camp Officers who are to be commissioned September 1 will perhaps be assigned to some of the units. There is also a possible chance that the negro troopers will be assigned to take care of the great line of communications back of the fighting line.

Just at present most of the negro troops at the Camp are considered among the hardest workers and are repairing the camp roads and draining the swamps. There is a vacant part of a block where the 8th Artillery had its home at the camp and there is a possible chance that the negroes will make their homes in the shacks occupied by the members of this regular army regiment which spent several months at the camp, though this has not been announced.

There are negroes on both sides of the lake just now and besides working around the camp a part of their time is taken with drilling on the different parade grounds. With the announcement from Washington of the new negroes coming to Camp Wheeler the news is taken as an indication that the negro units now at the camp will be expanded, no matter whether infantry or labor battalions.

Georgia Negroes Like Army Life

AUGUST 10, 1918

Some Get First Glimpse of Movies at Camp Wheeler—Good Singers and Willing Boxers.

It is doubtful if a happier lot of rookies were ever gathered together than the 3,500 negroes who are now in process of being turned into soldiers at Camp Wheeler. They are enjoying every minute of their "visit" and the rookie camp resounds with song from reveille to taps, and some of the men even try to sing while drilling.

"You'll like it after awhile," is their byword and the phrase is heard every minute of the day on every company street in the negro camp.

"Dis yeah beats hoein' cohn. Nuthin' ter do, plenty to eat, a free show every night and $30 a month. Oh, boy!" is the way one of them expressed his opinion of his "new job" yesterday.

First Glimpse of Movies.

Some of the negroes from interior communities had never seen motion pictures until their arrival at the camp, when they were shown the movies on the Y. M. C. A. screen that has been put up especially for their benefit.

The big Y tent that was formerly used at the receiving camp has been moved to a point near their camp and two negro Y. M. C. A. secretaries are now looking out for the interests of their colored brothers, although the white Y. M. C. A. secretaries are called upon constantly to help in the work of writing letters for the illiterates.

One of the Y. M. C. A. men, who has had more or less experience in writing love letters on his own account, kindly complied with the request of one of the negro soldiers to write a letter to his sweetheart and "make it strong." It was an ardent epistle when finished, full of hectic terms of endearment and lurid protestations of love. It met with the unqualified approval of the lovelorn son of Senegambia and was eagerly copied by a dozen other negroes who wished to let their lights o' love know they were in the army, but still true.

Negro Soldiers Good Singers.

Although untrained, the best voices in the camp are to be found among the negroes and when they sing hymns in unison, as they have on several occasions recently when religious exercises were being conducted for their benefit, the harmony of their voices and the spirit they put into the singing attracts great throngs of officers and enlisted men from other sections of the camp.

A boxing pavilion has been erected for their use and every night they have really wonderful bouts. They know very little about scientific boxing, but what they lack in that direction, they make up in the strength of their efforts as they pummel each other's heads with goods will until their fists become sore, even through the thick padding of the boxing gloves.

MOONLIGHT OUTING FOR NEGRO TROOPS

800 Boys From Fort Wayne Post Will Be Taken on River Excursion.

DETROIT MICH FREE PRESS
JULY 17, 1918

Women of Church Organizations Will Act as Chaperons to Young Girls.

Colonel Nelson, commandant of Fort Wayne, took a hand yesterday in the effort of citizens of Detroit to provide a moonlight river excursion for the Negro soldiers hereabouts, with the result that the affair, which will be held July 26, promises to be one of the biggest events of the season.

The committee of Negro citizens, co-operating with Dr. Cecil C. North, of the War Camp Community Service of the war department, and navy department committee on training camp activities, had planned to charter a steamer, which would accommodate 600 persons.

"Get a larger steamer," said Colonel Nelson. "I have 800 boys here at Fort Wayne who want to join in the fun."

Dr. North was quick to act upon the suggestion of Colonel Nelson and immediately chartered for the affair the steamer Ste. Claire, which will accommodate 2,000 persons.

Preference will be given the soldiers. The remaining accommodations will be disposed of to the public. Tickets will be distributed by the members of the committee of Negro citizens who, with Dr. North, are arranging the moonlight sail. Fifty Negro women, selected from the Negro church organizations of the city, will act as hostesses and will chaperon the young women who attend.

The arrangements for the sail were completed Tuesday night at a meeting held at the headquarters of the League of Urban Conditions among the Negroes. Those present were Dr. North, Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Kemp, John Ragland, Mrs. Lillian Bateman, Miss M. Matthews, Joseph E. Thompson, James A. Webster, Mrs. Mary Cole and John B. Anderson.

New Negro Band To Rival 368th

808th Infantry To Become Famous By Its "Jazz Music"

A call for colored musicians has been issued by the colored band of the 808th Infantry at Camp Meade. The band of fifty, which has been organized, will be increased to 150 and made one of the largest colored band in the United States, according to Colonel H. L. Kinnson, commandant of the regiment.

Men of all ages who are musicians are asked to enlist in this regiment, and men especially talented will be given non-commissioned appointment in the army. The present band is well known throughout the camp for its classical music, and especially for its "jazz" music.

8,000 ARE CAUGHT IN ROUNDUP; 325

HELD AS SLACKERS

SAN ANTONIO TEX EXPRESS
JUNE 18, 1918

RAID FOR DRAFT EVADERS LARGEST EVER UNDERTAKEN IN SAN ANTONIO.

Eight thousand men, including whites, Mexicans and negroes were taken to the Central Police Station beginning at 7 o'clock last night and continuing until 12 o'clock by agents of the Department of Justice, Deputy Sheriffs and officers and members of the Intelligence Department. Of this number 325 were held as slackers in evading military service.

These men were picked up on the downtown streets and every available patrol and automobile of the police and Department of Justice were used to rush the men to the Central Station. Thousands of them were marched to the station. The Central Police Station, the Military Police Headquarters and the firemen's drill yard and the streets around the Central Station were crowded with human beings.

Those who had registered in San Antonio and those registering in other cities and those not registering and those in class 1-A were all divided. Those registering and not having their registration or classification cards were turned loose but were given warning that if they were caught without their cards they would be locked up. Much applause and cheering was brought forth when these men were turned loose, many of these men shouting to those who were detained for investigation and who had failed to register, "You will be in a uniform tomorrow," "All aboard for Leavenworth," and "Oh, you slacker," "Good-bye, San Antonio, Hello Guardhouse," and other expressions were much in evidence.

Several Mexicans caught tried to get away from the Military Police. After a chase of several blocks they were again taken into custody. When those who had not registered were carried to the Corporation Court room to be questioned several of the men who were frightened jumped out of the windows. They were not injured and were against sent upstairs.

More than 325 slackers were found among the bunch, according to W. A. Wiseman of the Department of Justice.

"Just how many we will find before morning I do not know, but from present indications I believe we will round up 400 slackers."

Some of those who failed to register were found to be German sympathizers and made the statemenet that they never registered and would never do so in the future. Many of these were put in the city jail and some taken to the county jail. All will be thoroughly investigated by the Government agents.

Some of the men claimed that they had registered and had lost their registration cards. These men are held for investigation. Among those taken into custody were many who had failed to fill out their questionnaires. Others had registered in other cities and had come to this city so that their local boards would not know of their whereabouts and who did not notify their boards of their change of address.

Not only were the streets of San Antonio cleaned, but the men were taken out of pool rooms, theaters and drug stores. Every man believed to be within the draft age who could not present a registration card or who could not give a satisfactory answer to questions asked were arrested.

About 10 o'clock when the largest number was assembled the downtown streets looked as if the town had been deserted and only children and women and old men could be seen.

Never in the history of San Antonio were so many men sent to the central headquarters at one time. As fast as the authorities would get one bunch separated along would come officers with as many as a hundred in one bunch. Among those assembled were two young Americans who had seen six months' service abroad, but who had just returned home and were given an honorable discharge because of wounds received in action, making them physically unfit for further service.

Colored Recruits on Way to Camp Lewis

SAN JOSE CAL NEWS
AUGUST 4, 1918

One hundred and fifty colored recruits recently drafted at Los Angeles, passed through San Jose yesterday afternoon on their way to Camp Lewis. The train bearing the men, who were fine specimens of physical manhood, arrived at the Market street depot at 2:15 o'clock, and was met by arepresentative committee of colored citizens. of this city. The contingent, under charge of Captain Hall, disembarked and took up the line of march on North First street to Santa Clara street and thence to the West End depot, where they entrained for the northern camp, where hey will go into training. Each one of the recruits carried an American flag; they were heartily cheered along the line of march and appeared eager to be on their way to do their bit for democracy's cause.

Assistant Secretary Fred L. Foster of the Chamber of Commerce, upon learning of the arrival of the troops, became busy and before the train had left the West End depot succeeded in gathering several boxes of fine fruit which were distributed to the men. Another contingent of colored recruits, consisting of 150 men will leave Los Angeles this evening arrising in San Jose about 1:30 o'clock p. m. Monday, when it is hoped that a fittin greception will be tendered them by our citizens. During the marching of the men yesterday betwen the depots the bell at the Market stret fire house was kept ringing by Fire Chief Haley.

CAMBRIDGE MASS. CHRONICLE

COLORED DRAFTEES

The first large draft of colored men from this city took place on Thursday morning when 60 men left for Camp Devens after a reception in the council chamber of the city hall. The men were by far the most enthusiastic group of draftees that have left the city to date. The mayor was the first speaker at the reception. He expressed anticipation of great things in store for the colored soldiers and a remarkable demonstration upon their home-coming to Cambridge.

Rev. J. W. Brooks dwelt on the religious side of life in the camps and urged the men to come back to their homes and their churches in even better religious mind than on going away. He said that the time for the sacrifice had come to this country and none more than the colored race desired to make the sacrifice for their homeland. He bade them an affectionate good-bye and wished them the best luck in their undertaking.

William H. Lewis, former United States district attorney, commented on the fact that the colored soldiers were to be particularly feared by the Germans because of their low visibility and their decided advantage on a midnight raid. In ending he told of the wonderful past records of the colored race in their fights for this country, spoke of the many colored martyrs and told the men that they should carry themselves as gentlemen and be worthy of their city and their country.

Following the singing of the national anthem the men filed into the anteroom of the council chamber of city hall, where the reception was held, and were served a collation by the Red Cross, and presented with boxes of smokes.

They then departed in special cars for the station in North Cambridge. From division 3, 34 men were sent; from division 2, 14 men; division 4, 12 men. Division 1 did not have to send a quota in this draft.

The releasing of so many colored men by the attorney general from the draft, as they were natives of Barbados, materially diminished the Cambridge quotas, cutting off over 40 men.

COLORED TROOPS GO FROM TACOMA CAMP

Entire 13th Train Battalion of 349 Men Sent From Lewis to Camp Dodge to Join the 365th Infantry

TACOMA WASH TRIBUNE
FEBRUARY 23, 1918

Official permission for the publication of the transferring from Camp Lewis, Tacoma, to Camp Dodge, of the entire 13th train battalion of colored troops, was given Saturday morning by Capt. M. D. Welty, aide de camp to Maj. Gen. H. A. Greene and camp censor.

The provisional battalion, composed of 349 drafted soldiers, left the Tacoma camp last Monday, arriving at Camp Dodge Friday at 3 p. m.

According to the orders issued last week for the transfer of the colored men drawn from the eight states which sent selected men to the Tacoma military camp, they will join the 365th infantry there. The 365th is composed entirely of colored troops.

Spectators who saw the troop train leave camp Monday afternoon with the colored men aboard commented on the spirit shown. With their white companions in arms watching them entrain, the colored draft men sang the ever-popular soldier song, "Where Do We Go From Here."

It was the same spirit that was demonstrated when the men arrived at camp. Instead of the "On to Berlin" slogan, which decorated the sides of the cars when the men reported, they gave voice to the same sentiment and joked with the soldiers left behind, and who enviously watched them go aboard.

As the train left every car window had from two to three heads out, the colored infantrymen letting it be known in unmistakable terms that they intended "to hang the old kaiser to a sour apple tree."

NEGRO CALL TO TAKE 100 FROM CLASS 1 HERE

TOPEKA KAN JOURNAL
JUNE 22, 1918

Draft of Colored Men Largest Since War Began.

Practically Two-Thirds From Kansas Must Go.

REPORT AT CAMP FUNSTON

First Contingent Will Leave This County July 16.

Only 500 Negroes, Class 1, Will Be Left in State.

Practically two-thirds of all class 1 negroes in Kansas are to be called into war service during the five day period beginning July 16. Instructions received today by Charles S. Huffman, adjutant general, from Provost Marshal Crowder called for 1,000 of the 1,595 negroes in class 1. All will go to Camp Funston.

The call probably will take an even 100 negroes from Topeka city and Shawnee county. Under the induction order as applied to this city and county, 47 of the 77 colored men in class 1 in city district No. 1, will be called. City district No. 2, with 72 class 1 men, will send 45 men. The county outside Topeka city, has 12 colored men in class 1. It will send seven of eight men.

Large towns of the state in which the most extensive negro population is located, will be most directly affected by the order. The ruling takes almost two-thirds of the entire list now in the immediate service class. It is the largest call for negro troops from Kansas since the war.

MAY STATION NEGRO SOLDIERS AT BOWIE

Reports That Black Troopers Will Arrive Confirmed; Use as Roustabouts.

FORT WORTH TEX RECORD

Reports that a large body of negro troops will be sent to Camp Bowie in the near future, were partly confirmed at division headquarters late Tuesday. Officers declared that they have been informed that negro troops are to be sent soon, but have no information as to the number.

One report received by The Record was to the effect that several thousand negro soldiers are to come, and another stated that only one battalion, to be used for general work about the camp, is to be sent.

Won't Join 36th.

Officers do not anticipate that the negro troops will be made a part of the 36th division.

Recent reports from Washington have confirmed citizens of Fort Worth, as well as officers at the camp in their belief that the camp is to be greatly enlarged. It is the announced policy of the war department to build no new training camps, and the enormous increases in the army will of necessity demand the expansion of those already built.

Increase Number.

Camp Bowie is capable of accommodating many thousands more troops than are there at present and there is ample ground for its enlargement. The arrival of the negro troops and the coming of the 4,500 newly drafted men who will be sent between May 25 and 30, will greatly increase the number at the camp.

NEGRO SELECTIVES OFF FOR MEADE

Largest Single Entrainment Leaves the District.

WASHINGTON D C STAR
JUNE 22, 1918

"CUT UPS" AMONG THEM

The largest single entrainment of drafted men from the District took place this morning, when 452 negro registrants left Union station for Camp Meade.

Draft officials characterized the entrainment as the most disorderly of any yet to go from the National Capital, and heaved sighs of relief when the last man was aboard and the long train pulled out of the station.

Several score of the registrants showed the effects of liquor plainly, manifesting it first at the Dunbar High School early in the morning, where the men assembled. Maj. Daniel J. Donovan, director of the draft in the District, had some little difficulty in giving the men final instructions, it is declared.

"What you men need is discipline," Maj. Donovan said.

One registrant shouted, "I haven't got mine yet," thinking he had missed something.

At the Union station several of the registrants proved recalcitrant and were put aboard the cars with trouble. After all were aboard, several of the men descended from a car and gathered at the fence on the west side of the tracks, and while there threw stones at automobiles in the streets below.

Majority Disapprove Action.

Soldiers and police, under the direction of Maj. Donovan, soon put the men back on the cars. The great majority of the colored registrants this morning looked with disapproval upon the actions of the unruly ones.

It is probable that as the result of this morning's entrainment the method formerly in vogue of letting each of the eleven local boards get its own men to the train will be followed hereafter.

A member of the local board pointed out this morning that when large groups of men are marshaled together in one body "cut-ups" are apt to prevail, but that when the men come to the station in small parties, each under the leadership of men with whom they are personally acquainted, there is little danger that any unruly members will assert themselves.

"Oh, boy, the kaiser's the man I want to get!" one large registrant kept shouting, and this spirit was applauded.

Forty-Eight Fail to Report.

Five hundred men were supposed to be entrained today, but forty-eight failed to report. Delinquents, unless fortified with good excuses, will be classed as deserters. Local boards entrained men this morning as follows: No. 1, 38; No. 2, 52; No. 3, 41; No. 4, 37; No. 5, 50; No. 6, 56; No. 7, 27; No. 8, 50; No. 9, 36; No. 10, 44; No. 11, 20.

Draft executives of all states today were directed by Provost Marshal General Crowder to begin June 25, and to continue for three days thereafter, the mailing of questionnaries to registrants of the class of 1918. Twenty-five per cent of the registrants of each board will be provided with questionnaries each day. Boards were instructed to leave serial and order number spaces blank until classification takes place, probably some time in July.

Local board for division No. 2, A. J. Driscoll, chairman, today moved from room 21 to room 20, at the District building.

NEGRO SOLDIERS BE SENT HERE

CHARLOTTE N C DEMOCRAT
JUNE 24, 1918

Some 2,000 Colored Men from This State be Trained in Camp Greene.

According to information from Raleigh yesterday, 2,000 negro draft men from this state will be sent to Charlotte between July 29 and August 1, for training as soldiers.

Those in touch with the situation were not at all surprised at this action on the part of the war department since all the camps in the south have had negro soldiers, they being divided evenly among the various camps.

As near as could be learned the colored men will be in camp here at least 90 days in training before being sent abroad to battle the Germans. They will likely be trained as infantrymen.

The call yesterday was for 5,000 men, first 3,000 being white men, who will go to Camp Hancock, at Augusta, and the other 2,000 the negro men who will come here.

Friday there was a call for 4,000 men to report between the 22nd and 26th, and the call of yesterday makes a total of 9,000 called within two days.

Detailed orders regarding the big calls for men during July are expected from Montgomery at the local boards Wednesday.

Battalion in Command of Negro Officers Arrives at South Schenectady and Begins Service.

A battalion of negro troops, 239 in number, arrived at the quartermaster warehouses at South Schenectady yesterday morning. The men were commanded by negro officers, two first lieutenants, and a second lieutenant. They detrained at the warehouse grounds from a West Shore train and marched immediately to their quarters in the post barracks. They have already commenced their regular duties in two of the warehouse buildings which have been completed.

With the arrival of the negro battalion, the number of troops stationed at the post now numbers about 400. The others who have already arrived are white troops, and are known as fire and guard companies. It is expected about 1,000 men will be permanently stationed at the warehouses when they are completed.

The strike situation of carpenters at the warehouses remains unchanged.

Negroes Fine Marksmen.

N Y C TELEGRAM

One of the most interesting places in the entire camp is the rifle range, which, by the way, is one of the best in the country. The day the writer was there about five hundred "Buffaloes," the name given to the New York negro troops, were firing at the targets, and this number should give an idea of the immensity of the range. At the various distances there are regulation trenches, such as the boys will use on the European battle fronts, with firing platforms to step upon and bags of sand at the top on which the rifles are rested. If you think taking trenches is a cinch just go out and leap over a few of these on the run and you'll conclude that an enlarged waistline has no business in a storming party. And don't be surprised when you note some of the men firing with the bayonet attached. That is the fashion "over there," that the weapons may be ready at all times to drive back raiders or when a command to go forward and "over the top" is given.

And maybe those "Buffaloes" can't shoot. Their marksmanship has been truly amazing, and when they reach the other side they are going to make many a German trooper lose all appetitie for his meals. For that matter, the shooting all along the line has been of a very high order, and men who never handled a rifle of any kind previous to being called to the colors have made scores of forty-five out a possible fifty, and not a few have been credited with a bull's-eye for every shot. One of the reasons assigned by Lieutenant James M. H. Wallace, of the Ordnance Department, rifle demonstrator and instructor at this camp, is that in addition to having as instructors at the various camps some of the world's greatest riflemen, the soldiers have been supplied with the United States Army 1917 model, sometimes called the "modified Enfield." Every man at Upton is equipped with the new 1917 model.

The camp also boasts of artillery and machine gun ranges, and at these the shooting also is away above anticipations.

At first there was a reluctance on the part of the men to go into the school for cooks and baking, but not any more. After the men have been under the expert chefs for a time they are permitted to show any skill they may possess by concocting new dishes. The result is that the table set in the barracks of the embryo cooks is the finest in the camp, the men are the envy of the entire cantonment, and the only way they can be kept down to reasonable weight is to turn them loose on the stumps for an hour or so a day. The present squad of cooks includes a lace maker, an insurance man, a lawyer's clerk and a barber, and all of different nationalities.

FAMOUS CHICAGO REGIMENT, TRAINED AT CAMP LOGAN, WON HONORS AND GLORY

In Letter to Colonel Franklin A. Verneinl sur Serre, France.

Colonel F. A. Denison,
Present:
My Dear Colonel:—

Your letter of November 12, 1918, was received yesterday with pleasure and I assure you that it is a source of great satisfaction to me and all the members of the regiment to learn of your rapid recovery and the probability of your early return to the regiment.

I know that you will be pleased that the promises you made the people of Chicago, upon the occasion of the presentation of colors to the regiment, that the colors would return covered with honor and glory, have been fulfilled in every respect.

General Vincendon, commanding the 59th Division, French army, which is the division that accomplished wonders under General Mangin and in which we have served for more than sixty days, has given the regiment two citations for its valiant conduct in battle. During the last drive, Company C, under command of Captain James Smith, did unusual good work, and captured three machine guns, two artillery pieces of large caliber, besides a number of prisoners. Captain Smith has been recommended for the Legion d'Honneur. The number of officers and men decorated with the Croix de Guerre reaches the

A letter from Colonel William Hayward to the Editor of The Age brings the first hand information that the old Fifteenth New York Infantry (now the 369th Infantry) was the first of the Allied soldiers to reach the Rhine, after a greater number of days in action than any other American regiment.

Further details show that all the colored line officers were transferred to other units, although Lieut. Europe was sent back as bandmaster. Lieut. Bullock was killed, but many of the old non-commissioned officers, including Conick, Payne, Chisolm and others who could easily have qualified for commissions,, remained with the regiment. A large percentage of the wounded have returned to the regiment. The letter follows:

Dear Fred: I had your good letter and was very glad to hear from you and to know that Harlem's affections for the 15th do not wane. I sent you a copy of the citation which will decorate our regimental colors with the Croix de Guerre and also the persons mentioned by name in it.

The enclosed copy of my letter to my friend, Lincoln Eyre, of the New York World, will give you all the news of us. Isn't it wonderful that we were the first of any of the Allied soldiers to reach the Rhine, and that, as we believe, we were in action more day than any other American regiment (191 days)? I would gladly send you some photographs, but we were not allowed to take any photographs, hence I have none available. I would give a good deal to have some kodaks of some of the things we saw and did.

The boys seem to be as much at home on the banks of the Rhine as on the banks of the Harlem, and have now undertaken the learning of German just as assiduously as they did French. We should be quite accomplished linguists by the time we get home.

We have had the papers which have been read with great interest by all, and hope soon to be getting first-hand information of "events in New York."

The men's spirits are good and their health remarkably good. As you doubtless learned all of our colored officers were tranfserred to other units, two of them having made application. Lieut. Europe was transferred with the rest, but when the rule went through allowing bandmasters to be commissioned, he was sent back to us and to the band as bandmaster. The band is as fine as ever under his direction and has been the source of great solace and comfort, not only to us, but elsewhere. It has played for hundreds of hospitals, rest camps and on the occasion of many functions, so that we have not been selfish in the enjoyment of its good music. I guess they will be able to play all the way from 34th street to 145th street when THE DAY of our return rolls around.

Was sorry to hear Lieut. Bullock was killed. The mention of his name reminds me that this regiment has furnished, in addition to those non-coms I sent to the officers' training school at Des Moines, seventeen candidates for officers' training schools to be officers in other colored regiments, all but two of whom I believe have qualified. The sending of so many good men, forty two in all, has been a serious loss to the regiment, but it has been a source of pride to know we had such good material.

Several of our boys, including Conick, Payne, Chisolm and quite a number of our other old sergeants, who could easily have qualified for commissions, and who were offered a chance to go, preferred to stay with me and the Old 15th in their present grades. I did not ask them to give up the chance either, but was naturally impressed by their loyalty to our regiment.

With cordial regards to yourself and our loyal friends, I am,

Very truly yours,
WM. HAYWOOD.

hundred mark. A few days ago, an officer from General Headquarters visited the regiment for the purpose of receiving and passing judgment upon recommendations for the Distinguished Service Cross. He accepted twenty-five recommendations, and at the same time informed us that in one American division only two Distinguished ServiceCrosses were awarded.

It is clear, therefore, that your regiment has done exceptionally well, and the people of Chicago can be proud of the 8th Illinois in every respect.

An effort is being made to have the Croix de Guerre put on our flag, and if it is successful our ambition will have been realized.

All your boys are looking forward to going home.

Respectfully, I am,

CORPORAL E. J. TAYLOR,

Regtl. Hq. 370th Inf. U. S. A.. A. E. F., France.

London Times Pays Tribute to the Dash and Courage of Yank Colored Troops

LONDON, ENG., Oct. 21.—The London Times pays the following tribute to the American Colored troops in action:

"It is not possible at the time to speak more than cursorily of the share of the Colored Americans in our attack of Sept. 29, when, on their whole front of about 6,000 yards, United States troops broke through the defenses of the Hindenburg line and canal tunnel, and on the farther right forced the crossing of the canal itself. It would have been a great achievement for the most experienced soldiers in the allied armies. For inexperienced troops, as the Americans, were, it was a truly extraordinary performance.

"The American troops were southerners (30th division), chiefly Carolinians and men of Tennessee, and New Yorkers. All alike went straight into the German defenses, which were of a most formidable kind and swept on to their objective. The impetuosity of their advance made possible the great advance of the British ninth corps on their right. It was the southerners who took the village of Bellicourt and Nauroy, where the New Yorkers, reckless of the intense enemy machine gun fire on their left, swept towards Guoy and Mont Saint Martin. That some of the latter went too fast and too far, you know.

"Nests of Germans who skulked in the ramifications of the tunnel and in American dead, he says, lay stretched with their faces to the enemy, and 'not in one case was there a man moving backwards when killed.'

"The success of the southerners on the right was perfect, and without the gallant fighting of the New York troops on their left, it would have been impossible for the southerners to have made their advance. He concludes by saying: 'The officers and men did all that it was humanly possible for brave men to do, and their gallantry in this action must stand out through all time in American history.'

"How difficult the ground was is, perhaps, best shown by the fact that it was not till after three days' more hard fighting that the Australians succeeded in finally mopping up all the defenses which the Americans then overran at one splendid burst and other divisions of home troops on the left completed the capture of Guoy and Le Catelet. The American performance that day was truly magnificent, as their fighting has been on every occasion when they have fought with British troops on this front."

COLORED SOLDIERS CREDITED WITH BREAKING ALL HUN-KILLING RECORDS.

By Charles H. Grasty

(Special Cable to Herald and Journal)

London, Aug. 6, 1918.—Officers from the front bring astonishing reports of the work done by American Colored troops brigaded with Gen. Gouraud's army east of Rheims. Their specialty is the bayonet, in the use of which they excel all others, and they have piled up a score in killing Germans which breaks previous records. French officers are delighted with their prowess and will welcome fresh Colored drafts to work alongside their own Africans.

He told her that the first American to receive the Croix de Guerre with the accompanying palm branch decoration from the French government was a Negro soldier. A French general visited the hospital where the Colored soldier was recovering from wounds and pinned the cross and the additional palm decoration on his breast, and then stooped down and kissed him upon both cheeks.

WHOLE 369TH INFANTRY HAS WON THE FRENCH WAR CROSS

Black American Soldiers Received Baptism of Fire—Despite Barrage, Gas and Shrapnel, Machine Gunners Remained at Their Posts, Coolly Dismounted Pieces and Reassembled Them—Two Guns Fire 5,000 Rounds—Lieutenant Shaw Controlled His Guns by Rolling From One to the Other—Conspicuous Bravery Demonstrated in Face of Fusillade of Shell—Huns' Infiltering Process Gained No Ground—Black Americans Repulsed Boches—Germans Sustained Heavy Casualties — Colonel Hayward's Confidence in His "Boys" Vindicated—This Regiment Had Tough Sledding "Over Here" Trying to Train to Render Such Valiant and Commendable Service "Over There."

With the American Armies in France.—The 369th (former 15th N. Y.) Inf., colored, United States National Guardsmen, has had its baptism of fire on the fighting fields of France and acquitted itself so well that the French commander of the sector has cited the whole regiment as worthy of receiving the war cross. This regiment's repulse of the enemy attack on the early morning of June 12 (possibly at Belleau Wood or Bourches) was briefly referred to in the official communique.

A later and official report of the engagement brings out interesting details and gives credit to the officers and men for fine fighting qualities displayed in their initial experience under shell and machine gun fire. The French commander of that sector has given the regiment the highest possible commendation for the results accomplished and the splendid fighting spirit shown by the American black soldiers.

For several days preceding the attack there were evidences that the enemy was preparing to strike a blow. Two days before one of the main points held by the regiment had been subjected to a strong bombardment of nearly 100 shells, gas and shrapnel. Prior to the heavy enemy artillery barrage occurring on the morning of the 12th our advance groups heard movements apparently of narrow-gauge track trains in the wood back of the enemy lines, indicating they were getting ready for an attack.

RECEIVE BOX BARRAGE.

Every preparation had been made for meeting the move if it came. Besides the usual combat groups at the main points of the line a special machine gun section occupied a specially chosen position on a small salient projecting into the enemy line. It was accompanied by a combat group detailed from reserve company and carrying rifles and hand grenades.

It was 2:15 on the morning of the 12th that the order to "stand to" was given and all combat groups and the machine-gun section took their fighting position. The enemy artillery now opened a violent bombardment, engaging in a "box barrage," five of our main groups and the special machine gun position. The lines of this box barrage are well defined on the ground showing its outer circuit, with a considerable scattering of hits inside. The shells were mostly 77s, with some 155s gas, shrapnel and high explosives. One of our points received particular attention, probably by minenwerfer, the craters of which were two yards in depth and five yards in diameter. The artillery bombardment was extremely violent at the start and tapered off gradually until it stopped after thirty minutes.

Meantime, under cover of the artillery the enemy infantry began its operations, adopting the infiltering process by which detached groups are thrust forward at a number of points instead of moving in mass formation. One group came on with two light machine guns, firing a rather intense fire into one of our positions. Another group was estimated to be about twenty-five or thirty. At another point on our front a stationary enemy patrol took position, firing with two small machine guns. Now and then squads would dart forward from their gun positions. Eight Germans got up to the wire in front of one of our positions and four others approached at another point.. Besires these assault groups which reached our lines there were undoubtedly additional enemy forces in assaulting columns and supporting columns which were unable to enter the field.

TWO GUNS FIRE 5,000 ROUNDS.

The special machine gun group under command of Lieutenant L. E. Shaw was in one of the most exposed centers of the fighting, being under terriffic artillery fire and the fire of two German machine guns. Lieutenant Shaw handled this very difficult situation with cool bravery. The enemy barrage was so close that it was impossible to stand up and Lieutenant Shaw controlled his guns by rolling from one to the other. His two guns fired 5,000 rounds.

Under this violent onslaught the men stuck to their posts, carried out every order without hesitation, often under galling fire, and showed a high degree of skill with their weapons and coolness and courage. Each machine gun jammed three times, was partly disassembled and cleaned under fire continuing in action throughout the engagement.

One team fired fourteen clips when the gun jammed. Reporting this to Lieutenant Shaw they were ordered to clear the jam. While under intense fire of artillery and machine guns they coolly dismounted the gun, remounted it and continued firing until ordered to cease. The fire of this machine gun section was doubtless wholly unexpected by the enemy, and this fact, coupled with the effective fire laid down, was chiefly instrumental in causing the withdrawal of the enemy.

INSTANCES OF INDIVIDUAL BRAVERY.

There were instances of individual bravery during the action. Private Howard Gaillard with a small rapid-fire piece was unable from his position to get a good fire to bear upon the advancing enemy groups, so he coolly and with entire disregard of danger, mounted the parapet and, while enemy bullets were flying around him, fired his rapid-fire piece from the hip, first at one group and then at the other. Privates Smithfield Jones and George Woods are especially mentioned for their coolness in the face of violent shelling when they dismounted the machine guns and then reassembled them and continued firing until the close of the action. Lieutenant R. C. Grame was in command of the group which received the brunt of the enemy fire, which, besides the barrage, added a heavy fire of large minenwerfers. There was no flinching; the group always worked under perfect control, keeping all combat posts manned, though three men were knocked down by the explosion of shells.. Others commended for courage in the face of fire are Corporal Frank Harden, Private H. D. Brown, Corporal Bean, Sergeant G. A. Morton and Private Sanders.

From the elaborate artillery preparation the size of the box barrage and the extensive front occupied the coup de main attempted by the enemy was clearly intended to be on a rather extensive scale.

Whatever may have been the ob of the attack it was successfully trated. No enemy party succeed getting within assaulting distar any part of the line except point, and here they were pressed back and then driven c shell-torn condition of the gro of the fierceness of the action the enemy suffered considera casualties is not doubted, as their groups pushed close into chine gun fire, but as their me they were carried off. The casual on our side were small and none them serious.

The chief importance of the action was in bringing this American unit for the first time under fire and demonstrating the steadiness and fighting ability of the men.

GALLANT COLORED FIGHTERS WON PLAUDITS FOR THEIR MANY SUCCESSFUL RAIDS

ARTICLE VII.

SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE.—The colored people back in Americ can well feel proud of the record made by the 92nd Division over here which has about 600 colored line officers, and whose rank and file is com posed exclusively of colored soldiers. Here is the record of the 92nd as combatant regiment up to November 8th, 1918:

When the Marbache sector was taken over by the 92nd Division of "Blac Devils," as the Germans call them, "No Man's Land" was owned by the Ger mans, and here they were aggressively on the offensive. They, the Germans held Belie Farm, Bois De Tete O'Or, Bois De Frehaut, Voivrotte Farm, Voiv rotte Woods, Bois De Cheminot and Moulon Brook. The constantly aggres sive action of patrols, day and night, from the 92nd resulted in many cas ualties to the Germans, and the capture of many prisoners.

Each of the places named above were raided, as was also Epley, an patrols from the division have penetrated north nearly to the east and wes line through Pagny. The Germans were driven north beyond Frehau and Voivrotte to Cheminot bridge and in his desperation the Hun attempt ed to destroy the Seilie bridge, after having flooded the Seilie, proving con clusively that he regards the black troops that compose the 92nd Division a one he cannot successfully withstand. West of the Seilie river excellent re sults have followed the energetic offensive action of this doughty wing of th Allied army, the Germans losing heavily in killed and wounded and prison ers. In nearly every instance, these raids made by troopers of this Divisio were made under the command of colored line officers.

This record made by these colored soldiers must, of necessity, arous the greatest enthusiasm back in the States and merit the plaudits of the rac for the gallant fighting machine. So wonderful have been the achievement of the 92nd that the division commander was impelled to send out a bulleti of congratulation, to be read before each unit of the division. This prou record must forever set at rest the question of colored soldiers following an fighting under their own officers, and it must forever establish the effi ciency of colored officers, who have done splendidly under the most tryin circumstances.

Needham Roberts Is Accorded Monster Reception Headed by Mayor Donnelly

Trenton, N. J., Nov. 15.—Crowds of people, including citizens of both races, of Trenton and the adjoining communities, joined in a monster home-coming reception last Wednesday night in honor of Private Needham Roberts, the soldier hailing from Trenton, member of the 369th infantry, the "Fighting Fifteenth," of New York, who so distinguished himself in France some months ago by his bravery and rare fighting qualities as to win the French Croix de Guerre and a personal citation for valorous conduct from Gen. Pershing, commander-in-chief of the American expeditionary forces.

Rout Twenty Germans

It will be remembered that Roberts, with a fellow soldier in arms, Harry Johnson, put to rout twenty Germans who attacked them while they were doing guard duty at one of the allies' most important strategic points on France's western front. They thus saved the lives of thousands of their sleeping comrades. The reception was general throughout Trenton and its environs, and an impromptu parade was one of the striking features of the occasion, participated in by the appreciative citizens, regardless of race or color.

Scott Sends Letter

At a big mass meeting held in the state armory, Hon. Frederick W. Donnelly, mayor of Trenton, through whose earnest co-operation the reception was conceived and made a brilliant success, presided and delivered a stirring address, in which he lauded without stint the masterly courage of Trenton's hero. A ringing letter was sent by Dr. Emmett J. Scott, special assistant to the secretary of war at Washington, who was presented by official business from being present.

Victorious Troops Cross the Ourcq Simultaneously with French in Face of Terrific Fire—Enemy May Fall Back to the Aisne

Chicago Defender

With the American Armies, Sunday.—The Americans crossed the Ourcq simultaneously with the French just before daybreak this morning. They approached the stream, which here is about 20 feet wide and two feet deep, in the face of machine gun fire directed by Germans stationed among trees not far from the north bank.

Capt. Smith

The Americans waded across and engaged in a severe fight with the Germans, who were so well intrenched and so plentifully supplied with ammunition that the Americans returned to the south side, where they waited for an hour. At the end of that period they plunged into the stream again. The first company was led by Capt. Smith of an Illinois regiment and started straight for the machine gun nests. Three units crossed the river. Two more followed. Then more troops went across and continued the advance northward, reaching the edge of the village of Sergy.

There can be no doubt now that, whatever their plans for the future may be, the Germans have received a tremendous setback in their military program. Driven back to the Ourcq and perhaps much farther, they yesterday gave evidence in many places of a degree of excitement and haste that is quite foreign to the system, calm and thoroughness with which Germans credit themselves.

It became very evident early today that the Germans did not intend to give battle south of the Ourcq. It seemed probable that they would withdraw as far as Vesle and possibly back to the Aisne before risking decisive combat with the reinforced French.

15TH REGIMENT CITED BY FRENCH FOR BRAVERY IN SEPTEMBER DRIVE

The New York Age 12-7-18

The Age has received a copy of the citation for Croix de Guerre awarded to the 369th Regiment of U. S. Infantry (formerly 15th New York Infantry), for its operations as a combat unit of a French Division in the great offensive in Champagne, September and October, 1918, by the French Commanding General. This was the engagement referred to in the letter of Col. Haywood, published in The Age of November 2.

The original citation in French reads as follows:

LEGION OF HONOR FOR CAPT. CLARK

WRITES OF WAR HORRORS

Men Fell Like Leaves in Sechault Assault, He Says.

Flushing, Nov. 30.—In the following letter dated October 11, which he has written to his father, Principal John Holley Clark, of the Flushing High School, Capt. John Holley Clark, jr., of Company F, 369th Infantry, formerly the Fifteenth New York Infantry (colored), tells of being recommended by the Colonel of his regiment for the Legion of Honor.

"We are resting now, comfortably dug in on the side of the hill away from the Germans. The awful shells don't come near us any more, and our only reminders of the noise of the war are the French heavies around us and the cannonado far ahead. It is peace and happiness after the wful days and nights we went through. I've slept from twelve to eighteen hours for the last five days and am about caught up.

"Two weeks ago today we left our comfortable billets to bivouac in a wet, soggy field, and what with frenzied preparations and the march forward, which started two days later, I had no sleep but a few hours here and there when all the officers but two in the battalion had to go to the rear exhausted. I don't know but I seem to have a certain reserve of strength and an ability to rest at odd moments that carries me through when younger and more vigorous men fall by the wayside. De A. was shell-shocked and paralyzed on the left side on the next to the last day of the battle and A. and P. were slightly wounded on the last day. I didn't get a scratch. God must have been watching over me through all the hell, with my men falling like leaves around me.

"Our battalion distinguished itself above the others and had the hardest work to do. With the Third we went in the first day. That day finished the Third. Major S. and six other officers were wounded, two or three were killed and the battalion reduced to (deleted). We took up the burden that night and for the next three days carried it on till we caught up with the First Battalion, which had got ahead of us on Sunday and whom we followed into Sechault.

Men Fell by the Dozens.

"We had all the horrors and some of the glorious moments of war in our days of advance. I saw my men fall beside me by the dozens, while the cool, determined Boche worked his machine guns as if they were nozzles and putting out a fire. We could see them plainly in the smoke and the mist of dawn walking coolly from gun to gun, their figures distinct, but clouded and reminding me of nothing so much as the Nibelungen at work. I went out to the scene of the battle after we were relieved, and there were all the pitiful evidences of it, half of my skirmish line lying there stiff and cold where they had been hit, heroically fighting that stream of death. Then I went back down the ravine where I had helped my wounded back—so many of my poor boys with their feet shot away and their arms, and with wounds in their heads or bodies—all strugling manfully on with me without a murmur of complaint. And then the dugout where we had put so many to await the doctor, eighteen of my men dying there, suffering, bleeding and dying, and nothing I couldd o but cheer them and give them water and go on with those who could fight.' The dugout now had nothing btu dead men in it—one or two who had either died there of their wounds or had been hit again by a German shell which hit near the door.

Will Never Forget.

"All those horrible heart-rending things will always be unforgettable and seem to become more and more humanly awful as the battle gets farther behind me. During it I could not think of them except as facts.

"But above all the horrors of it stands out the exhilaration of leadership, the pride in my men and in their heroism. Where I bade them go, they went, to their death, too often, but with a heroic, glad willingness that makes up for all the rest. They were my men—the men I had worked with and nursed and brought up as a father would his children, never knowing what glories they had undisclosed within them. The time came and I leaped forth their leader. They followed bravely, faithfully, even unto death. This, more than anything, is my consolation for all the losses and discouragements. The colonel has recommended me, with only two others, for the Legion of Honor."

The advance of Capt. Clark's battalion was characterized by a French lieutenant, who was their friend and adviser, as "splendid, splendid." The 369th Infantry was brigaded with the French in Gen. Gouraud's army almost from the first and the French were on the right and on the left of the regiment in the assault and capture of Sechault. Capt. Clark has two brothers in the service, Capt. Merrel B. Clark, who is in France, and Lieut. Arthur Clark, of the Flying Corps, in this country.

Wounded Hero of War Is Guest of Chamber

For the first time in the history of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburg a Negro was its guest yesterday. On his breast was the Croix de Guerre, the distinguished service medal and the United States medal of honor. He was Needham Roberts of Hoboken, N J, one of the first to fight when Uncle Sam's boys got over there. Roberts was a member of the Fifteenth New York Infantry, a Negro regiment.

Roberts and four companions were on outpost duty one night when they were surrounded by 30 Germans. Roberts hurled a hand grenade and got things going. One of his companions hurled another after he had been struck down by a German rifle butt. Roberts and the rest of the Negroes still on their feet were armed with bolo knives and they started into the overwhelming German odds. Twenty Germans were killed. The rest escaped to their own trenches. Every one of the Negroes was wounded, Roberts being permanently disabled. His elbow was shattered.

Private Needham Roberts of Trenton, who gained distinction by being one of the first members of the 367th Infantry to receive the Croix de Guerre, and who, with Private Henry Johnson, defeated more than twenty Germans, is now a patient at the base hospital at Lakewood, N. J. Roberts received a serious gun wound and it is doubtful if he will be able to see service again.

The hero is not only the proud wearer of the French Cross of War, which was awarded for gallantry under fire, but also has a regimental citation conferred by General Pershing for conspicuous bravery.

Roberts, who is an extremely modest young man, was a patient for a short while at Ellis Island, and while there was the center of attraction. Roberts has been a patient in various hospitals. Aside from the wound in the right arm, Roberts was bayoneted in the left hip and fragments of shrapnel entered his right leg. Upon his recovery it is planned by the colored people to tender him a state-wide reception.

WON AGAINST HEAVY ODDS, WOUNDED AS THEY WERE.

Homeric Battle in the Dark With Rifles, Bolo Knives and Hand Grenades.

Sergt. Needham Roberts of the 369th (old 15th New York) Regiment, colored, who, with Henry Johnson of the same regiment, won the French War Cross for heroism in France last May, is on a furlough from the Military hospital at Cape May, N. J. He called at The World office last week to express his appreciation of the story of his exploits cabled to this paper by Lincoln Eyre, The World's Paris correspondent.

Sergt. Roberts has been in hospitals ever since his exploit. He was granted a furlough on October 25 to healed, but he still shows signs of the desperate wounds he received.

Lincoln Eyre, in his story of his visit to the New York negro regiment in their trenches north of Ste. Menehould, west of Verdun, where he learned of the herosim of Johnson and Roberts, said:

Battle in the Dark.

"The names of the men will stand out forever on the roll of honor of their race. Battling in the blackness of night with their rifles, hand grenades and a bolo knife, wholly deprived of the assistance of their comrades, they put to flight an enemy assaulting party at least twenty-four strong. Roberts, wounded in three places, stretched out helplessly in the mud, hurled grenades even while the hands of a muscular German were about his throat.

"Johnson did even more. Having shot one of his foemen down and clubbed another with the butt of his rifle, he sprang to the aid of Roberts with his bolo knife, clove open the skull of one German and disembowelled another. As the enemy fell into disorderly retreat Johnson, three times wounded, sank to the ground, seized a grenade alongside his prostrate body, and literally blew one of the fleeing Germans to fragments. In the belief of their white commander (Col. William Haywood) the two negroes by their valor and intelligence frustrated a well developed plan to assail one of our most important points of resistance.

Their Citations.

"The men's citations in the divisional order of the day follow: 'Private Johnson, finding himself on night sentry duty and being attacked by a group of more than a dozen Germans, put one hors de combat with rifle shots and two others with knife cuts. Although wounded thrice by revolver bullets and grenades at the start of the fight, he went to the help of his wounded comrade as the latter was about to be carried off by the enemy, and continued the struggle until the Germans were forced to flee. He gave a magnificent example of courage and energy. Private Roberts, finding himself on night sentry duty, attacked and badly wounded in the leg by a group of Germans, continued to throw hand grenades, although fallen to the ground, until the enemy was forced to flee. A good and brave soldier.'"

Roberts, after receiving the Croix de Guerre from the French General of the division, was sent home to America with a compound fracture of the right elbow caused by an explosive bullet; a fracture of the right little finger caused by a bullet, a bayonet wound eighteen inches long necessitating sixteen stitches on the right side and suffering from gas. He has been in the hospital at Cape May since until October 25.

The colored people of Harlem wanted to give a public reception to Roberts, but the Mayor of Trenton, his native city, had planned one for Nov. 6, and Trenton was given the precedence. Aside from the stiffness of his side and finger, and a little forgetfulness caused by shock, which will disappear in time, he says he feels as well as he ever did.

TRIBUTE TO NEGRO TROOPS.

Gen. Roy Hoffman Goes to Funston to Command Depot Brigade.

Brig. Gen. Roy Hoffman, who returned the middle of October from active service in France, arrived in Kansas City today on his way to Camp Funston, where he will take command of the Depot Brigade. He will relieve Col. Mortimer O. Bigelow. Since his return from overseas General Hoffman has been in command at Camp Shelby, Hattiesburg, Miss.

Heading the 93d Division, composed of negro regiments, General Hoffman went to France in February, this year. After commanding the negroes six months he was transferred to the 1st Division, under General Bullard.

"The American negro is as dependable and as good a fighting man as any soldier in the world," General Hoffman said at the Hotel Baltimore today. The first American soldiers to receive recognition for valor in Europe were two negroes, the general said. Upon his recommendation, they received the Croix de Guerre from the French after they had repulsed a German raiding party of twenty-five or thirty men, killing or wounding seven of them.

"We didn't expect the war to end until spring," said General Hoffman. "The German Army was not beaten yet, and we didn't appreciate the critical character of the German internal situation."

General Hoffman will leave for Camp Funston tomorrow morning.

N Y C POST
OCTOBER 12, 1918

No Southerner is likely to make objection to the War Department's naming of a camp after a negro soldier. Camp Alexander, at Newport News, has been designated in honor of the late Lieut. John H. Alexander, Ninth U. S. Cavalry, a graduate of West Point, who, in the words of Brig.-Gen. Hutcheson, was "a man of ability, attainment, and energy." What the common sacrifices of white and black on the battlefield and at home are doing to soften racial lines we cannot compute till after the war. If we may judge from the press comment on race relations which the Southern Workman, of Hampton Institute, publishes monthly, it is much. The latest issue includes a quotation from the Memphis Commercial Appeal, relating how "numerous white people in Memphis" have assisted in erecting a community house for negro soldiers; an excerpt from the Charlotte Observer praising "the enthusiastic farewell given by the colored population to the outgoing recruits from Camp Greene" as evidence of the negro's "recognition of his responsibility in the war"; an item from the Athens, Ga., Banner recording that the Red Cross Canteen Committee of Chattanooga had recently "shown every consideration" to a regiment of negroes, distributing food and post cards and writing home for them.

PERSHING EXTOLS BRAVERY OF ~~NEGRO TROOPS IN FRANCE~~

BROOKLYN N Y EAGLE
MAY 20, 1918

Two Colored Soldiers Held Off 20 German Raiders; Saved Comrades.

HAND-TO-HAND FIGHT

Washington, May 20—General Pershing's communique today brought its best story, so far, of the valor and sacrifice of American blood on the battlefields in France. It also gave eloquent testimony to the spirit of democracy which knows no race nor color.

It told of the gallant death of Major Raoul Lufbery premier American ace of the Flying Corps, gentleman globe trotter and one of the first flyers of the celebrated Lafayette Escadrille. It told also of the heroic fight of two American negro soldiers, both wounded, who withstood a raiding party of twenty Germans, and saved comrades from surprise and capture.

Notwithstanding these two incidents General Pershing referred to yesterday as a "quiet day."

The communique follows:

"Headquarters American Expeditionary Forces, May 19, 1918.

"Section A—Aside from the activity of the air forces on both sides, the day was quiet at all points occupied by our troops. Our aviators brought down two hostile machines.

"Section B—Reports in hand show a notable instance of bravery and devotion shown by two soldiers of an American colored regiment operating in a French sector. Before daylight on May 15 Private Henry Johnson and Private Roberts, while on sentry duty at some distance from one another, were attacked by a German raiding party, estimated at twenty men, who advanced in two groups, attacking at once from flank and rear.

"Both men fought bravely in hand-to-hand encounters, one resorting to the use of a bolo knife after his rifle jammed, and further fighting with bayonet and butt became impossible. There is evidence that at least one and probably a second German was severely cut. A third is known to have been shot.

"Attention is drawn to the fact that the colored sentries were first attacked and continued fighting after receiving wounds and despite the use of grenades by a superior force. They should be given credit for preventing, by their bravery, the capture of any of our men. Three of our men were wounded, two by grenades. All are recovering and the wounds in two cases are slight.

"Major Lufbery was killed in flight, during which he had been in combat. He was seen to fall from his machine, which itself fell a short distance from him. He was possibly wounded or dead before he fell. Earlier reports stated that he was at the time engaged in a long running fight and was flying upside down at 2,000 feet.

"Last night one of our aviators engaged two German planes and brought down one in the vicinity of Apremont.

"This morning Lieutenant Douglass Campbell, flying at 4,500 meters, brought down a hostile biplane in the vicinity of Flirey. The hostile plane fell within our lines.

"On May 18 a descendant of one of the French officers, who served with the American Revolutionary Forces, presented in the name of the descendants of all such officers a stand of national and regimental colors to two regiments of a newly arrived American division. These flags bore the inscription:

"'From the Sons of the French Champion for American Liberty to the American Champion for ~~France~~ and Humanity.'"

ANOTHER LAD OF OLD 15TH AGAIN STOPS THE HUNS

William Butler, One Time Elevator Operator, Bags Four Huns in Hand-to-Hand Encounter and Saves His Lieutenant

WITH THE ALLIED FORCES ON THE MARNE (Deleted).—Another colored American fighting "over there" has placed his name on the roll of heroes fighting in the ranks of the Allies. The latest one to have his name placed in that galaxy of colored heroes headed by Johnson and Roberts is Wm. Butler, a sergeant in (deleted), who before his enlistment in New York was an elevator runner. Sergeant Butler distinguished himself so as to win the Distinguished honor of the Chroix de Guerre, which places him on the roll of honor with Roberts and Johnson. Butler's act of bravery took place on the morning of Aug. 18 in the sector near Maison de Champaigne. There had been a lively artillery firing which presages a violent attack of the enemy. A strong raiding party, cutting in from both sides, with the aid of a barrage, managed to isolate four of the Allies' combat posts. In one of these posts was Lieutenant A. M. Jones of Butler's company. He stepped over to ght a star shell. Five Boches sprang upon him. He and four of his men were pulled from the trench and shoved towards the line of Germans, along an old trench in disuse, which had been used for communication purposes in No Man's Land. Right here is where Sergt. Butler got onto the job. He with two of his comrades were crouching. Seeing the predicament of his lieutenant, Sergeant Butler yelled in good Lenox Avenue style, "Look out, you bush hikers, I am coming." This coming to the ears of captured lieutenant, he sang out, "Don't fire, Seargeant." "Not yet, sir, but soon," was the reply. This colloquy, unknown to the Germans got them into a most excited state and thinking they had fallen into an ambuscade, they wheeled towards Butler's hiding place. As the five fell back toward the American lines, Lieut. Jones cried, "Now let them have it, Sergeant." Well did he let them have it. You better guess he did! He aimed his automatic rifle so accurately that he killed four Huns and badly wounded an officer who died later, besides the valiant Sergeant put a score or more to a disgraceful rout. This is why Sergeant Butler had the Croix de Guere bestowed upon him.

MARTIN H. BRIGGS OF ALBANY AWARDED FRENCH CROSS

Monroe Street Negro Boy, Friend of Henry Johnson, Decorated for Exceptional Bravery Before Metz

Albany has another Negro hero. He is Private Martin H. Briggs of Company C, Three Hundred and Sixty-ninth infantry, formerly the old Fifteenth New York. Private Briggs has been awarded the French war cross for exceptional bravery before Metz according to an announcement of the war department to his mother, Mrs. Charles Briggs of 10 Monroe street.

Private Briggs is a friend of Henry Johnson, the Albany Negro soldier whose heroism early in the war was heralded around the world. They were comrades, having been members of the same company until Johnson was wounded. They both enlisted about the same time a year ago last summer, shortly after the United States declared war.

The telegram to Mrs. Briggs announced that her son had been wounded but was recovering and had sailed for home from overseas. Private Briggs is well known in this city. He has two brothers, Howard and Arthur Briggs. Private Briggs is only 22 years old.

REGIMENT WINS DISTINCTION OF BEING IN MOST ADVANCED POSITION ON THE WESTERN FRONT AS FIGHTING STOPS

The New York Age 11-21-18

The old 15th New York Infantry has won additional honors, for it now enjoys the distinction of having occupied the most advanced section of the western front nearest Germany held by American troops when the fighting ceased.

When the armistice was signed and the world war came to an abrupt close the colored fighters from New York, who are brigaded with the Seventh French Army, were in Thann, Alsace.

With the French and Senegalese, the colored Americans were holding the town of Thann, which is in one of the lost provinces won back by France from Germany after many years.

Noble Hall, war correspondent of the New York Sun, in telling of the presence of the 15th and other troops in Thann when it became known that Germany had surrendered says:

"The whole valley was bedecked with British, French and American flags and filled with the joyous clanging of bells, which for four years had been rung only for the dead.

"The first people to cross the line were Alsatian peasants carrying food and warm clothing to relatives, but at 11 o'clock German troops began to come unarmed, pleading for tobacco. The men passed over No Man's Land without hindrance other than deep belts of barbed wire and an elaborate system of pitfalls, which made a frontal attack impossible on this sector.

"It took fully an hour of strenuous effort to cross the 800 yards which separated the lines. The Germans were either very old or very young troops and seemed well fed and warmly clothed, which was in marked contrast to the plight of the civilian people of Alsace. The morale of the German troops was utterly bad and they acted as men without honor or sense of shame, and openly rejoiced that they had been beaten. Nothing mattered in their eyes so long as they had to fight no more.

"At night star shells and rockets were sent up and the scene was like a fireworks display on a giant scale. Back of the American lines we heard that some of the German had refused to return to their own lines and were sent to the rear under guard.

"All through reconquered Alsace the joy of the people was contagious and profoundly impressive. French officers said the people's faith had never wavered. French was spoken everywhere, all traces of Teutonic occupation had vanished and one looked in vain for even a tradesman's sign in German. If Alsace had not been truly French no such transformation would have been humanly possible."

COLORED SOLDIERS REPEL A VICIOUS ATTACK OF NIGHT-RAIDING HUNS.

WITH THE COLORED DIVISION OF TROOPS ON THE AISNE FRONT, Sept. 19.—Launching a fierce line of attack on the German offensive today the Colored American troops on this end of the line advanced nearly two miles into the enemy's line of attack. As the wave of battle sweeps on victorious the Colored troops carry with them the plaudits and attention of the world because of their stubborn persistence in pushing back the enemy and breaking down their line with every step of the plucky Colored soldiers' move up. They have already shown that they are able to withstand the big shells bursting on all sides with an unlimited amount of courage. Sunday morning, September 16, Colored units of troops began to wage battle in the region of the Meuse and the Moselle and continued a sharp attack on the enemy throughout the day. South of La Bassee a railway triangle was captured and completely wrecked by the Colored troops.

Colored Officer Wins Service Cross.

The story of how Corporal Isaac Valley of Gerald, Kan., won the distinguished service cross is an inspiration to every soldier of the Colored units. Valley, who served three years in the Twenty-fourth United States Colored Regiment, before being transferred to these new units, is one of the many Colored troopers of honor at the front today. During a pitched battle a private, attempting to throw a grenade, dropped it in the trenches in the midst of his comrades. Valley had no time to pick it up and throw it out. He, therefore, put his foot on it and shoved it into the mud. The grenade exploded and tore off part of his foot. His only comment was as he was carried back to a nearby hospital, was, "I saved the others if it did get me."

When General Pershing heard of the incident he awarded the ribbon which is the ambition of every fighting man to possess.

372 Regiments of Colored Becomes Noted for Their Daring Throughout French Country.

Spcial to The Freeman.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 27.—Word was received here today from France, stating that a number of colored soldiers had been decorated for bravery by French officers. Among the American colored soldiers to be presented the Croix de Guerre for bravery was Sergeant Robert Terry, of the First Separate Company of Baltimore, Md., and Sergeant Charles Hughes, of the First Separate Battalion of Washington, D. C. The companies to which these men belong are now known as the 372nd regiment, and are now brigaded with the French troops under command of French officers. During the last drive made on the Aisne front, these colored troops fought one of the greatest battles in the history of the war when they ran the Huns across the Vesle river and succeeded in capturing French cities and towns that the Germans had held since 1914. It was during this drive that Sergeant Terry and Sergeant Hughes distinguished themselves by capturing nearly thirty Huns and made them prisoners by their own hands. So marvelous was the deed to the French officers—high in command—immediately commanded their presence at headquarters, where they were royally treated and presented with the Croix de Guerre.

LIEUT. GAILLARD COMMENDS BLACK TROOPS

The Freeman

IN A LONG LETTER TO JAMES MARTIN POINTS OUT THAT WE HAVE A GREAT WORK IF WE DON'T WEAKEN.

9-28-18

Lieuteant Edward S. Gaillard, formerly a well known merchant tailor with an establishment at 407 Indiana avenue, who was recently reported to be badly wounded in battle at the front in France, has recently written a letter to Mr. James Martin, of the Martin Brothers' National Jacket Co., of 224 Indiana avenue, in which he, the soldier, made no statement to the effect that he had been wounded in any manner but that he had been a sufferer from rheumatism ever since landing in France and that he was confined in a hospital there. Among other things Mr. Gaillard says in his letter to Mr. Martin that there is great work over there to perfom if we don't weaken. He speaks highly about the French people. "For an instance," he says, "they are the most affable and amiable nation of people one could ever meet. They are really the most hospitable and friendly people I have ever seen and it is not superfluous. While I have met French people before in varied numbers and understood somewhat their customs, I had never met them en masse. I have my first time to meet one a second time that was not just the same as he was the first time notwithstanding the surroundings had been changed or influence might have been attempted. So far as the war is concerned you read more about it than I could tell you, but I will say this: If things move up as successfully in the next four months as in the past six weeks much will have been accomplished. Our boys are certainly doing their part courageously," said the gallant lieutenant in closing his letter to Mr. Martin.

TWO FRENCH GENERALS UNITE IN COMMENDING THREE AMERICAN REGIMENTS WITH MOROCCAN TROOPS

New-York Age

How the Black Troops acquitted themselves in the last Big Drive, just before the armistice was signed, is told in a concise manner by First Lieutenant Arrington S. Helm, Senior Chaplain of the 372nd Infantry, in a letter to the Editor of THE AGE, from Somewhere in France, dated November 12:

The Black Troops acquitted themselves very creditably in the last Big Drive. The Troops referred to are those that were in our Sector; three Colored American Regiments and one Moroccan Division. We are in a French Division and the French General complimented the Black Troops very highly. He addressed us as Friends from the bottom of his heart. He expresses his gratitude for the glory which my Regiment helped to contribute to his Division. He always had full confidence in us; but we sur

Our Division has fought for nine days. During that time we advanced five miles in the face of powerfully organized defences; we took nearly 600 prisoners, captured 15 guns of different calibers, 20 minenwerfers and nearly 150 machine guns. We secured an enormous amount of engineering material and important supplies of artillery ammunition.

The Red Hand is the insignia of our Division. The Red Hand Division took the Boche by the throat and made him cry for mercy. General Gaybet adds: "You have well avenged our glorious dead."

General Garnier Duplessis commanded our army corps. He too addresses to us his most sincere thanks and warmest congratulations for the glorious success achieved by their admirable ardor and indomitable tenacity. He salutes the brave American regiments, who have rivalled in intrepidity their French comrades. He adds: "I cannot recount here the feats which have been performed for every one of the days of that victorious journey, they are inscribed on the conquered grounds, materialized by the trophies taken from the enemy and engraved in the heart of the chief who bows before the troops and salutes them profoundly."

The Colonel, Quiller by name, commanding the I. D. (Infantry Division) has recommended the 372nd Regiment for a citation in the orders of the French Army worded as follows:

"Gave proof during its first engagement of the finest qualities of bravery and daring, which are the virtues of assaulting troops.

"Under the orders of Colonel Tupes, darted with superb gallantry and admirable scorn of danger of the assault of a position continuously defended by the enemy; taking it by storm under an exceptional machine gun fire. Continued the progressive in spite of enemy artillery fire and very severe losses. They made numerous prisoners, captured cannons, machine guns and important war material."

The French General says our troops have been admirable in their attack. He says our Colonel has every reason to be proud of the courage of his officers and men. The General considers it an honor to have us in his Division. My regiment, because of its passed his hopes.

bravery and dash, won the admiration of the Moroccan Division, who themselves are "shock troops." During those hard days our Division was at all times in the advance of all other Divisions of the Army Corps. General Gaybet visited our wounded and found their morale higher than any praise. He sent us all his thanks.

HAMPTON, Va.—One of the colored heroes recently awarded the Distinguished Service Cross is Thomas Henry Davis, a former Hampton Institute student. The citation for heroism follows:

The New York Age 5-24-19

"Private (first class) Thomas H. Davis, Sanitary Detachment, 368th Infantry, for extraordinary heroism in action at Binarville, France, Sept. 5, 1918. Private Davis with an officer and another soldier, voluntarily left shelter and crossed an open space 50 yards wide, swept by shell and machine gun fire, to rescue a wounded soldier, whom they carried to a place of safety. Home address: Mrs. Frances Davis, mother, 49 West Lincoln street, Hampton."

Mr. W. E. Hill,
Biddle University,
Charlotte, N. C.

DEAR SIR:—Seeing this article in "The Stars and Stripes," a paper run by the A. E. F. soldiers, I thought it might be of some interest to you for the AFRICO. So am I cutting it out and sending it to you that you may see what the "Yankee Negroes" did. I hope it will be of some historical value to the race.

We boys who are in this University are getting on nicely. The French people take special interest in the colored men. They like us and they are sincere about it. There are 9 of us here out of about 1,500 students of the A. E. F.

I hope you all are having a successful term at Biddle, and your paper is still doing a great work among our people.

I shall be here until the last of June.

Hope you and family are well. Regards to all.

Sincerely,
ROBERT N. TOATLEY.

YANKEE NEGROES IN HORIZON BLUE LED WAY TO RHINE.

(The Stars and Stripes.)

Blue denim to horizon blue—American pick to French rifle, with lots of use for it from Rheims to the Rhine—that is only part of the story of the 93rd division, the negro soldiers from New York and points west who fought under the tricolor and in French equipment from the time they heard the first big one 'till the kaiser took the count.

Despite their strange surroundings, their stranger equipment, their few days in which to learn the trench tricks of French veterans, and the occasional blind spots in liaison when it was too late for "no compree," the 369th, 370th, 371st and 372nd colored regiments came through with two regimental Croix de Guerre and a great deal of honest pride in the shoulder insignia that shows on its black background a blue French helmet as a memento of their very foreign service.

When this division joined the French it was blended even more perfectly into its background, as far as the eye could see, than any white regiment could be. Nearly all the German intelligence officers swallowed them whole as African Colonials. Even one group that stuck to the Yankee brand of tin hat was credited in Boche reports as French blacks equipped with English helmets."

The 93rd was a friend in need for our ally and in most cases they became friends indeed, with every effort made to put them on equality and the French cruisine strained to the utmost to produce a kick-proof chow.

The 369th, whose reports are the most completely written, was put at the disposal of the 16th division of the Eighth French army corps on March 18, 1918. Three weeks training within sound of the guns under French instructors and with French equipment was a startling change for men who had had only guard duty in the States and stevedore work in France. On April 8 they were put into a sector, doubled with French battalions, two battalions in the front line from the west bank of the Aisne to Ville-sur-Tourbe. They were treated with great cordiality by the French and the sub-sector, named "Afrique," became veritably their own when it was put under their commanding officer on April 29.

Despite the difference in language there were no misunderstandings, and a remarkably efficient support from the French kitchens did a great deal to "increase the efficiency," according to official reports.

It was the fate of the 369th to take an active part in the famous July defensive near Rheims, where the masterly stroke of French stretegy lured the Germans into a futile pounding of empty trenches over whose ruins they wasted the force of the drive that was to take them to Chalons. While the Germans tore the network of forward trenches with tons of high explosive, a screen of men and guns was kept in the front lines and a part of this screen was made of men of the 369th. For a time the terrible bombardment cut off all liaison and runners linked the distance that telephone wires could not weather. Without rest or food, the men were finally withdrawn and marched six kilometers where they acted as relief for the Moroccans of the 161st division, sharing in a successful counter-attack.

From this time on they were in continual action in the fighting about Butte de Mesnil and the Main-de-Massiges, from July 23 to August 19. Here a violent German barrage cut off a lieutenant and four men who were made prisoner and were being taken back to the German lines when a sergeant appeared and, with nothing but his bayonet and a goodly supply of furor Africanus, killed the guard and released his comrades. In German reports captured later the affair was described as a "blutlustig" attack by superior numbers.

In the Meuse-Argonne drive the 369th was with the 161st French (Moroccan) division, and on September 26 helped the Moroccans in the capture of Dormans. The next day, with liaison with units on their flanks partially destroyed, they advanced through the dark and the uncut barbed wire, accomplishing what the French declared was the "well-nigh impossible." On the 29th they had a large share in the capture of Sechault.

The regiment was given the Croix de Guerre, its colors were decorated and on November 18 it reached the Rhine, in the "marche triomphale," the first Allied troops, their commander claims, to reach the river. In all their fighting they can boast that they never lost a prisoner or a foot o trench.

Two More Soldiers Cited For Bravery When Huns Flee From Verdun

Chicago Defender

New York, July 19.—According to information just made public by a wa correspondent of the New York Sun Privates Henry Gaillard and Harry Brown, members of a regiment from this state, distinguished themselves for bravery under severe attacks launched against them by Germans near Verdun on June 12th. The report read as follows:

"American Negro troops proved their value as fighters in the line east of Verdun on June 12, it is now permissible to state. The Germans attempted a raid in that sector and were completely repulsed by the Negroes.

"The boches began a terrific bombardment at one minute after midnight, throwing over between 3,000 and 4,000 shells from guns ranging in size from 67 to 340 millimeters. The bombardment was concentrated on small areas. Many of the shells made holes from 10 to 15 feet across.

"In the midst of this inferno the Negroes coolly stuck to their posts, operating machine guns and automatic rifles and keeping up such a steady barrage that the German infantry failed to penetrate the American lines. The Americans miraculously had only two wounded.

"Private Henry Gaillard of New York city, under shell fire, took his automatic rifle from its place of concealment, placed it on the parapet and met the attacking boches with a rain of bullets.

"Private Harry Brown, also of New York city, a member of the Signal Corps, found a telephone line was not working. Ignoring the barrage, he went out to repair the wire. He made twenty-five repairs.

"During the attack the crew of a machine gun was bowled over by a minenwerfer projectile, which made a 15-foot hole 10 feet from them. They all got up, remounted the gun and continued shooting until it jammed. Then, despite the terrific bombardment, they fixed it again and turned it on the Germans. This incident was repeated twice.

"Both French and American officers reported that the Negroes performed like veterans, they obeyed orders promptly, took risky duties voluntarily and compared well with the best troops on the west front.'

The Chronicle 7/18/18

By Charles Magill

Neadham Roberts, the first member of the old Fifteenth Infantry to be wounded in action in France; Neadham Roberts, who, with a brother soldier, Henry Johnson, held off 24 Germans alone; Neadham Roberts, who, with Johnson, electrified America and drew cartoon after cartoon in hundreds of white dailies throughout the country; Neadham Roberts, our hero, is here. All New York is proud of Sergt. Roberts (he was promoted to that title May 18th) and New York did her utmost, as only New York can do, to honor the hero. The sergeant arrived in New York Oct. 25 from a base hospital at Cape May. N. J., and remained here on furlough until Nov. 6, stopping with his brother, Norman Roberts, at 130 West 142d street. He wore on his breast several medals, among them the expert rifleman, marksman, sharpshooter, distinguished service, citation division, world's war campaign badge, French service medal, and the military medal bar. Sergt. Robert's wounds include an automatic pistol expolsive bullet in the right arm, which exploded in the elbow, causing fraction nerves; a bayonet wound 16 inches long, which compelled 14 stitches in the right side; a piece of shrapnel entered the bayonet wound. As a result of these wounds Roberts was invalided home and he will not return to France.

Telegrams From Home Town

Handed in at Trenton, N. J., to E. F. M., American Expeditionary Force, London.—Private Neadham Roberts, 369th Infantry, U. S. Expeditionary Forces, France: I desire to extend to you the congratulations and thanks of the citizens of Trenton for your inspiring acts of bravery, which have not only reflected glory upon yourself, your city and your Race, but which will live forever in the annals of American valor. Trenton is proud of you."

Received at 22 Great Winchester st., London, E. C. 2, 21484, EFM. Amex. 47: "You, her son, who has so gloriously upheld her best traditions on the battlefield, one name of Neadham Roberts will have a cherished place in the remembrance of all patriotic Americans long after this conflict shall have ended. Trenton salutes you.—Frederick W. Donnelly, mayor Trenton, N. J."

Oct. 11th.—Private Neadham Roberts, Cape May, N. J.—Dear Roberts: The city of Trenton rejoices in the fact that you are again on your native soil after having so nobly fought for freedom on French soil. Be of good cheer; the future holds sufficient good things in store to amply compensate you for all sacrifices you have made and for all pains you have suffered. Your father was to my home last night and agreed that I would write you and I thought best to write immediately so as to get some idea as to when you will get a chance to come home. I will head a committee to give you a flattering reception and in order to arrange for upward of 5,000 people to meet you at the station we must have at least 48 hours' notice. And, too, it is your father's wish that you would not ask to be sent home until after the influenza quarantine will have been lifted. Please notify me just as soon as you can just about what time in November you can get a furlough. With my highest regards to you, I am very respectfully, E. L. De Paue. clerk's office, Supreme court, Trenton, N. J."

Banqueted at the Dolphin

The culmination of these honors was in a grand banquet held Monday, Nov. 4, at the Dolphin. Hon. Charles W. Anderson acted as master of ceremonies and more than 100 people were present. Owing to the hurried manner, due to the shortness of Sergt. Roberts' furlough in New York, the banquet could not be made a bigger thing. James H. Anderson, editor of the Amsterdam News, and William White, general manager of the Defender, worked like Trojans to make the affair a success, assisted by the staff of the Chicago Defender and the staff of the Amsterdam News. Notably among them was Albert B. Mordecai, a former 24th Infantry man, who was acting as the sergeant's private secretary.

Manager Elmore Aids

"Frenchy," the popular manager of the Lafayette theater, who can always be found aiding anything where the Race or a member of the Race is concerned, has been nobly aiding the many affairs that have been arranged in Sergt. Roberts' honor. Not only did the Lafayette first bring the hero to the attention of the New York public. but Frenchy arranged a box party at the theater Friday night, at which a number of Roberts' friends and himself were present. This act of courtesy on the part of Frenchy, which we believe to be from his heart and not from ulterior motives, makes him more than ever a credit to the community here in Harlem. At the box party were several of Roberts' immediate family and a few friends. The box was beautifully decorated. On behalf of Manhattan Lodge of Elks a signet ring was presented to Roberts. During the evening a beautiful poem was recited by Daughter Phillips. The play, "The Man They Left Behind," portrayed an excellent lesson on patriotism, making the show peculiarly fit for the occasion. After Roberts had been introduced to the audience by C. H. Joell, the audience stood up and cheered to the strains of our national anthem.

Why Not Capt. Roberts?

Roberts, who is 21 years old, is a clean-cut young man and without his uniform would look more like a college chap. Born in Trenton, N. J., the son of Rev. and Mrs. Noman Roberts, he enlisted in the Fifteenth Infantry, New York during its early formation. Sergt. Roberts expects to be discharged shortly, and then hopes to be able to go to college. The young man's finances are not just what they might be, frankly speaking. It has come to our notice that nearly every wounded white hero who returns to this country invalided home has been promoted to a captaincy, majority, etc. Why not make Roberts a captain? No better way of our country's appreciation could be shown than promoting the young man. And our people should and must rally around in some concrete manner to make this hero—our hero—what he should be.

Corporal Scott, with Two Privates, on Patrol, Went Two Miles Into The German Lines and Got Important Information

(Special to the Independent)

Lenoir, N. C., August 10.—The following letter which appeared in the Lenoir News has been received here from Lt. J. L. Nelson, (white) who writes to his father, Mr. J. L. Nelson. The letter states that coporal Walter Scott, a Lenior draftee, has been cited for the "Croix de Guerre" for bravery. Scott is a l neoirWJuly bravery. Scott s a Lenior boy and his many friends are glad to hear that he is still the brave, courageous Scott which they once knew.

The letter follows:

"I have been at the front now for a long time and up to date, I have not had any serious mishap," continues Lieut. Nelson's letter. "My company s now in the reserve line. We get a total of 24 days at the front and then go back to rest for eight days.

"I am sure you all get more of the war news than Ido. All we get is the French communique, issued twice each day. Just at present things look fine for us. I think June 23, 1918, marked the turning point in the war. Then it was that the Italians defeated the Austrians troops so splendidly. Now we are making things hum over here. If we only had about two million Amercans here I thnk we would be home for Christmas. But the boche is just like a spring—he reoils somewhere.

"Coporal Walter Scott went on a patrol; got lost with two privates; went over a mile into the German lines, spotted some very important military features, fought with a German patrol, escaped by a remarkable feat of daring, and the result was that he gave the general staff some very, very valuable information. He has been recommended for the Croix de Guerre and I hope he gets it. I intended to write the whole story and send it home for publication. In the meantime thing are happening every hour and we fellows are tryng to give a good account of ourselves.

NEGRO SOLDIERS ARE RETURNING TO HOMES

Atlanta

Thomasville, Ga., December (Special.)—From the numbers of negro soldiers arriving in Thomasville within the past few days, having been discharged from camp, it would look as if there might be plenty of laborers here soon. Most of those arriving have come from Camp Gordon. They are strong and healthy looking and appear to have been well taken care of. Thomas county sent many colored soldiers to the camps and a number of them were sent overseas. Already some of those who have returned are looking around for jobs. Most of them seem to have enjoyed their experience in the army and some regret having been discharged from service before they had a chance to go to France, as those who have gone over write back great letters about the good times they have had over there.

CHOOSING THE IMPORTANT THINGS.

The Gospel

It is safe to say that most men do what they think should be done under the circumstances. The exceptions to the rule are cases where men act from impulse without any thought at all. The trouble is in mistaking what should be done. And the mistake is usually due to a wrong training. If all men could be set right in their judgment of what are important things, we would have the ideal age at once.

For example, it was a long time till men learned that it pays immensely to be honest and that it is very expensive to be dishonest. It was a long time till nations learned to deal justly with other nations, but now they are soon to learn that it pays to do so. It was a long struggle to teach governments that it pays to educate their citizens but they are learning it and from now on we may expect to see a united effort to give every child an education and then we may expect to see the greatest progress and prosperity.

Every calamity that has ever come upon mankind was due to a mistake that men made and did not discover until they ran it to the place where it bore its evil fruit. An infinite number of examples of this could be given but a few will suffice. The French rulers of the eighteenth century followed a policy of supression until the common people were so demoralized that they could not even raise the taxes. In the dragonades they literally mobbed their best people. When disaster began to threaten them they said, "After us the deluge." They thought the deluge would be no more than financial bankruptcy. They were not looking for an upheavel of blood such as came in the French Revolution. Another example is the case of Russia. Nicholas and his crowd arrested intelligent young men for having in their possession a copy of Emerson's Essays, "The Life of Lincoln," or "The Life of Booker T. Washington" and sent them to Siberian prisons. This state of affairs went on until it bore its fruit, Bolshevism, and now fully a million of the best Russians are being murdered.

In America we are not thinking of a crusade of oppression such as France practiced in the days of he dragonades or Russia in the days of the Siberian prison, but in spirit we are practicing the same thing and it will bear the same fruit. We are trying to accomplish the same thing by the indirect method of doing nothing, thereby letting our citizens remain untaught. We had a group of politicains from South Carolina to Texas who constantly held up the idea that since the white people never intend to give the Negroes greater rights they should keep them ignorant. We have done nothing for the millions of foreigners who came to our shores, except in a very scattering way. Not five per cent. of our membership has been made efficient in church service. Suppose we had spent a million a year to put up schools for our foreigners, we would now have a generation of trained leaders to go home and help Poland and the Czecho-Slovachs to form a Christian State. All Middle Europe would now become true Protestant. Suppose we had united to give a good Christian education to our Negroes, we could now convert them into a wonderful force for helping in the world's uplift. As it is, it almost frightens us to see how many of the Negroes have adopted the Vardaman doctrine, that it is best for them to remain ignorant.

How far this is to go we do not know. Whether it has passed the turning point and must go on to fruit bearing we do not know. If the fruit must ripen we will see what it is. The ignorant whites and ignorant Negroes will unite into an I. W. W. or Bolshevism and all we cherish will be trampled in the dust. But we feel hopeful that we have not passed the turning point and that the church is to win a glorious victory. Wonderful changes in methods are coming out. We frequently hear men say, "What will the Negro soldier do when he comes home from France? Will he make unreasonable demands and thus make trouble?" To this we answer that it depends wholly on what the Christian white people do. If they meet these returning Negro soldiers with justice and the spirit of helpfulness, we will need have no fear. But if they become suspicious and try the Nicholas method of supression, the race question will instantly become international and no one can tell what the fruit will be. It is now wholly in the hands of the Christion white people of America to determine what the outcome will be.

Our missionary organizations must see that the schools are ample to train an army of leaders. They must see that the leaders already trained are put to work to organize every Negro church into a good missionary church. The force of Sunday School experts must be increased so as to make it possible for every Sunday School to become an efficient one.

And now let us appeal to Christian Negroes to join in and help, with might and main, to carry out this program. You see the difficulty the white people labor under. If disaster comes you will suffer along with the rest. In a Bolshevism you would suffer untold things. If you have to endure until the end is attained, do so. Unjust discrimination hurts the white man's conscience much more than it does your feelings. Count yourselves happy that you have the privilege to endure for the causeof the nation's uplift. It is sinful to whine at hardships that some one must endure for the sake of this uplift. The world will never forget to relate that the Negro slave remained loyal to the family of the Confederate soldier while he was away fighting to keep him in slavery. If now the Negro intelligently aids in saving Christian civilization ever though he suffers discrimination he wil add a still brighter chapter to his history.

UNEASY CONSCIENCES AT WORK IN VIRGINIA.

From Richmond, Virginia, comes the news that grave concern is felt there because of the large purchases of firearms and munitions by the Negroes of that city. These purchases are said to have reached such proportions that the State Council of Defense called a special meeting and issued a circular to dealers prohibiting further sales.

The despatch goes on to say that Negro leaders were summoned and told what must be done; at the same time orders were given for strengthening the home guard. The despatch closed by saying:

From indirect sources it is rumored that Negroes have issued a statement that once their soldiers return from Europe they intend to force the white man to give them equal rights.

This latter situation is viewed with alarm by many of the leading citizens.

The white people of Virginia and all of the Southern states are going to have a good many nightmares between now and the time of the return of the Negro soldiers. Don't worry, brothers; it isn't on account of any premeditated wickedness on the part of the Negro; it is only an uneasy conscience dreaming of some of the things the owner of the conscience would do if he were in the Negro's place.

Mustering of Men at Camp Sheridan Is Now Under Way

Orders Received to Muster Out Members of Development Battalion

The Montgomery Advertiser 11-22-18

Orders were issued yesterday for the sending of 380 negro draft men to Camp Sheridan for the purpose of mustering them out. These men have been attending the officers training school at the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial school and they are probably included with the other officers training schools, a number of which have already been mustered out. Along with this order is the word that about 200 members of the Development Battalion will also be mustered out.

Capt. James P. Easley, the camp personnel officer, who has been placed in charge of the mustering force of Camp Sheridan, sent a telegram to the officer in command of the officers training school at Tuskegee informing him of the war department order and that he is ready to receive the men at once. It is expected that the men will be sent here in the next two or three days and the work of mustering them out will depend on the amount of work which has already been done by the surgeons in having the physicial examinations of the men made and ready for the handling of the mustering officers.

At Camp Sheridan, the negro contingent will be quartered in the provisional depot brigade next to the 421st labor battalion and the work of the mustering officers will probably be conducted in one of the offices used for a headquarters when the area was occupied by the Provisional Depot Brigade. All of the blanks and other forms necessary to be filled out are now in the hands of the mustering officer and the work will proceed as fast as practicable when it is begun.

There are nearly 1,000 men in the development battalion and all of these who are in as good physical condition as they were when they came into the army with the exception of railroad men, telegraphers and telephone men, will be mustered out. None of the men who are not as good physically as when they came into the army or who have communicable diseases will be discharged, this includes those having veneral diseases. With these exceptions only about 200 of the 1,000 will be able to get their discharges at this time.

In order to handle the large volume of work which will be necessary in the mustering out of the men, Capt. Easley has had several officers acquainted with the work of the personnel department, sent to camp headquarters for special duty and these with a number of enlisted men will handle the bulk of the making out of the papers to muster the men out. Of course all of the work will have the supervision of Capt. Easley and his assistants at camp headquarters.

The big job of mustering out the 500 men will be the getting of all of the papers ready and then the formality of passing them back to civil life will be small as compared with the other work.

THE WARRIORS' RETURN

Savannah Morning News 12-22-18

Some representative organized effort should be put forth by the people in this community and in every other large center to welcome the Negro soldier back to civil life, and to impress upon him that we are interested in his future welfare, more so because of his manliness, his patriotism and his heroism. The public, so proud of its Negro soldiers, will welcome a chance to greet the boys in grand assembly, to shake their hands, to hear them tell of their thrilling experiences, and receive the inspiration that must come for the worthy performances of Negro soldiers in the war.

Savannah people generally, black and white, military and civilian, have responded nobly to every line of the war need. We have sent our quota of draftees, and other workers to the camps; we have raised our full subscriptions to all the campaign funds; in all the features of Red Cross activity, Savannah folk have done well their part. Our men have served in every capacity in the battle area, from labor battalion to leading the charges against the Hun. Many have made the supreme sacrifice in this struggle.

We must find some way to memorialize the splendid cooperation of the people in this bloody war, without which victory could not have been achieved. Such cooperation, illustrates how powerful are the forces of public opinion and patriotism, and prove that a united people can accomplish wonderful things.

We sugegst to the Business League, to the N. A. A. C. P. and to the Urban League, that they confer through their proper respresentatives and divise some plan for taking care of the many interests involved in the return of these hundreds of soldier boys.

COLONIZATION MOVEMENT PUT UNDER WAY HERE

The Montgomery Advertiser 11-22-18

Business Body Plans to Create Interest in Securing Soldier Colonies in State of Alabama

A movement for a statewide campaign to have as its direct and ultimate result the colonizing of American soldiers was started at the regular semi-monthly meeting of the Membership Council of the Chamber of Commerce yesterday afternoon. The meeting started at 1 o'clock and continued for an hour and a half. It was held at the Exchange Hotel.

The movement for the colonization of returned soldiers on farms in Alabama followed the report of Vernon Merritt who attended the Land Congress held in Savannah, Ga., Nov. 12. A committee of five members of the council will be appointed by Chairman Thomas M. Owen today to discuss ways and means for interesting state officials, members of the legislature and the public in general in the advantages offered by the government for colonizing soldiers in farm settlements. The committee will be named in pursuance with a resolution adopted at the meeting yesterday.

It is planned, according to the resolution, to secure the cooperation of state officials in having a bill passed in the legislature for colonization purposes and to shortly begin an extensive colonization campaign. It is expected that as the movement developes it will be laid before city and county officials in an effort to secure their cooperation and through business organizations to have the requirements of the government in obtaining land for the soldiers complied with.

Mr. Merritt stated in his report that it will be necessary for a county or section to furnish a certain amount of land and that the government will furnish the soldier with money to finance his farm. He stated that in the opinion of the delegates of the Land Congress the Blackbelt of Alabama afford a splendid opportunity for colonization purposes among the soldiers if a sufficient amount of land can be secured to assure the government departments which handle the proposition that the section is desirous of having the soldier colonies.

He stated that it was brought out at the meeting that many states have already made plans to finance the proposition with the assistance of he government and declared that if Alabama fails to get in on the new immigration and colonization movement it will be because Alabama is not alive to its interests. Mr. Merritt's report was received with the unanimous approval of the council and Dr. Owen thanked him for his careful attention to the important movement.

A motion was also adopted to have a committee of five appointed to prepare for adjustment work following the war period. Dr. Owen pointed out the importance of taking care of the adjustment period and declared that a problem almost as great as war will soon face the people of this and every section.

Dr. Ehrenreich suggested a concrete plan for securing positions for the soldiers when they return. He suggested that a committee be appointed to secure as many of the former positions for the men as possible and where this effort fails to secure new positions for them. On his recommendation the matter will be referred to the adjustment committee.

Plans for taking care of the Adjustment period in this city and section will be discussed at the next meeting when a report of the committee will be made. The committee will be appointed today by Dr. Owen.

The Constitution 12-12-18

Urges Secretary Lane--He Also Advocates Education of Illiterate Mountain Whites and the Negroes.

Washington, December 11.—Development of arid, swamp and cutover lands to provide farms for returning soldiers, and improvement of the public school system to provide for Americanization of foreign-born citizens, and the education of illiterate mountain white populations and negroes, are two big reconstruction problems, Secretary of the Interior Lane says in his annual report, made public today. Schools, he added, should lay more emphasis on teaching trades.

Of immediate importance is the proposal that the government systematically go about the work of providing work for soldiers on existing irrigation projects in the west. Later, Secretary Lane suggested, more extensive reclamation of waste land should be put under way, and small farms sold to soldiers by the government on long-term payment plan.

Mr. Lane outlined in detail his proposed methods of carrying out this program, which he characterized as part of the "looking ahead work" of the nation.

The Returning Soldiers.

Referring to the returning soldiers, he said:

"Being Americans and being young, they will not ask or expect pensions. They will want work. They will want, if possible, a chance for a home of their own."

By systematic government development of idle lands, said Mr. Lane, there will be provided immediate jobs for these men, labor markets will be protected against possible collapse by being swamped with a surplus of labor, re-established industries will be supplied with an immediate demand for their products, the movement of population to cities will be checked, many "best proven Americans" will be affixed permanently to agricultural occupations, and great areas of land now neglected and valueless will be brought into use.

"As an immediate program," said the secretary, "we should first offer an opportunity upon our present irrigation projects for all who wish work at clearing and leveling the land not now cultivated but for which water is available, or to which water can be brought under the present irrigation system, and that such tracts shall be developed under an appropriate land settlement plan. This we can do at once and meet whatever labor problem may be immediate.

"As a second step, I would urge an appropriation for one or more of the largest irrigation schemes for which surveys are in an advanced state. Concurrently it would seem to me wise to undertake the draining of the most promising projects —government-owned land preferred, but, if privately owned, the land to be bought at an appraisement made by the farm loan board and subject to the approval of the department of agriculture.

"There is an alternative method of dealing with private lands which already has the approval of congress, being incorporated in the reclamation act. Under this a private owner agrees to sell his land to whoever gets the water right at an appraised price as a condition precedent to our undertaking the construction of irrigation work. Under such a plan there would be no difficulty whatever in securing control of any sized bodies of cut-over or swamp lands that might be desired; the government would not buy the land, but the owner would look to the new settler for the price, and take it on such terms as the government itself would exact for its own expenditure upon the land. Supplementing this there should be an opportunity given for the co-operation of all the states upon limited tracts which would be dealt with under state control and subject to the closest federal supervision."

Openings for Soldiers.

After a soldier has returnel to his home, said Mr. Lane, if his old position is not open and he wishes to turn to an independent life, "there would be laid before him a number of projects which the government has undertaken in the different sections of the coutry. Let us assume no more than three, one an irrigation scheme, another a drainage project, a third the development of a body of cut-over lands. The one would need to have great dams constructed to impound and divert waters, a hydro-electric plant, miles of canal and tunnel, perhaps thousands of acres to be cleared and leveled, fenced and broken. This would mean years of work at good wages, work in the open under housing conditions that would seem palatial to the soldier of the trench, and at the end a piece of land on which would be erected a house and barn, a farm home in a group of farm homes. For this he must pay. But already he has received wages out of which he can have saved the necessary first installment on his place of 10 or 15 per cent. The balance with interest he can pay in 40 yearly installments, or earlier if he can."

Mr. Lane estimated that more than one-third, probably nearer one-half, of the American troops in Europe came from farms, and probably would wish to return to the agricultural work. Care should be taken, however, he said, that the government in selling farms to these men, limit the size and impose restrictions to prevent their being aggregated into great estates.

Turning to the question of cost, Secretary Lane said this would be "as much as we wish to spend . . . less than many a strike has cost this country."

"Would it be unreasonable to ask for as much as we will spend this year for pensions to the veterans and their dependents of wars that ended 20 and 50 years ago?" he asked. "Would it be unreasonable to ask that we spend in the next two years on these veterans of the great war as much as it cost us to conduct that war for a single week? Would a people that gave out of hand, out of a noble sense of charity to quasi public organizations, $500,000,000 for the entertainment and care of these boys hesitate to buy the bonds of this country for a like amount to provide peace work, home work, and homes for these same boys?

"We have spent largely for this war, and largely we must spend for many years to come. We are to economize that we may meet our debts; this must be the national policy. But to stop growth is not economy. To stand paralyzed in the presence of a debt is to become its victim. England is planning in the hundreds of millions of pounds sterling for housing and land schemes. Canada with less than 7,000,000 people is offering to each man 160 acres of land and $2,500 with which to improve it. Surely the United States, which has escaped with so slight a comparative loss in life, will not do less.

No Surer Insurance.

"There can be no surer insurance for the nation than to put its men upon the soil, and there can be no wiser investment that a nation can make than to add to its territory by taking from desert and waters and desolation land that is now useless."

Mr. Lane declared that in the United States there are more than 200,000,000 acres of waste land which can be made into farms.

Appropriations of only a few millions are needed to start, said the secretary. A bill for this purpose already is pending in congress, and President Wilson indorsed some legislation of the kind in his address at the opening of the present session.

The development need not be confined to states containing government land, said Mr. Lane, citing cases of large unused tracts near eastern cities which would supply markets with farm produce.

Turning to the question of providing education through the public schools, particularly for the foreign-born, Secretary Lane said:

"Our war experience has taught us, among many things, the value of a strong national spirit, the vital importance of national ideals, the impotence of ignorance, the dependence of this modern world upon skilled men and organizing ability, the need for and the possibilities that lie in the extension of co-operative effort of all kinds.

"There can be neither national unity in ideals or in purpose unless there is some common method of communication through which may be converged the thought of the nation. All Americans must be taught to read and write and think in one language; this is a primary condition to that growth which all nations expect of us and which we demand of ourselves."

The educational problem extends beyond the state to the federal government, Mr. Lane said, adding that if the federal government would make the same kind of an offer to the states for the education of their illiterates that it makes for the construction of roads, "in five years there would be few, if any, who could not read and write in this country."

In concluding his report on the subject of education, Mr. Lane said:

"I should like to see the day when every child learned a trade while at school, trained his mind and his hand together, lifted labor into art by the application of thought."

NEGROES ARMING; RICHMOND ALARMED

Threat to Force Equal Rights Is Reported.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

RICHMOND, Nov. 23.—One problem that is causing grave concern here is the large purchases of firearms and munitions by the negroes of the city. This reached a point a few days ago which called forth a special meeting of the State Council of Defence. The result of the meeting was a circular being sent broadcast urging dealers to refrain from selling further ammunition and firearms to negroes.

While the proceedings of the meeting were secret, it is understood leaders of the negro element were summoned and told what must be done. At the same time an order went out strengthening the home guard organizations. From indirect sources it is rumored that negroes have issued a statement that once their soldiers return from Europe they intend to force the white man to give them equal rights.

This latter situation is viewed with alarm by many of the leading citizens.

WILL CO-OPERATE IN FINDING JOBS FOR ALL SOLDIERS

The Georgia men who will be discharged from Camp Gordon after Monday will have the benefit of all the machinery for helping them find suitable work which has been put in action by the United States department of labor and the United States employment service, co-operating with the Council of National Defense, through the creation of bureaus for returning soldiers and sailors.

The chairman of the Council of National Defense in every county is expected to see that a bureau is established in every town in Georgia of any size which will be intended as a sort of clearing house for jobs of every kind. Through connection with all government employment agencies and various civic organizations these bureaus will be of inestimable assistance to the returning war workers. A representative at every camp is spreading the information as to the general method of operation.

Hal M. Stanley, commissioner of commerce and labor, is looking after the administration of this plan in Georgia and is in daily communication with the camps and local bureaus. Wednesday he received from an Ohio cantonment cards bearing the names and other information regarding boys who will soon return to Georgia towns. These will be forwarded to the boys' homes in order that the way may be prepared for their re-entrance into the industrial and business life of their communities.

The Churches and Reconstruction

Survey 12/21/18

TWENTY-SEVEN of the Protestant denominations of America, represented by about 175 delegates, spent the three days from December 10 to 12 at Atlantic City in discussing the problems incident to the period of reconstruction, and out of the discussion formulated plans whereby the churches can effectively help in making sure a new world order. Space forbids even a recapitulation of the significant work of the General War-Time Commission of the Churches during the last eighteen months.

A resolution was passed calling upon the government to change its plan for demobilization so that the men will be considered under service to the government until they have actually reached their homes. According to the present arrangement, the men are mustered out in army camps and then left to shift for themselves. Many of them are miles from home and when relieved from army restraint with money in their pockets they find temptation easy. Consequently large numbers of them will get into trouble and when they finally get back to their home towns will be without funds and without a job. Problems of unemployment are beginning to make themselves felt even at this early period, and to obviate this difficulty and cooperate with the government, it is proposed by the Federal Council of the Churches that each pastor consider himself an employment agent in the service of Uncle Sam, utilizing churches and denominational community houses as employment bureaus as well as social centers for mustered-out soldiers.

J. R. Hawkins, of Washington, reporting for the Committee on Welfare Work among Negro Soldiers, protested earnestly against any arrangement for the return of the colonies in Africa to the German government. He also described the disabilities under which the Negroes had labored during the war and painted a remarkable picture of the efficiency and courage of the colored troops and the valor with which they had carried out their orders. He told of one regiment of Negro soldiers who in one of the battles went far beyond the line marked out as the objective for the day. When the commanding officer was reprimanded for allowing the troops to thus throw themselves so impetuously into the fight, his reply was, "How could you expect me to hold my soldiers when the whole German army couldn't stop them."

There was a full discussion of the dangers that face the nation from the restriction of a free expression of opinion. The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"It is to the interest of the church as well as of society that the churches should maintain a platform and fellowship sufficiently broad to allow freedom of discussion and service. During the war certain rights of speech and action have been limited, which should now be restored. Especially in the churches must freedom of discussion be insisted on in the full recognition of the need that organized Christianity should affirm in no uncertain terms the basic claims of democracy as involving justice in the social and economic order."

The Federal Council of Churches with intense enthusiasm passed a resolution deprecating the use of any foreign language in any church in America and the twenty million communicants affiliated with its constituent bodies were called upon to use every proper means to have English used exclusively in the worship of God.

Interchurch plans contemplate the creation of a commission from the federal council to go to Paris to serve during the peace conference. It is also suggested that a similar commission be sent to Russia to study the situation and offer such help as might be given in stabilizing the Russian government. A strong plea was voiced in behalf of the Armenian people and the moral conscience of the world called to protest against any action that would put these people again under the domination of the Turks. Among those in attendance was Gov. Carl E. Milliken, of Maine, who is foremost among those within the churches who are pushing the plans whereby the prohibition movement shall be carried to a successful conclusion in America. This group expects, with the cooperation of Great Britain, France, Italy and other nations, to extend the temperance movement until we shall have a dry world.

Strong resolutions were passed endorsing the league of nations and calling upon the churches in this crisis to do all within their power to help establish now such a league, fully recognizing that only in its formation can there be any hope for justice and peace in the world.

Demobilization

THE SOLDIER'S RETURN.

In the swirl of events our brave boys will be returning from "over there" and from the home camps with the regularity of the belt cups carrying the grain from the box car up to the top of the grain elevator building. It will not be made a spectacular feature, hence no great crowds will gather at the seaports and railroad depots to greet their return, which will again augment our somewhat depopulated male force. The [illegible] not all return sad be the thought. Many homes will mourn the [illegible]nal absence of loved [illegible] whose sacred ashes repose in far off graves upon which the sorrowing ones may never have access to place tokens of love in honor of the noble dead. In the midst of gladness about them, unfortunately theirs will be notes of sorrow. The brightest sunshine, always casts the sharpest shadow. And while we untouched come out of the war rejoicing and giving thanks and making merry let us not forget that there are th ose around us and throughout the length and breadth of the land, who will think of a boy who sleeps the last sleep beneath the sod in France and they will peer through tears at an empty place at the table that will never be filled.

Oh, that life might be all joy and sunshine! but it has been ordained that in the alchemy of human existence the bitter dregs of sorrow, must be mixed with th e exhilarating nectar of rejoicing.

So while we think of those whose hearts are bursting with grief we gather back in the security of our homes the returning ones. The military discipline required by our returning soldiers will doubtless have improved their general character and good behavior, if they were ever otherwise inclined. They will retain their military attitude until again mixing with the civil population from which they were extracted; and it is hoped that they will not only all find suitable places of ready employment, but that their behavior may reflect the highest credit upon the National Army for whom they have so nobly honored and died, and upon themselves and upon the society to which they have returned with so noble and honorable record behind them.

It would be humiliating in the extreme to read of our loyal and heroic soldier boys being arrested, imprisoned lynched or in any way apprehended for crime against society. There must necessarily be a spirit of relaxation and leisurable exhilaration after being released from stern military discipline and restriction and this experience upon the part of the soldier, has its temptations and dangers. Let's aid them in their civil equlibrium.

The names of our soldier boys who were church members and died in the National Army whether in hospital or on the battle field, should not be erased from the church roll, but a foot note opposite their name telling for what and where they died.

The effect of these returning colored heroes will be different from that of the Civil War soldiers in that their contact and observations materially differ and therefore adds new phase to their experience; they will have imbibe d new ideals, new sentiments respecting civil and social life; acquired new ideas of liberty and therefore will exert themselvs more definitely along these lines.

They will not humbly and cringingly submit to the several injustices practiced by legal enac tment and customs even in the South as heretofore, without protest. Besides, they will have acquired a new courage from their military training, and they will use it against the very ones who taught it to them when they are being proscribed in their citizen and manhood rights. And no man —white or black—with an ounce of sense could blame them.

The 1,000,000 Civil War soldiers with their 200,000 black comrades returned triumphant from the eternal welding of the Union of the States, the eternal unfolding of "Old Glory" and the happy liberation of 4,000,000 of abject, century-burdened slaves. The soldiers returning from France with their tattered banners, war-worn uniforms, grim visages and firm martial tramp, come triumphantly for World Democracy, for which they fought bled and died and in which all of them are expected to equally share in common with all the peoples benefitted by their heroism, bravery and sacrifices.

All Hail, Triumphant Heroes of Proud America!

DR. EDMONDS' POSITION PLAIN

Gloucester Times Reporter 12-25-18

THINKS COLORED MAN HAS DONE WELL AND CAN CONTINUE HIS SUCCESS—FRANK AND BOLD EXPLANATION OF HINDRANCES ARE SET OUT

A Chance Can Only Be Given Race Must Make Its Own Way

Sections of the Country Are Undergoing Change and Discipline of the Colored Man in the Army Will Make Them Better Men.

Dr. Henry M. Edmonds of the Independent Presbyterian Church, and no doubt one of the most scholarly men of our time, kindly consented to prepare an article for this publication, and it may be truly styled as a message on Life, and then, with another careful study of the article, we would also call it "The Outlook." While discussing the advantages and disadvantages of the colored man, Dr. Edmonds pays a high tribute to the achievements of members of the race, and what it is possible for them to gain by carefulness, patience, respect for their churches and a true devotion to God. The idea of service and honesty is expressed as the keynote to success. The extent of service of the white race to the colored race is discussed in no misleading terms. Locality, national and international, is before us. The Doctor makes this expression:

"It is a great mistake for any of us, white or black, to imagine that because the war has been fought and won, life is going to be changed for us. Life is going on in many ways just the same as before. Circumstances change but principles remain. Men must eat and wear clothes and work and play in the same old way. Every now and then in mountain climbing an eminence immediately in front claims our desire and our especial effort. We come panting to it. There is a little respite of gratulation and of rest. And we look all round about on the panorama, which the ascent has gained us. But our rest and our satisfaction are shortlived; for, yonder in front is another height and we set our faces towards that and begin again the same old labor of reaching it.

So is this war and this victory, but a new effort and a new achievement in our spiritual climb. We have gained immeasurably—yes; but because we have gained, we look further and see that we have only begun. Labor may have in it a new drive and a new exaltation and may be thereby transformed, but it is the same old labor, subject to the same old peril of falling into ruts and dry monotony.

No man of sense and honesty will deny that the Negro is borne down by many disadvantages. He has the disadvantage of color, the disadvantage of race, the disadvantage of a previous slavery, the disadvantage of a late start.. Some would add the disadvantage of a poorer intellect, but I do not acknowledge that. Certainly the Negro as a race is backward in education and intellectual achievement; but individuals have risen far and the whole people in time may follow the leadership of those individuals. This, I believe, falls under the heading of the late start. The Negro, since his freedom began, has shown an advance far above the ordinary.

Some of these disadvantages have come by reason of circumstances. They have come in the course of events and are in the nature of destiny itself. To repine or rebel at them would be to complain against God. To set yourselves to their changing, however, is answering God's call to a higher life. Some of these disadvantages have come by reason of the injustice of the white man, the holder of the reins of power. To hate him, however, and to try to unseat him would be wrong and unavailing. He has been the victim of history as well as the maker of history. He has fallen heir to many things and has used them without thinking. Revenge is silly, but to set yourselves to securing a better justice is again answering God's call to a higher life.

Naturally something might be said about the advantages, also, which the Negro has enjoyed in America, but I wish to speak briefly of those particular advantages which have come in connection with the war.

Certainly the military training has been highly advantageous. There has been not only that valuable discipline which we think of specifically when we say military, but all those things which come now conjointly with it, like the regulation of sleeping and eating, the care of the body, sanitation of camps and residences, treatment of disease, purity of personal life. The Negro soldiers will go back to civil life not only benefited themselves, but carrying benefit to the whole race, the more particularly since they will have not only the knowledge of right living but the habit, and in their own bodies the happy results.

Many have received a modicum of education, who otherwise would never have gotten even the rudiments. Many will have learned trades.

All will have been consciously or unconsciously impressed with the necessity, and with some of the laws, of organization.

Many will have gained a wider outlook, having seen more of their own country and of other countries. They will return to their own sections better satisfied since they have seen other sections, and to their own land better satisfied since they have seen other lands. They will realize something of the bigness but of the oneness of the world, that the same men and the same general laws of life are to be found everywhere.

The greatest advantage, however, that has come out of the war to the Negro race lies in the fine acceptance of the responsibility of American citizenship. The Negro in his own estimation has risen to a new dignity. That is absolutely important. A soul in chains may have the chains struck down and still lie supine in slavery. Freedom is, after all, within. A man is worth nothing until he joins something. We grow by losing ourselves in something bigger than ourselves. I believe it may be said for all time that the Negro has joined America. He has felt within himself the thrill of the larger life. He can never be the same any more.

The white man will henceforth judge him also not by his worst but by his best. For a good many years the white people have seen the raw edges of the Negro race. Under the more menial circumstances of labor and in criminal courts we have found our types. We have forgotten that Negro lawyers, physicians, dentists and business men have been toiling upward in the night, for these only their activities among their own people. We realize these, for we have met their records in the purchase of Liberty Bonds and in their gifts towards the war causes. We have thought of the Negro as good-natured and shiftless, we must think of him more henceforth as the holder of his country's securities and as the defender of his country's honor. The loyalty of the Negro race has been one of the outstanding facts in the nation's emergency, and the nation can never forget it.

You are going to settle down, then, with a bigger capital after the war clouds are past. You will have more money, better health, better training, better education, wider outlook, enhanced self-respect and a kindlier, saner judgment at the hands of your white neighbors.

And let us not for get this: When the men come marching home they will have laid aside their weapons, but they will never lay aside their crusading hearts. They have seen God marching on. They have heard His call to stamp out injustice. Now they are going to demand the same sort of thing at home, which they have helped to establish abroad. They will have keener eyes to discern it and braver hearts to slay it.

I bid you rejoice and I bid you go forward on your knees. Larger liberties bring larger labors. Greater degree of freedom and of justice await you. These are blessings from God, but it remains for you to make them experiences of your own. Freedom may be won and yet not appropriated.

In the long course we get things not by demanding them, but by desiring them. The emphasis never belongs on getting but on giving. Duties is the big word, not rights. Remember we can give you nothing, we can merely give you the chance to get it. Your churches, your family life, your social pleasures and cuture, your character—all these you must build yourselves. Dedicate yourselves to them, live for them, die for them. Honor your race, cherish its traditions, invest everything in its future. Give yourself that your people may be blessed, then give your people that your country may be blessed. Sacrificial service is the measure of honor in any ordered world. In the great Bazaar of this planet's life liberty and peace are tremendously expensive, and he who gives most gets most."

egro Organization Needed —Don't Disband Those You Have.

The Daily Herald 12-29-18

One of the most pressing eeds of the race at this erious hour is the need of horough and intelligent organization.

Negro soldiers are being disbanded and soon those in France will be returning and measures for their care and protection should at once be planned. All of these men have served their country; have offered their lives willingly for the nation's cause; have been subjected to vigorous military discipline in the camps and facing the enemy and trained to stand erect bravely as men.

They cannot now be expected to return to their homes and people with hung down heads and cowed hearts because their skins are black. Nor must they return with the spirit of ruffianism and rowdyism developed with a chip on each shoulder hunting for a fight. The great majority of Negro soldiers are from the South and the issue of their reception by the whites of the South must be met frankly.

In many sections of the South it is feared that there are certain elements of the white people who are preparing to teach the returning soldiers their "place." It is said that the infamous murderous Ku Klux Klan is being revived to carry out those purposes.

If this be so Negroes must be prepared to meet it. Whether true or not they should prepare for any eventuality. The race must not permit the returning soldiers nor themselves to receive as their reward for loyalty and service to the country in its hour of need further humiliation, brutal treatment and oppression.

Councils of Defense, The Red Cross and other organizations that rendered aid to the government during the war should not now disband but should hold to-gether for self protection and for the protection of the brave soldier boys. It should be the duty of these organizations which should have co-operation from all Negro Fraternal Orders to make diligent search to ascertain the feeling of white people in every community and if there is any spirit or indication of the rise of a spirit of hostility or resentment towards Negroes because they have served their country as soldiers the men must be immediately warned not to return to such communities.

Thousands of them of their own choice will never return and if there is one sign of danger of improper and unjust treatment; plainly if the sentiment is not entirely friendly to the Negro soldier as well as to the white, make the stay of the Negro boys unanimous in those sections of the country where they will be accorded some measure of justice and that consideration which their splendid services have won for them.

HOME COMING OF THE NEGRO SOLDIERS.

The Birmingham Reporter 12-14-18

By Dr. Frank Willis Barnett,

"It gives me pleasure to comply with the request of the Birmingham Reporter and write a short word in regard to the home coming of the Negro soldiers who have so well served their government.

It will be recalled that when patriotism was at a white heat and passions running high that when at attempt was made to arouse the whites to be on guard against an uprising of the Negroes inaugurated by German propagandists that I stood up in the midst of a large and excited throng of men of my own color and pledged the loyalty of the Negro race.

Born and reared in the South, the son of a slave owner, I felt that I knew the Negro well enough to know that when the test came he would line up with the Southern whites and for his country, and the way in which your people have stood by me, your friend, and by Woodrow Wilson, your president, has cheered my heart and vindicated the position I took that the black man was ready to die for his country.

I am particularly proud of the record made in Birmingham and in Jefferson county, not only in the matter of the enlisted and the drafted men, but in the way in which the civilian population of the colored people, both men and women, responded to all of the various war activities and did their part in helping both city and county to go "over the top" in all of the campaigns. It fell to my lot to be associated in a number of the drives with the leading men and women of your race and their work was hearty and done in an intelligent and self-sacrificing spirit.

If advice could have made a people the Negroes of the South would have long ago been self sufficient, for the Lord knows both Southerners and Northeners have showered the black man with it, and will continue to do so—and for this reason I am not going to give them any only to say that I stand ready at any time to do every thing in my power to help in creating a better spirit between the two races. Peace, safety, and prosperity of both can be had if men of good will out of the ranks of the white and the black come together frequently for counsel

DEPARTING NEGRO TROOPS PROMISE TO BE GOOD CITIZENS

SAN ANTONIO TEX EXPRESS NOVEMBER 30, 1918

550 UNITE IN ANSWER TO APPEAL BY DR. IRA LANDRITH AT CAMP TRAVIS.

"Now, put your right hands over your hearts and repeat this pledge with me: 'With God's help, I promise to try to be a good American citizen.'"

And as this request was made of them by Dr. Ira Landrith, 550 negro soldiers, who are to be released from the army today, raised their voices in solemn repetition of the pledge. Dr. Landrith's talk, given at the Y. M. C. A. auditorium under the joint auspices of the military and Y. M. C. A. heads of Camp Travis, was a stirring call to the best manhood of the negro race. He said in part:

"You men who have been serving your country here have the biggest opportunity ever offered to a group of men to work for the uplift of a whole race.

"When you go back home, remember that the laws of your community are just as much orders as were the orders given you by your officers right here in camp. See that those laws are obeyed. When you get into civilian clothes, don't forget that the things which you were ready to die for must live if your race is to have its place.

"Remember that it is the bad man of the black race and the bad man of the white race that are making the trouble between the races. Remember, too, that you can't be a good citizen and a bad man and that you can't be a good man and a bad citizen. And don't let any negro in your home towns whom you have any influence over sell his vote.

"Don't let any man, black or white, do in peace times to the women of your race what we have been fighting the Huns for doing to the womanhood of France, Belgium and Serbia. Protect your women! Work! Learn about the things your country stands for; get all the education you can, even if you go to night school.

"Above all, don't go about thinking that the world owes you a living. Go back home and dig your living out of the soil. Keep yourselves at the high level which the army has trained you to, and you will have done more than anything could to bring your race to a point where it will get the recognition which it will deserve.

"If you feel that you must go to the devil, take off that uniform and get into overalls. Don't insult the uniform."

As the speaker brought his address to a close, he asked the soldiers to join in the old hymn, "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," and the response of the entire audience was one which will be long remembered by the officers and other spectators.

N Y C SUN NOVEMBER 25, 1918

NEGRO TROOPS GOING HOME.

Will Not Be Discharged Until Reaching State of Domicile.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

CAMP DIX, N. J., Nov. 25.—Instead of releasing at Camp Dix the thousands of negro soldiers awaiting demobilization, new orders of the War Department received here to-day direct that all negro troops here shall be returned by detachments to their home States, where at central points they will receive their discharge papers and final army pay. No explanation is announced, but it is evident the new plan will prevent the Southern negroes becoming stranded in Northern cities, while at the same time it will insure a normal distribution of men to meet labor conditions in Southern States.

All Regular Army negro enlisted men serving here, chiefly as non-commissioned officers in negro organizations, will be sent back to the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth infantry, whence they came.

Immediate steps for a general cleaning out of the camp by prompt demobilization is directed in to-day's orders, to make room at once for incoming overseas troops. Those to be released include 5,000 men in the Tank Corps recently transferred to Dix from Gettysburg, Pa. A picked detachment of 250 men of the Tank Corps will be retained and transferred to Camp Polk, N. C. Work of demobilization was resumed to-day after a brief delay due to the necessity of providing new forms for the final War Department records of the departing men, a total of 273 soldiers having received papers to-day that again made them civilians.

EMPLOYES OF CITY OF HOUSTON SELLING LIBERTY LOAN BONDS, DENIED PASSAGE THROUGH PARK

The Huns Now Absent

While men of all races and nations are fighting and dying upon the battlefields of Europe to remove class legislation and "make the world safe for democracy"; and while every red-blooded American is being called upon to enlist for the duration of the war to rid the world of the menace and peril to human liberty, universal freedom and worldwide democracy, there yet remain several communities in America that seem to have no conception of the travail through which Europe is now going due to the presence there of certain practices and customs that civilization must remove and eradicate forever, which ever and anon throw a discouraging and disconcerting note among the citizens of this country.

Last Saturday, two of our high school professors, Messrs. E. D. Pierson and P. H. Holden—as they had previously been instructed and imbued with that patriotism and devotion to their country that is 100 per cent American—were selling bonds of the "Fighting Fourth" Liberty Loan in the vicinity of OUR CITY PARK, when they saw a race man near OUR PARK with a load of wood. Endeavoring to head him off and induce him to subscribe for bonds, these deans of departments (science and history, respectively), law-abiding and tax-paying citizens, the former having given two sons to the cause, one of whom was injured when a German submarine torpedoed the U. S. S. Mt. Vernon several weeks ago in French waters and whose story appeared exclusively in The Observer a few weeks since—these genuine and loyal American citizens started through OUR CITY PARK to accost their masculine objective. The ground keeper, whose salary is paid out of the taxes of all the citizens of this municipality, seeing them, yelled at them to stop and then broke forth into a silly and foolish presentation of the aims and intents of the "white people of this town to teach you 'niggers' a few things if you try to start anything," his peroration being a promise or threat that "there will be a few hanging to limbs around here," with additional "bull," "bolsheviki" and braggadocio, as these educators and representatives of both the municipal and Federal governments vainly and futilely strove to inform the irresponsible and ignorant groundkeeper that it was their purpose to simply reach the man on the other side of the park and secure his subscription to help bury the Huns with bonds (and all the Huns are not in Europe or of German extraction).

He flatly refused to permit them to pass through OUR CITY PARK and when they persisted in their argument to advance, this would-be representative of the democracy for which we are contending with might and main both over here and "over there" threatened to call an officer and have them (professors, educators, patriots, American citizens and exponents of President Wilson's species of democracy) forcibly ejected. Not desirous of any trouble, much chagrined, disgusted, discouraged, disheartened and patriotically indignant, these Liberty Loan bond solicitors quietly performed a strategic retreat with the loss of several bond sales.

Again we reiterate, as we have said on former occasions:

If this is democracy, dear Lord, we implore,
Let not Thy servants taste of more;
For such as this only makes one sore,
And keep it back from Europe's shore.

"AMERICA" SUNG BY NEGROES, BUT UNDER PROTEST

N Y C TELEGRAM
APRIL 23, 1918

National Association for Advancement of Colored Men Object to Army Order.

GENERAL BALLON DENOUNCED IN RESOLUTION.

"You can't expect the negro to cringe before the white people and at the same time expect them to go overseas and fight the German people in the trenches of France."

So declared George Frazer, chairman of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored Men, before a mass meeting in the Concord Baptist Church, Adelphi street and Myrtle avenue, Brooklyn. The meeting was called as a protest against a bulleting issued by Major General Ballou, at Camp Funston, Kansas, asking the negro soldiers to avoid seeking legal rights that would cause racial differences. More than three hundred negroes attended.

At the conclusion of the meeting a resolution condemning General Ballou was adopted by the members of the association present. Copies will be sent to Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War. At one time during the meeting Mr. Frazer, when asked to have "America" sung, said he was not disposed to do so, but consented because, he said, he felt that the nation must stand together in the crisis of war.

George Wilverson, another negro representing the Colored Citizens' Society, declared there were more than 100,000 negroes serving in the army, and said the number would have been between 200,000 and 300,000 if it were not for the alleged discrimination shown against the negro. He denounced the bulletin issued by General Ballou as uncalled for and unjust, and said it was such orders that caused racial hatred.

Camp Dodge Army Police Called on to Handle 200 Negroes

Colored Soldiers Threaten Violence to Cafe Keeper and Destruction of Store.

MINNEAPOLIS M EVE TRIBUNE
APRIL 17, 1918
(By a Staff Representative.)

Camp Dodge, Des Moines, April 17.—Military police and deputy sheriffs were called out last night to quell a near-riot at Army City, near the cantonment, in which more than 200 negro soldiers threatened violence to S. S. Powell, restaurant keeper, and destruction of his establishment. As a result of the trouble, deputy sheriffs today are instructing cafe proprietors in Army City to dispense with services of white women in their places of business.

According to the military police and deputy sheriffs, the negroes entered Powell's cafe and made a small purchase. An altercation followed in which Powell ordered the negroes to leave the place. One picked up a brick and walked back.

Powell took a revolver and drove them away. They returned with others and soon a hundred were threatening violence to Powell and destruction of his place.

The military police and deputy sheriffs drove the negroes back to camp without making arrests. Powell's establishment has been closed to soldiers for the present by order of the military police.

C. E. McKeepan, driver of the taxi early Sunday morning in which Sergt. Wilbur F. Lane, San Antonio, Texas, was riding when he received a bullet wound which later resulted in his death in the base hospital, has been found grossly negligent and I. W. Halley, patrolman, careless in the use of his revolver, in the report completed by the military police today.

The report says the driver admitted exceeding the speed limit that he saw the policeman's signal to stop but failed to do so. The policeman is held responsible for not making sure that the shot he fired in an attempt to stop the machine would not strike the occupants.

Olaf J. Lovik, Fleming, Minn., and Richard Muri, Mekinock, N. D., both died last night from pneumonia.

LEAGUE URGES WILSON TO COUNTERMAND BALLOU'S J.C ORDER

NATIONAL EQUAL RIGHTS LEAGUE OF COLORED AMERICANS TELEGRAPHS PRESIDENT TO ABOLISH ARMY ORDER FOR COLORED SOLDIER TO GIVE UP LEGAL CIVIL RIGHTS WHEN ON FURLOUGH—NO COUNTRY OPPOSING GERMANY HAS ISSUED SUCH ORDER.

(Boston Herald, April 22, 1918.)

The National Equal Rights League, in a telegram sent yesterday to President Wilson, asks that he countermand an order issued by Brig.-Gen. Ballou in Bulletin No .35 for the 92d division, a Negro unit stationed at Camp Funston, Kansas, which league officials allege, enjoins officers and soldiers to refrain from going into public places where their presence is resented because of their color.

The message signed by the Rev. Byron Gunner of New York, the Rev. Marion F. Syder of Rhode Island and Allen N Whaley and William Monroe Trotter of Boston, says in part.

"His dictum not applied to white soldiers, destroys all civil rights, causes fresh discriminations, fosters race prejudice, humiliates our race, degrades the army uniform.

"No order so vicious or undemocratic has been issued in any of the armies opposing Germany. Protect American soldiers in democracy at home before sending them abroad in democracy's war."

President Refers League Protest to Secretary of War.

The White House,
Washington, April 22, 1918.

My dear Sir:—The President directs me to acknowledge the receipt of your telegram of April 21st and to say that it is being brought to the attention of the Secretary of War.

Sincerely yours,

LEAGUE WRITES SEC. WAR AGAINST J-C ORDER

Protests Ballou Order—Asks its Revocation—Wants to Know Meaning of Statement That "White Men Can Break the DIVISION".

National Equal Rights League,
Office of the Corresponding Secretary,
34 Cornhill, Boston, Mass.,
April 76, 1918.

Hon. Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War.

Sir:

The National Equal Rights League, a Colored American organization with branches in twenty states, addresses you in the words already sent to the President with regard to an army order issued by Major General Ballou to Colored officers and soldiers, to wit:—What was sent (See telegram to President in another column.)

Exactly Opposite Attitude Toward White and Colored Soldiers.

Citizens of the U. S. A., loyally obedient to its laws, we are indignant at such a discrimination order leveled at soldiers of our race who are singled out from the soldiers of all other race varieties in the U. S. service for exactly opposite treatment from all others. On the civic side also we protest at an order which notifies public places that they may treat Colored soldiers in exactly the opposite way from what they are ordered to treat white soldiers, and by necessary consequence are encouraged to deny the service to Colored citizens, contrary to local laws, which they give to citizens not of African extraction.

Demand Revocation of Order.

Mr. Secretary, we call upon you to revoke this order, the spirit of which is that for Colored Americans the offer of one's life-blood in defense of the flag is an advantage not to the country but to the man's race, and that for men of this race. Alone entertainments and food when on furlough are not to be purchasable to encourage dull routine and dangers of military service, but are condemned as " personal pride and gratification."

What Does Sec. 3 Mean?

We specifically ask the meaning of article three (3).

3. The Division Commander repeats that the success of the Division with all that that success implies, is dependent upon the good will of the public. That public is nine-tenths white. White men made the Division and they can break it just as easily if it becomes a trouble maker.

Yours for redress and an early reply,
Signed: WM. MONROE TROTTER,
Secretary.

Per Order Rev. Byron Gunner, N. Y.,
President.

COLORED WOMEN PROTEST

Cambridge, April 24, 1918.

Hon. Woodrow Wilson,
President of the United States,
The White House,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. President,

The Northeastern Federation of Women's Clubs numbering 6000 women protest with deepest indignation against Gen. Ballou's Bulletin No. 35 for 92nd Division, Camp Funston, Kansas enjoining officers and soldiers to refrain from going into public places where their presence is resented because of Color.

We wish to know what right he has to encourage prejudice against men wearing the uniform of their country, loyal men enlisted to give up their lives for their country if needs be when the time comes—to please the prejudice masses of his own race? We feel he has far exceeded his authority and we ask you to countermand his Bulletin and to court-martial hom for trying at this crucial time when the country is at war to set a precedent as commanding officer to help foster race prejudice and to cause fresh discrimination not only in the army but ot the whole race of Color as well as to humiliate men wearing the army uniform because worn over a Color dispicable to the "White Public." We ask you to remember the question asked by your daughter, Mrs. Francis B. Sayre only two short weeks ago, "What is the use of our men pouring out their blood on the battle fields of Europe if at the same time we are not doing our best to establish a real democracy here at home?"

We 6000 yea 1,000,000 women of the race voice her sentiments and when we say "Our Men," we do not seperate the white from the black for there is no seperation on earth, in heaven or in hell.

The Revoluntionary war proved it, the Civil war proved it, the Spanish American war proved it, the fight at Carrazal proved it and before the present war its proof will be emblazoned again for victory. We ask you to rise to the dignity of your position of this great nation and stamp your disapproval upon this American curse prejudice and demand it shall be stopped nof, hence, forth and forever not only to the soldier of Color wearing the uniform of your and their Government, but to the rest of the masses of their race.

Respectfully,
MISS ELIZABETH C. CARTER,
President of Northeastern Federation of Women's Clubs.
MISS ROBERTA J. DUNBAR,
Chairman Resolution Committee

BALLOU EXPLAINS TO SCOTT..

Says His Bulletin was only One of Advice, Designed to Prevent Racial Friction, and Had Nothing to do With any Policy of Segregation.

Prosecutes Theater Manager Who is Fined $70.

Camp Funston, Kansas, May 15.—It transpires that while Major-General C. C. Ballon, of the 92d division, was addressing the men under him through Bulletin No. 35, he was at the same time pressing the prosecution of the theatrical manager who had discriminated against a sergeant of the Division.

The prosecution of the Manager of the Warsham Theater for discrimination on account of color, instigated at General Ballou's request, was, after being twice continued, tried in Police Court at Manhattan, Kansas, a few days ago resulted in the conviction of the defendant and the imposition of a fine of $10 and costs. It is generally assumed that the conviction of the theatrical manager will serve to prevent a repetition of the offense, and will deter other theater owners and managers from making discrimination on account of color. General Ballou followed the same course here as he did at the Officers' Training School at Des Moines, Iowa, last summer, namely: while admonishing his men to refrain from precipitating racial disturbances, to prosecute those who should discriminate against his men.

Gen. Ballou Writes Scott.

The following letter addressed to Emmett J. Scott, Special Assistant to the Secretary of War, although dated April 22, 1918, has just been made public, since the prosecution and conviction of the offending theatre manager. A letter, similar in character, has also been written to the editor of the Crisis, New York. The letter to Mr. Scott follows:

Headquarters 92nd Division, Camp Funston, Kansas, April 22, 1918.

Mr. Emmett J. Scott, War Department, Washington D. C.

My Dear Mr. Scott:

I have your request that I make a brief statement relative to Bulletin No. 35, these headquarters. There seems to be no good reason why I should not do so.

Here are the preliminary facts:

A soldier of this Division got into trouble with a theater manager at Manhattan and reported it to me. I at once ordered an investigation, placed the facts before the Division Judge Advocate and was informed by him that the theatre manager had violaated the law. I then put the case in the hands of the United States Attorney and requested the prosecution of the theater manager. The case was set for April 22. I then issued Bulletin No. 35, which, in brief, is counsel to my soldiers to avoid race troubles. This Bulletin was given out to the colored press of the country, accompanied by an entirely misleading letter, that not only completely suppressed all mention of any prosecution of the theatre manager, but directly and falsely conveyed the impression to editors and readers that I had not done so. The most prejudiced person will, I think, at once see that this was a malicious attempt to stir up race feeling by misrepresentation.

Good Order and Military Discipline Foundation Stones.

The character of Bulletin No. 35 was that of advice, as already stated. This advice was ordered published to the Division. It had nothing to do with any policy of segregation, or with any policy outside of the military establishments. Its purpose was to prevent race friction, with the attendant prejudice to good order and military discipline are the foundation stones of the military service. They are indispensable. Nothing connected with the service of the colored troops has ever been so threatening to good order and discipline as race troubles have been, and it is well known that our enemies have sought to profit by this fact ever since there was a prospect of war. No stone has been left unturned. There have always been foes of our country ready to aggravate the grievances of the colored people on the one hand and to stir up the whites on the other. It was no mere coincident that the East St. Louis atrocities occurred in a city filled largely with German sympathizers.

There is little doubt that the same influence agged on both whites and blacks at Houston. Most troubles have small beginnings. At Houston they grew from the fact of colored soldiers entering cars reserved for whites, and other similar matters. Great wrongs were eventually committed on both sides, culminating in the killing of a score or more of white people and the hanging of thirteen Negroes. In the midst of all the feeling and excitement caused by the E. St. Louis and Houston troubles, the colored officers' training camp at Fort Des Moines won golden approbation all over the United States, made thousands of friends for the colored race and achieved a glorious success. It did all this by following precisely the advise that was repeated to the 92d division in Bulletin No. 35.

"By Their Fruits ye Shall Know Them."

Our enemies do not wish the United States to have its military power increased by colored soldiers, and they stand ready to add fuel to every race discord in order to embarrass our country as much as possible in this war. Is it any wonder then, in view of what the enemy has accomplished in the past and is seeking to accomplish again, that the commander of the colored division seeks to nip trouble in the bud, and while prosecuting white men for their offenses against his soldiers, urges the soldiers to do their part to keep the peace and promote harmony.

I have shown that my position and action was deliberately misrepresented to the colored people by the suppression of the news of my prompt prosecution of the theater manager, and by falsely conveying the impression that I had taken no such action. The entire letter that accompanied Bulletin No. 35 to the press of the colored people was a misrepresentation of my attitude and of the facts in the case, and no fair-minded person, when the facts are known, as stated above, can fail to see the work of an enemy— of our country and an even greater enemy to the colored race. Is the colored race going to "fall" to such schemes? I think not. I think they will contrast the work of trouble-makers with the solid achievements of the colored officers' training camp at Fort Des Moines and of the 92d division, and consider thoughtfully the words, "By their fruit ye shall know them."

Sincerely, C. C. BALLOU,
Major General 92d Division.

NEGROES RESENT OLIVER ATTACK ON THEIR RACE

CLARKSBURG W. VA. EXPONENT OCTOBER 27, 1918

KEYSER, Oct. 26.—The following letter has been mailed to Secretary of War Baker:

Hon. Newton D. Baker,
Secretary of War,
Washington, D. C.

Honored Sir:—

The undersigned, representing a deputation of colored citizens of West Virginia, a state that has sent to arms fully 12,000 men of uor race, now fighting in France, have requested through Congressmen Neely and Littlepage, of West Virginia, and Congressman Brumbaugh, of Ohio, the honor of a few minutes hearing by you for the purpose of endorsing the designation of Ralph W. Taylor by authority of your department, as War Correspondent with General Pershing's forces. He is a negro newspaper man of Columbus, Ohio, known to our people in West Virginia and respected by them as a quiet, unassuming man of talent and industry who has filled with credit high public office. We understand he is now in France doing his alloted work as war correspondent, for which work he is vouched for by Governor James M. Cox of Ohio and Governor John J. Cornwell of West Virginia.

Secondly, we desire respectfully to protest on behalf of the colored people of West Virginia and Ohio against Mr. Tyler's threatened recall from his duties as war correspondent because we believe that any such effort to procure his recall by the war department is dangerous propaganda tending to renew unworthy and un-American race discrimination at a time when men of our race by hundreds of thousands are fighting and dying in France with courage and loyalty to America and to the President.

That our fears are not caused by mere idle rumors from irresponsible sources we respectfully refer you to the editorial printed on October 15th by a great republican newspaper to the highest party standing, the Pittsburg Gazette Times, owned by George T. Oliver, former United States senator from Pennsylvania, under the heading "An Unwise Courtesy," in which Mr. Tyler's assignment to such duty is subjected to heartless criticism and denunciation.

Taking this occasion to express the thanks of our people to President Wilson and to you for all your efforts to bring about proper sympathy, understanding and justice to our race we are,

Yours respectfully,
(Signed) Alex. Redmond.

BALLOU CAN'T BACKTRACK.

Colored newspapers, generally, carried recently a letter from Major Gen. C. C. Ballou to Mr. Emmet J. Scott, in which he tries to explain away "Bulletin No. 35."

It will be remembered—because it cannot be forgotten—that Gen. Ballou recently issued an order to the Colored soldiers at Fort DesMoines to keep in their places and thereby avoid friction with white people, etc.

It was a humiliating, insulting order not only as the Cleveland Gazette says, to Colored soldiers but to the race. The General's letter to Mr. Scott in which he says he prosecuted and convicted the theater manager who refused a Colored soldier a seat, does not square the matter at all. The order was issued because this soldier demanded his right to enter the theater and get a seat. And chastising the theater manager, while proper, does not destroy the effect of the order, which still stands. The Gazette in a burning editorial, we wish we could reproduce, refuses to be placated and urges the race to make a determined effort to have the order rescinded and the General reprimanded.

We agree with the Gazette. It is not a small local matter and we should resent it earnestly.

Discrimination and Distinction

N. A. A. C. P. Protests Against Color Line Order of Gen. Ballou

The Daily Herald April 5, 1918

Refuses to Indorse Principle Underlying Military Announcement That Negro Soldiers Must be Submissive Under Insulting and Brutal Treatment

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, thru its Secretary, John R. Shillady, makes public the following letter addressed to the War Department concerning an order issued on March 28, 1918, by command of Major General Ballou, Division Commander of the 92nd Division, Camp Funston, Kansas, in which colored officers and men are advised that "no useful purpose will be served by any action upon their part that will cause the color question to be raised," and admonishing them to "refrain from going where their presence will be resented." The Association directs the War Department's attention to the fact that Major General Ballou's order concerns illegal actions taken against colored officers and not illegal or unworthy acts performed by colored soldiers themselves.

Copies of the Division order and the Association's letter follow:

HEADQUARTERS 92nd DIVISION,
Camp Funston, Kansas, Mar. 28, 1918
BULLETIN NO. 35.

1. It should be well known to all colored officers and men that no useful purpose is served by such acts as will cause the "color question" to be raised. It is not a question of legal rights, but a question of policy, and any policy that tends to bring about a conflict or races, with its resulting animosities, is prejudicial to the military interest of the 92nd Division, and therefore prejudicial to an important interest of the colored race.

2. To avoid such conflicts the Division Commander has repeatedly urged that all colored members of his command, and especially the officers and noncommissioned officers, should refrain from going where their presence will be resented. In spite of this injunction, one of the Sergeants of the Medical Department has recently precipitated the precise trouble that should be avoided, and then called on the Division Commander to take sides in a row that should never have occured, and would not have occurred had the Sergeant placed the general good above his personal pleasure and convenience. This Sergeant entered a theartre, as he undoubtedly had a legal right to do, and precipitated trouble by making it possible to allege race discrimination in the seat he was given. He is strictly within his legal rights in this matter, and the theatre manager is legally wrong. Nevertheless, the Sergeant is guilty of the greater wrong in doing ANYTHING, no matter how LEGALLY correct, that will provoke race animosity.

3. The Division Cammander repeats that the success of the Division, with all that that success implies, is dependent upon the good will of the public. That public is nine-tenth white. White men made the Division, and they can break it just as easily if it becomes a trouble maker.

4. All concerned are again enjoined to place the general interest of the Division above personal pride and gratification. Avoid every situation that can give rise to racial ill-will. Attend quietly and faithfully to your duties, and don't go where your presence is not desired.

5. This will be read to all organizations of the 92nd Division.

By command of Major General Ballou;

Allen J. Greer,
Lieutenant Colonel, General Staff,
OFFICIAL;

Edw. J. Turgeon, Captain,
Assistant Adjutant, Acting Adjutant.

April 11, 1918.
War Department, Washington, D. C.
Sirs:

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People desires specifically to direct your attention to what in its judgement is a most unjust, humiliating and inexpedient general order affecting colored officers and men of the 92nd Division of the National Army, issued on March 28, 1918, as a Bulletin Number 35, by command of Major General Ballou at Headquarters, 92d Division, Camp Funston, Kansas.

This Bulletin, which has come to our attention within the last day or two, directs colored officers and men of the 92nd Division to "refrain from going where their presence will be resented," and asserts that the interests of the service require that members of this command shall not insist upon their legal rights but that they shall not do anything, "no matter how legally correct, that will provoke race animosity." This latter reference is mentioned in the Bulletin in connection with a specific instance in which a colored sergeant entered a theatre and was discriminated against in the seat given him by the theatre manager.

This Association is desirous that colored officers and soldiers now in the United Staes Army shall acquit themselves with credit to their country and to their several commands. It is constrained to believe, however, that General Ballou is in error in assuming that the good of the service will be promoted by enjoining colored officers from performing perfectly lawful acts which would in no wise be resented by any part of the population were these officers not colored. Furthermore, we believe that the people of the United States as a whole will indignantly resent the imitation contained in the third paragraph of the Division Commander's Bulletin that because the public is nine-tenth white its good will be forfeited if Negro officers and privates avail themselves of the usual privileges of attending places of recreation, amusement and entertainment. On the contrary, we believe that the public as a whole will be quick to resent any conduct on the part of theatre managers or other business men denying to men wearing the uniform of the United States any rights or privileges to which they are by law entitled.

We further believe that this order is not alone unjust but injudicious in that by its very terms it raises questions of race discrimination more serious than that which might be raised by any other means of which we can conceive.

We can not believe that the War Department of the United States will approve of an order charactering as "personal pride and gratification" any proper exercise of the rights of citizenship, if exercised by a colored man in uniform.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) JOHN R. SHILLADY,
Secretary.

NEGRO SOLDIER AT CAMP GRANT IS BAYONETED

ATTEMPT TO RUSH GUARD IS FATAL TO COLORED MAN—GUARD IS EXONERATED.

Officers Find Corporal Larkin Did Duty in Balking Effort to Join

BELOIT WIS NEWS
JUNE 22, 1918

Failure to obey orders forbidding the negro troops already in camp to intermingle with the new recruits cost Private Richard Duffey, colored, Co A. 2rd labor battalion, 161st Depot Brigade, his life at Camp Grant last night.

Duffey, with a number of other negroes, hurled himself on a guard of white soldiers and was run thru and fataly wounded by a bayonet in the hands of Corporal Phillip J. Larkin, He died a few minutes later in the base hospital.

An increment of negro soldiers from Mississippi had occasioned considerable commotion among the colored troops in the labor division and they were attempting to mingle with them despite the orders of the commandant to the contrary. A guard was stationed around the new men and the negroes ordered to stand back in compliance with the orders issued before the increment arrived.

Corporal Larkin had been placed on guard and had resisted a number of attempts to break thru the line by the negroes. After several efforts to reach the new men by individual attacks, a number of the black soldiers formed in a bunch and rushed the point of the line where Larkin was stationed. Larkin held his bayonet firm, discarding the light thrust stroke used in quelling disturbances, and Duffey ran into it, the weapon entering his stomach. He fell with a cry that he had been cut and was rushed to the base hospital where he died a few minutes later.

Corporal Larkin, who has a record as an exceptionally good soldier at Camp Grant, was completely exonerated of any implication in a deliberate murder after an investigation, it being apparent that he was not aware of the fact that he had run Duffey thru until he had been carried away. Duffey also had a good record and his action in rushing the line of guards was assigned to a failure to comprehend the orders rather than a deliberate attempt to resist discipline.

GENERAL BALLOU CONVICTS THEATRE MANAGER.

The General Says His Bulletin Was One of Advice, Designed to Prevent Racial Friction, and Had Nothing to Do With Any Policy of Segregation.

"By Their Fruits Ye Shall Know Them."

Our enemies do not wish the United States to have military power increased by colored soldiers, and they stand ready to add fuel to every race discord in order to embarrass our country as much as possible in this war. Is it any wonder then, in view of what the enemy has accomplished in the past and is seeking to accomplish again, that the Commander of the colored Division seeks to nip troubles in the bud, and while prosecuting white men for their offences against his soldiers, urges the soldiers to do their part to keep the peace and promote harmony.

I have shown that my position and action were deliberately and maliciously misrepresented to the colored people by the supression of the news of my prompt prosecution of the theater manager, and by falsely conveying the impression that I had taken no such action. The entire letter tha accompanied Bulletin No. 35 to the press of the colored people was a misrepresentation of my attitude and of the facts in the case, and no fair-minded person, when the facts are known, as stated above, can fail to see the work of an enemy—an enemy of our country and an even greater enemy to the colored race. Is the colored race going to fall to such schemes? I think not. I think they will contrast the work of the troublemaker with the solid achievements of the colored officers' training camp at Fort Des Moines and of the 92d Division, and consider thoughtfully the words—"By their fruit ye shall know them."

Sincerely, C. C. BALLOU,
Major-General, Commanding
92d Division.

LEAGUE PROTESTS ORDER TO NEGRO SOLDIERS

BOSTON, Mass., Sunday.—A telegram of protest against an order said to have been issued at Camp Funston, Kansas, requesting negro soldiers and officers not to go where their presence is not desired, was addressed to President Wilson to-day by the National Equal Rights League here. The telegram read:—

"The National Equal Rights League calls upon you to countermand General Baluou's bulletin No. 35, for the Ninety-second division, Camp Funston, Kansas, enjoining officers and soldiers to refrain from going into public places where their presence is resented because of color.

RACE DISCRIMINATION AND THE WAR

Editor Jersey Journal:

We regret to bring before the public at this time this very un-American conduct. Frequent complaints have come to many of the colored pastors of the city that certain amusement houses have refused to sell colored patrons tickets for admission to the lower floor. Some of the most respectable colored ladies of Jersey City have been refused admission to the floor. Why?

It is reported that Southern sentiment has forced this state of affairs here. We most emphatically protest against this discrimination. It is giving the lie to the world at large as touching our democracy. This is one of the most pernicious forms of humiliation practiced upon an individual simply because he belongs to a certain race.

This country in no part of it can well do anything that reflects upon the black race now. The loyalty, support and sacrifice the race is ungrudgingly making, demand for it any consideration the nation can give it. Managers of amusement houses that sanction such now are Huns in our midst and should be made to stop it. It is an insult to every respectable citizen in this country. This pernicious form of oppression begun on colored people can be easily extended to any people. Many of these houses carry war pictures. The service and sacrifice of the colored boy is shown there and his mother and sister, like all other mothers and sisters desire to see their boys without being insulted and made to feel that they are inferior to people that sit on the first floor.

If any reason exist why this new plan has been adopted, the ministry of this city is willing to co-operate with the managers and seek to remove it. The colored race in Jersey will fight to the bitter end any attempt to segregate it, not that it desires close contact with any race, but because the segregation means a reflection upon the race and a notice to the world that it is unfit to receive the consideration other races receive.

We have our vices, but also our virtues. We are no better nor worse than any other race. We believe in a square deal and will not sacrifice that principle for money. We believe the spirit shown by Jersey City in this war time will not approve of this questionable practice on the part of some people who may be a menace to the good fellowship of this city.

We believe that there is too much of the fair play to permit this kind of Hunism to land in Jersey City. Amusement houses that persist in this dangerous policy now, which is capable of causing an outburst, for some hot-headed fellow may resent it, should be reminded to desist or forfeit their right to operate such places. Even if the law permitted this discrimination, right thinking Americans would spurn it in the hour when all races are mingling their blood on French soil for the cause of liberty.

BALLOU ORDER STILL OPPOSED

Washington, April 25.—Protests continue to come to the War Department against the recent order of Maj. Gen. Ballou, commanding the 92nd division, in which colored troopers are advised to stay away from places of public resort where whites objected, even though such opposition is a violation of civil rights laws. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Board of Church Extension and the Financial Board of the A. M. E. Church are among the bodies that have registered disapproval.

The order is said to have been resented at various cantonments, and the report comes from Camp Upton, Yaphank, N. Y., that it was torn down.

BULLETIN NO. 35.

1. It should be well known to all Colored Officers and Men that no useful purpose is served by such acts as will cause the "color question" to be raised. It is not a question of legal rights, but a question of policy, and any policy which tends to bring about a conflict of races, with its resulting animosities, is prejudicial to the military interest of the 92nd Division, and therefore prejudicial to an important interest of the Colored race.

This Sergeant entered a theatre, as he undoubtedly had a legal right to do, and precipitated trouble by making it possible to allege race discrimination in the seat he was given. PROTESTS AGAINST U. S. ARMY COMMANDERS ACT IN ORDERING COLORED OFFICERS TO SURRENDER THEIR CIVIL RIGHTS TO PREJUDICE OF WHITE AMERICANS—ON TO WASHINGTON MAY 26-30.

Boston, Mass., April 17, 1918.

To the Editor of the Guardian,
Dear Editor:

I am sending you a copy of bulletin which explains itself. I would appreciate it very much if you would print this article in your paper, as it is an exact copy of bulletin number 35 issued by the commander of the 92nd. division, Major General Ballou.

It seems absurd yet it is an undenied fact that there are Americans in name only, but not in actions, who during these trying times when there should be unity of all forces to crush the common enemy fighting against the allies, who should try to humiliate one tenth of the strength of the United States. I could not let this pass without giving one word of comment, as I am an American citizen, in name, actions, and patriotism through and through and would feel that I was committing a crime to not say one word against such unreasonable practices.

This is no time for part of the people to be heaping insults upon insults upon the weaker part, but if we are to win this war we must have unity of spirit and action, therefore I take a decided stand against any rules or laws whereby a man wearing the same uniform and fighting for the same cause should not have the equal rights of all in similar positions. Therefore I hope you will give this article wide publicity so that the honest American thinking public can see that although the Negro is fighting the world's war for democracy, yet he is made to understand that it isn't appreciated and that he is only used for an emergency.

Thanking you for space and considerations, I remain.

Your very respectfully,
NORMAN N. RAYNER,
President of the Boston Branch of the Welfare League.

Tries to Explain the Failure Noticeable in Not Publishing Casualties of Colored Soldiers.

11-28-18

The following letter was received by Mr. Garfield McClane in reply to an inquiry as to why colored soldiers are not listed as such in the casualty lists. Mr. McClane has a son in the service in the 369th Infantry, formerly the 15th Infantry of New York. He has had no word from him recently.

Mr. Garfield McClane,
1917 Wharton Street,
Philadelphia, Pa.

My Dear Sir—

Replying to your letter of recent date, inquiring why the names of Negro soldiers do not appear distinctively as such in the list of dead or wounded, I beg to say that this matter has been the subject of much discussion here in the War Department, and attention has been called to the subject by many newspapers and personal correspondents, but it is against the policy of the Department to segregate the names of those on the casualty lists by races, color or creeds.

Aside from the moral aspect of such distinctions as has been suggested, you can realize what a tremendous amount of clerical work would be entailed by the separation of the many names by racial or other group lines. The same demand that you are making for the Negro soldiers is being made by Jews, Italians, Catholics and others. The answer in all cases is the same. "There is but one army—the United States Army. Its individuals must know themselves simply through the one channel of a common Americanism."

The statement is made that when accidents occur or men become seriously ill the next of kin is immediately notified. In the absence of any report to the contrary, relatives of a soldier may well take it for granted that he is in good health. Since relatives are to be thus informed of any mishap that may befall their kin, it is argued by the authorities that no one else can be intimately concerned.

From the attitude of the War Department on this matter I see no likelihood of the adoption of any system by which the casualty lists can be segregated to determine the race or color or creed of any soldier in the United States Army.

Appreciating your interest in what you feel to be the welfare of the race, I am, Very truly yours,

EMMETT J. SCOTT,
Special Assistant.

PROTECT THE SOLDIERS.

In the process of demobilization of the military forces, which has already begun in the camps over here as well as among the men overseas, there are evidences of the necessity of some measures being taken to protect the discharged soldiers from unnecessary suffering. Discharged soldiers have been encountered in various sections who find it hard to secure employment at once on their return to civil life.

Some of these men have not even the civilian garb that they doffed to enter the service of the country and they are subjects of rebuffs and refusals in their efforts to obtain work at some useful and gainful occupation. In many instances the places they held before entering the army have been filled by others and they are not needed at the old job.

GEN. BALLOU'S ORDER

The Freeman April 26 1918

In these times as at other times the race must not lose sight of the effort to beat back discrimination. At all times the race must reckon well in the effort, not attempting to dislodge all by one stroke. In these times it is especially necessary that we be very circumspect, staging nothing, especially merely because there comes an opportunity.

We have in mind the recent "manifesto" of the National Asociation for the advancement of Colored People, touching on Major Gen. Ballou's order relative to the treatment of a Colored soldier that went to a theatre where he was not expected. There can be no issue of a kind with the association; if it stands for a citizen's rights, the general with supreme good sense stood for the soldiers' legal right, and with equally as good sense spoke of racial relations, and which will not cease at army lines.

The quarrel is not with the general; he has done much to help the Colored soldiers. The quarrel is yet with the people. The same steps taken to protect a soldier in his relations to a community as a citizen should be taken for any other citizen who is not a soldier.

Of course the point is that a soldier whose duty is to die if needs be for his country should not be subjected to petty discriminations on account of his color. And in the great white light of reason it should be that way. We know, however, the practices of our country along this line, being bred into the bone they will not readily be uprooted, consequently it is not necessary to raise a hue and cry as if the condition was being met for the first time.

We are sorry to say that there are but few first class theatres in this country in localities where there are Colored people in large numbers that admit our race kind to all parts of the house. Many of them absolutely refuse Colored people admittance to any part of the houses. So if there is to be a fight on theatres let it be general, rather than a special case, since it is plain that it embarrases the army officials, and furthermore appears as if we were extra anxious to make a point because the war is on.

Loyalty is the word today. All eyes and ears are attentive to that thing. The public is willing to stand for reasonable complaints, but will not stand for anything that looks like making special trouble because of the war.

New Era Will Dawn In Which Negro Will Get Square Deal.

Mr. Emmett J. Scott, special assistant to Secretary of War Baker, who has visited ten of the army camps and has made a close study of the Colored troops in training for service "over there," said in his recent address at Hampton Institute:

"Eighty-three thousand and more Colored men are in the camps, under the guidance of black men and under the guidance of white men as well.

"We can see, little by little, how they are responding, just as the boys respond at Hampton to the semi-military training they receive, how their shoulders are going back, and how they are learning the hardest of all lessons—the lesson of obedience.

"In these camps there is a most eager enthusiasm and over-joy usness almost, I might say, to serve their country.

"At least it can be said of us that there is not the slightest suspicion whatever as to whether there are any hyphenates among us.

"It has been true everywhere that there has mounted higher and higher, a patriotism in the breasts of white men and a patriotism as well as in the breasts of Colored men.

"Colored mothers and Colored fathers have sent their sons off, feeling, as the woman felt to whom Lincoln wrote, that they were not making a sacrifice at all, but rather that they were embracing a rare privilege of serving their country.

"Black men everywhere are loyal and patriotic and eager to serve their country. They are asking but one thing of their country—that a square deal and fair play shall be vouchsafed to them.

"There sits in the War Department a man, small of stature though he be, of large and commanding intellect and with a courage surpassing the courage of almost any man I know, who was not afraid to undertake the experiment of a training camp for Colored men and was not afraid to call Colored men to arms.

"I think I can speak advisedly when I say that this man is determined that a man who is willing to lay his life on the altar of his country is worthy of being promised and having vouchsafed to him the same promise and the same reward that is vouchsafed to every other man who is willing to lay down his life for his country. I know that is the spirit of the War Department and I know that that is the spirit of the President of the United States.

"In a very real sense we are citizens of this republic. No one can make me feel, as we go out in this great international conflict to make the world safe for democracy and to make democracy safe for the world, that within the triumphant folds of democracy, when it has been achieved for the men of Servia and Rumania, France, Russia and England, and even for the men of Germany, there are not also to be included the men of America—the black no less than the white."

TWO CHEERING WAR INCIDENTS.

We find in the Washington Star the following paragraph by one of its special correspondents in France, Junius B. Wood: May 4th 1918

Sitting in a dugout in the trenches the other night I heard a Major give an inspiring talk to the battalion officers. Half a dozen knots glowed in a crude fireplace. There were two candles at one end of the table, the other end being in darkness. Boards nailed to the side walls of untrimmed logs supported other candles, the feeble light and the grotesque shadows suggesting cave life. Every man in the room stiffened as the result of that talk.

"We have reached the top in training," he said; "and every man in the company should realize it. If you need anything, come and tell me, and I will get it for you if I can. If I do not get it, I do not want to hear about it again, for it means that I can not get it.

"We will have three meals a day if we can get them. If we have to miss one meal we will not be badly off, and if we miss two or three it will not be much worse. We are expected to work from midnight of one day to midnight of the next day. If there is any chance to sleep between, all right; it will also be all right if there is no chance. Let everybody pitch in. While mud and water must be fought, it may be much worse. The hopes of the Nation are fixed on each man."

The other incident comes from a very well-known Northern citizen who is spending the winter in the South. In a personal letter he writes us as follows:

"I can tell you a beautiful story for the Outlook. The policy of giving Negro regiments Negro officers has caused great controversy in North and South. I have myself noticed in moving among the soldiers of our own army a very marked unwillingness in many quarters of white officers to salute the superior black officers. There have been several unpleasant incidents in consequence. In the South, naturally, this blameworthy attitude is more in evidence. Here in South Carolina prejudice against the black man is, I think, more marked then in any other State of the Union.

"A Negro Major in this State found himself in a room with several junior white officers (all, of course, in uniform-. The white officers avoided giving the salute. The black man, looking at them, steadily, quickly took off his coat, hung it on a chair, and said, 'Salute that, gentlemen, and I am satisfied.' The salute was immediately given. A big man, a brave and a witty, that Negro Major."—The Outlook

REMOVE BALLOU, Mr. PRESIDENT

New York News.

The Afro American April 26, 1918

In behalf of an insulted, outraged race of twelve million patriotic American citizens, we ask President Wilson to remove Major-General Ballou of the Ninety-second Army Divilson. We also ask President Wilson as Commander-in-hief of the United States Army and Navy to rescind forthwith his repulsive Bulletin 35. Nothing short of this we tell him and the American people frankly, will suffice to appease their wrath and indignation. No half-way measures will do. The black citizens of this country are inherently and constitutionally equal citizens in this country. President Wilson must forthwith tell the American people and the world whether the Constitution or General Ballou is right. He must tell the American public and the the world as the black sons of Uncle Sam go forth to do and die for democracy in Europe, as to whether this now Dred Scott dcelsion shall stand. He must tell the world as to whether or not he is going to send these humbled black patriots—the flower of the race's youth—of America into the fight for civilization at this critical hour dispirited and disconsolate. He must make this fateful decision now as to whether he shall send these thousands of black soldiers to fight for freedom "over there" but to submit to serfdom "over here."

SOLDIER SUING FOR THEATRE EVICTION

The New York Age April 27, 1918

(Special to The New York Age.)

Camp Funston, Kans.—Sergt L. E. Mathias of Infirmary 317, Sanitary Train, is said to have been the central figure in the incident which caused General Ballou to issue his famous order for colored soldiers of the 92nd division to refrain from insisting on their rights for fear of provoking the race question.

It is said that on the evening of March 13, Sergeant Mathis escorted two ladies to the Wilheim Theatre at Manhattan, Kans., that because he objected to the drawing of the color line he was forced to leave the place, the management showing marked disrespect for the uniform.

Sergeant Mathis brought suit for damages against the theatre. Then General Ballou issued the order which has aroused so much resentment among the colored people of this country.

Discriminations and Distinctions

COLONEL MAPES OF THE 368th.

The Afro American April 12, 1918.

The Afro-American has nothing but words of praise for Colonel W. S. Mapes, white, of the 368th Infantry at Camp Meade. Colonel Mapes while in Baltimore last week declared publicly that the 368th Infantry is the best in the cantonment. Backing up his declaration, he pointed to the housekeeping of the boys, their apparent automatic drilling, and the courage of colored regiments that he has commanded in previous wars. "I have been wounded twice with them, and I have never seen a streak of yellow in Negro troops as a body," said the Colonel as his final word.

Perhaps, after all, the Colonel was "laying it on rather thick." While perfectly sincere in his opinion, his admiration may be thot to be influenced by the fact that the soldiers of the 368th are his own command. "Fatherly affection" might express the reason for his high words of commendation. This is undoubtedly the view of General Nicholson, who admits that the 368th are good troopers but not superior to the others. In fact, every Colonel at Meade asserts and insists that his own regiment is the best in the camp. This is natural.

The fact that we wish to point out here is a fact that every experienced officer knows. Unless commanding officers and men constitute a mutual admiration society, the regiment fails in the pinches. Successful commanding generals are men that have fought their way to fame, backed solidly by the love and respect of the men in the ranks. At the outbreak of the present war some of the Russian and German regiments could not be trusted to make successful attacks. They used up too many officers. Those who were not killed by the enemy were "mysteriously" shot down from the rear. One German deserter boasts that he "disposed of" five officers of his regiment in this way.

The Afro-American has asked the War Department to officer all colored troops with colored officers. If all white officers were of the caliber of Colonel Mapes, this request would not have been necessary. Two weeks ago the New York Outlook contained a leading article on the "Mobilization of the Darkey" by a white lieutenant in charge of colored troops. It is this type of white officer that we commend especially the example of Colonel Mapes.

As further example of good and bad white officers in charge of colored troops, we reprint without comment this letter from the current number of the "Crisis." The writer is a member of the 15th New York regiment in France:

"Dear, you do not know what we have to go thru here, but in the end 'The Great God' above will right all wrongs. I would never have dreamed that the American white man would ever at this time when each and every man of the dear old U. S. A. is sacrificing his all and all for his country regardless of his creed or color, use prejudice and try his utmost to poison another nation against the American Negro soldier. Just for the sake of you I am swallowing some bitter pills in that respect. You know my temper.

'The officers in our regiment are all gentlemen in every respect, and our good Colonel Hayward is all that a man could be. We love our officers and our Colonel, and we are taking the slurs, insults, and the sarcasm that confront us daily on duty and off duty from the heathen people who do not know any better, but bye and bye, some day in the end, there will be a justification. Oh, our wives, our mothers, sisters, brothers, and our families pray that we may be able to govern ourselves!

HAVE YOU BOUGHT YOUR LIBERTY BOND?

GENERAL BALLOU'S ORDER.

Major General Ballou has just issued an order to the Colored men of his division which is, to say the least, "extry."

In part, the order calls for the exercise of care on the part of the commissioned and non-commissioned officers and men of the division in shunning places where they have reason to believe that their presence will be resented. It is an apparent appeal for lessening the "racial issue" controversies.

The order might possibly be considered "perfectly harmless" and of the "vaudeville type" of monologues if it were not for the paragraph, "White men made possible the division, and white men can break it up."

We expected better than this of Major General Ballou in this day of bitter warfare when the President is calling upon all America—white and black, we presume—to rally to the Flag and help to crush "the foe of humanity."

We can only urge our race to forgive General Ballou, "he knows not what he says."

WE ARE NOT IN FAVOR OF THE MEN OF ANY DIVISION SEEKING TO STIR UP "RACIAL STRIFE." We feel that NOW IS NOT THE TIME for injecting any such issue into the already overcrowded portfolio of Uncle Sam.

Let us help "lick the Kaiser" FIRST and then thrash out our local difficulties.

We do not want to be classed in the President's list of "creatures of passion, disloyalty and anarchy," therefore let us say "shoo fly" to General Ballou's "undiplomatic paragraph."

Now, all together—let's get the Kaiser!

"A FOOL THERE WAS."

Aside from the fact that all military precedents are broken by a lieutenant—first or second—assuming to publicly speak for a general, Second Lieutenant T. T. Thompson's defense of General Ballou's infamous bulletin No. 35 is the "merest rot." Why should Lieut. Thompson, who subscribes himself as "assistant personal officer" of the 92nd Division, attempt to explain away that bulletin, when its language was plain and unmistakable, so plain, that any wayfaring man—even a fool—could understand it.

Lieut. Thompson's ravings recall that clever title—"A Fool There Was." Advocate 5-11-18

That bulletin 35 was so clear and plain that even General Ballou himself has not thought it necessary to attempt an explanation.

GENERAL BALLOU'S BULLETIN.

The Bee April 20, 1918. 79

The sweetest thing in life is freedom. Without it—without the hope of it, life is not worth the living. In all ages men have died for it. Men—millions of them, are today fighting and dying for it.

We, the colored people of this country, are giving our boys to the cause of liberty—freedom. To the colored mother the giving up of her son, even to fight for and die for world democracy, which is freedom by another term, is a supreme sacrifice—a sacrifice only surpassed, if surpassed it was, by the sacrifice Christ made when He permitted himself to die upon the cross.

To be ordered, and to cheerfully obey that order, to sail thousands of leagues across the seas to fight, and die fighting oppression, conscious—sadly conscious that even our boys wearing the garb of American patriots—American soldiers must bow to oppression here before they sail to fight, and die fighting oppression elsewhere breaks down their courage—the courage of "our boys," and steeps their mothers—they who gave as a sacrifice these sons to freedom's cause, in grief.

Major General Ballou's un-American, un-patriotic bulletin impressing upon our colored soldiers—mothers' sons, that they must not ask or expect freedom although enlisted to fight for it for foreigners, shocked the colored people of this country; minimized the respect for him of the colored soldiers serving under him, and, as a natural resultant, must necessarily disturb the morale of his splendid, loyal, patriotic division.

We are, however, supporting our confidence in the fair play of the American public, and in the belief that the War Department is sincere in its desire to conserve the loyalty of all citizens, irrespective of race or color, by assuming that Major General Ballou's insulting bulletin has not the sanction of the War Department.

As a commander of this particular division; the 92nd, General Ballou's usefulness to secure the best efforts has suffered an irreparable loss. How can men enthuse over a commander who makes it brutally plain to them that they are inferiors—mere pawns to a hateful racial prejudice? And, remember, battles are won when the fighting men are wrought up with enthusiasm for a cause, and for a commander.

At least, the colored soldiers are wrought up with enthusiasm for a cause that aims to destroy autocracy; that aims to establish absolute democracy. No peoples are more consecrated to freedom than our race, and no soldiers fighting with the Allies are more consecrated to this "government of the people for the people, and by the people" than the colored troops of these United States.

We hope General Ballou will receive another assignment.

FIFTEENTH MAN CALLS HAYWARD UNJUST TO RACE

The New York News 11-8-18

Colored Officers Sent From New York Regiment and Colored Chaplains Were Discriminated Against, Says Private Williams

Mr. George W. Harris,
New York News,
135 West 135th Street,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Sir:

I have just finished reading some of the N. Y. colored papers which I found very interesting. A letter of July 26 from Colonel William Hayward, commanding 369th Infantry, U. S. A., regarding transfer of colored officers from same organization and published in a New York paper, issue of August 24, is such an injustice to the enlisted personnel of the "old 15th N. Y." aid its former colored officers, that as a Race lover, I consider it my duty to let the folks at home know the exact conditions exising in the regiment, through your medium, and I trust you will inform the general public accordingly.

In the second paragraph of letter, Colonel Hayward said "the reason Lieut. George C. Lacey asked to go to the 370th Infantry was because he had had trouble with Captain Charles W. Fillmore." There was no outward evidence of any trouble between these officers (and at the time Lieut. Lacey applied for transfer, I know positively there was nothing but harmony existing between them). Perhaps, one reason why Lieut. Lacey requested transfer was his non-promotion to captaincy. After completing an infantry course at a certain school in France where he made an average of 99 per cent.; also qualifying as a machine gun expert, he returned to the regiment accompanied by a certain lieutenant (white) who had just passed the tests by the skin of his teeth at his same American school. Both Lieut. Lacey and this white officer was assigned to the machine gun company of this regiment. The officer who had made the lowest mark was made commanding officer with Lieut. Lacey under him; later the white officer was made captain of the company. Was not this an injustice to Lieut. Lacey's evident ability?

Captain Charles W. Fillmore, the first colored officer to lead his company in the first line trenches, applied to be transferred to the Quartermaster Corps. It is believed that through the effors of Colonel Hayward, he was instead transferred to another line organization, namely, the 366th Infantry U. S. A. Prior to his departure from us, I might say that he did more for the colored youth in this regiment than anyone else, barring none. He was a father to us, and anyone in trouble could always receive friendly advice from him, also money if need be. He left us with the feeling of a man who had practically founded the regiment, and then after it was completely organized, he was "kicked out."

Captain Napoleon B. Marshall went to the 93rd Division by reason of transfer from the 369th Infantry, U. S. A. You will note in letter that Colonel Hayward told him if he (Marshall) thought he could do better elsewhere and be happier, he had better go. Why was Captain Marshall actually despised by certain officers of high command in the regiment. Was it because he was a Harvard graduate and was able to cope with any situation in which the majority of them would have failed? It took the patience of a good soldier to stand what he stood before he was transferred. No doubt, "he is happier elsewhere."

"Reid made no application." May I ask why Colonel Hayward's letter emphasized this information in a different type of print? Judging from a statement, Lieut. D. Lincoln Reid made to a certain number of non-commissioned officers of this regiment, he did make application for transfer to the 370th Infantry, and was later sent there in accordance.

It is the opinion of the enlisted personnel, that from strong circumstantial evidence, it is almost certain that all the colored officers of the 369th Infantry were "politely' 'asked to transfer to other organizations.

Before Lieut. James Reese Europe went to the hospital in July, there were rumors that he had requested to be transferred to another regiment. Since that date, all bandleaders in the A. E. F. have been promoted to either 1st or 2nd lieutenants, according to the length of their service. Lieut. Europe, therefore, came back to the regiment via the band route. A colored man would have been commissioned bandleader, anyway.

Colonel Hayward says in the next paragraph that "we" hear unofficially that ten colored officers are coming to us, but no "definite orders." Colonel Hayward knows, deep down in his heart, that no colored officers will ever be assigned to this regiment except the band leader and the chaplains. He also says that if the ten colored officers do come, they will be treated by him and other white officers exactly on a par and equality just as our colored officers have always been. "If" they had came and were treated as our former colored officers, they would certainly have a hard time of it. Instead of respecting their rank, they would be ignored and embarrassed by our white officers with few exceptions. I honestly believe the colored officers who were formerly with the 369th are happy now, as they seemed to be carrying the weight of the world with them while with his organization.

The Colonel did secure permission for 10 of our enlisted men to attend Officers' Training School, but why does he remark about that? In accordonce with orders from G. H. Q., A. E. F. the regiment could have sent a certain quota to these schools every three months. Figuring that the regiment has been in France almost one year, and that not a score of our men have been sent to school to become officers is discouraging. One officer (white) in this regiment remarked "there were no men in the 369th qualified to become officers." I know at least 100, numbering among these, college men, high school graduates and business men from all walks of life. The best proof is, the few who went to school are now officers and are "making good."

The Chaplains, according to Army Regulations, rank on the staff of the regimental commander. Instead of eating at the officers' mess I have seen these gentlemen in line with enlisted men, waiting to be fed. They explained no provision had been made for them, and they had to either eat with us or go hungry. The two colored Y. M. C. A. workers attached to this regiment have been in the same position. Whenever the regiment moves to a new station, every officer is billeted but the chaplains and the two Y. M. C. A. secretaries. They have to chase around and find the billeting officer to get a place to rest their heads after perhaps a brutal hike from the trenches. This lack of courtesy is noticed by all the men and remarks are frequently passed that something should be done to protect our Race leaders.

From the other paragraphs in the Colonel's letter, you will note that he says he is proud of us, of our actions

WASHINGTON TRIP BRINGS RESPONSE

The Topeka Plaindealer

President Wilson Through Secretary Tumulty Asks About Treatment of the Colored Soldiers.

When in Washington, D. C. we visited the White House and left a letter containing a number of complaints which Private Secretary Tumulty assured us he would bring to the attention of the president as President Wilson was out playing golf and we did not get to see him.

We did not charge in our complaints that the war department was discriminating against the soldiers, but we did say that discrimination was being practiced in the army against colored soldiers, and we do not see how our letter could be misconstrued so as to mean that we charged the war department with making the discrimination. We note in Mr. Tumulty's letter what he says concerning the colored Red Cross nurses, and we wish to say that the question we desire explained is why the government has a training department for nurses, and will not allow colored women to attend so as to receive the instruction.

In our letter we called the president's attention to the mistreatment of a colored lieutenant at Chickasha, Okla., who was arrested and put off the Pullman in which he was riding and fined $24 and cost for refusing to ride in a Jim Crow car, and we are now preparing to give more detailed information concerning this case that we may send same to the president that a satisfactory investigation may be conducted. Following is the letter received from the secretary to the president:

The White House, Washington,
October 1, 1918.

Dear Sir:

The President directs me to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of August 19, 1918, in which you refer to alleged discrimination against colored soldiers in the Army, and to advise you that no discrimination has been practiced by the War Department.

Steps have already been taken to provide colored Red Cross nurses for colored soldiers, and colored doctors are being called into the service as soon as there are organizations to which to assign them.

The President directs me to say that he feels a sincere appreciation of the loyalty of the members of the colored race, and of their services in helping to win the war, and he desires me to convey to you his assurance that colored men will be afforded the fullest possible opportunities for commissions, promotions and advancement on their merits.

Sincerely yours,
JOSEPH P. TUMULTY,
Secretary to the President.

SEND 95 NEGROES TO K. U.

General Crowder Calls on Missouri Draft Boards to Fill Call.

We are glad to see that General J. H. McCord received a call today Crowder has issued an order that ninety-five colored recruits be sent to Kansas State University for instruction. This is a step in the right direction. Below is the article:

Jefferson City, Oct. 3.—Lieut. Col. from Provost Marshal Gen. Crowder to furnish ninety-five negroes from Missouri in draft of October 15 to be given vocational training.

The negroes will be sent to the University of Kansas for training. Those who have grammar school educations or mechanical training and can read and write are eligible for the training. They will be inducted through their local boards.

VETERAN SOLDIER IS LAID TO REST

The Advocate April 20 1918

WASHINGTON, April 15. The funeral of the late Major James Walker, major of the First Separate battalion, District National Guard, took place last Friday afternoon from 19th Street Baptist church. Major Walker's command was the first to be called out after the declaration of war with Germany. They were assigned to guard bridges here in Washington. Exposure caused Major Walker to contract a cold which developed into tuberculosis. He was retired, with pay, because of physical disabilities, and sent to the government's tuberculosis hospital in New Mexico shortly after the first of the year, and died there last week. His remains were buried at Arlington, the national soldiers' cemetery here. In civil life Major Walker was, and had been for years, one of the supervisors in the public schools. He was beloved by every one, and his old command idolized him. His battalion is now "somewhere" in France, having sailed as a part of the 372nd regiment some weeks ago.

Perhaps the most remarkable, intense and soul-moving incident ever recorded in connection with a funeral in Washington, was when Rev. Francis J. Grimke, in his remarks, paused, and pointing down to the casket that held the remains of the late Major James Walker, said: "Here is our sacrifice. Is General Ballou's order our reward?" Its effect upon the immense audience was instantaneous. Its effect was like that of Mark Anthony's oration over the body of Caesar.

Discriminations and Distinctions

The Cry of the Submerged Tenth

N Y C CALL
APRIL 16, 1918

IN theory a man's constitutional rights should never be set aside for or surrendered to expediency; in practice it may be very different. The following is a case in point: A letter has been received at the war department from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People complaining of race discrimination in the army. It seems that a Negro sergeant in uniform entered a theater and there was some trouble about the seat allotted him. The trouble, we do not know, as it is not mentioned specifically in the press report, but the complaint drew the following answer from Major General Ballou in the War Department Bulletin:

> It should be well known to all colored officers and men that no useful purpose is served by such acts as will cause the color question to be raised. It is not a question of legal rights, but of policy. The sergeant (who enters the theater) is strictly within his legal rights in this matter, and the theater manager is legally wrong. Nevertheless, the sergeant is guilty of the greater wrong in doing anything, no matter how legally correct, that will provoke race animosity.

Now, what does this mean? Simply that Major General Ballou in the most offhand manner reduces the constitution to a "scrap of paper."

The greater criminal is the man who will exercise his rights under the law; the lesser criminal is he who breaks the law by trying to prevent him doing this. It is a crime, and a great crime, not to allow the criminal to violate the constitution, which is a lesser crime. It is a crime to do what you have a legal right to do if it provokes somebody else into doing what he has no legal right to do. That is what the soldier says, and he adds that > Nine-tenths of the public is white. White men made the division, and they can break it just as easily if it becomes a trouble maker.

That is to say to the Negroes, "You are in the minority; you are only one-tenth; therefore you are nine-tenths wrong. The whites who are in the majority of nine-tenths are one-tenth wrong."

And what becomes, in the face of this opinion, of the statement that the law—including the constitution, of course—exists to "protect the weak from the strong." Major General Ballou is, no doubt, an ardent supporter of the constitution, but he does not believe a word of that.

And the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People remarks that they are "constrained to believe that General Ballou is in error," and adds:

> We believe that the public as a whole will be quick to resent any conduct on the part of theater managers or other business men denying to men wearing the uniform of the United States any rights or privileges to which they are by law entitled. We cannot believe that the war department will approve an order characterizing as "personal pride and gratification" any proper exercise of the rights of citizenship if exercised by a colored man in uniform.

The association is at the same time too credulous and too skeptical in this matter. If they believe the "public" will resent this, they have only to wait and see the public do it. If they cannot believe the war department will do as they say, then they believe against an accomplished fact which they do not have to wait and see. General Ballou is the voice of the war department, and he has spoken.

We detest this condition as heartily as any Negro can, but we do not propose to deceive ourselves about it. There is not the slightest reason for sharing in the belief of the association, as given above, we are sorry to say. If it is put forward as what "ought" to be, we concur, of course. We would not have the slightest discrimination made between men who are giving everything they possess—their lives—to serve their country, and the Negro is giving that, exactly as is the white man. But the actual world is very different. What "ought" to be is not, and it is useless pretending that it is. A black man shall not do what the constitution says he has a legal right to do if it offends his white neighbor, for the division, as the general points out, is nine-tenths white and only one-tenth black, and, constitution or no constitution, the weakest goes to the wall. An ugly, hateful condition, to be sure, but there it is.

WHY NOT GIVE US AN ANSWER?

The Afro American May 10, 1918

The storm of protests aroused by General Ballou's famous Order No. 35 has as yet failed to elicit a word from the War Department. Protests from every part of the country have been sent to Secreary of War Baker as well as to Emmett Scott, his assistant, but as yet there has been no public word to indicate just where the War Department stands in reference to this unusual order.

Does silence give consent in this instance? Does the War Department sanction an order that the colored citizen upon entering the army loses the protection of the law in his citizenship rights? Does the War Department mean to leave the world to assume that hundreds of thousands of Amercans, loyal and true, are engaging in a war for the prevalence of a democracy in which they can have no part? We believe not. We believe, however, that the black people of America should be given an assurance from an authorative source that Order No. 35, however well-intentioned, was, to say the least, indiscreet.

We are giving our fathers, sons and brothers in this war and we shall continue to give them—cheerfully and willingly until the last one has gone if needs be—until it has been clearly demonstrated to Germany and her allies that might does not mean right. We, like other peoples, who are also giving their fathers, sons and brothers, need encouragement, that our faith in the ultimate outcome might not waver.

America's fight today is against a foreign enemy, who is using every conceivable means to destroy our freedom, and not against any part of its own citizenry. When the black soldiers go "over there" to help crush that enemy, let them go with that peace of mind and cheerfulness of spirit that are necessary to bring out the best in them. A feeling that they are being prescribed against will not bring about that peace and cheerfulness—neither will Order No. 35.

Let us continue to petition the War Department to put an official construction upon Order No. 35.

WAR DEPT. PATRONIZES COLORED AMERICANS

Guardian 7-20-18 80

THROUGH DEPT. OF MR. CREEL AND MAJOR SPINGARN DIRECTS SPEAKERS TO HAVE COLORED PASTORS ESPECIALLY URGE COLORED SOUTH TO OBEY LAWS AND BE ORDERLY WHERE WHITE SOUTH ARE DEFYING LAWS AND LYNCHING COLORED — GIVES COLORED ADVICE BECAUSE WEAK WHICH DARE NOT GIVE WHITES WHO ALONE NEED IT.

It has recently come to the attention of the Guardian that Mr. Creel's Public Information Committee in its Bulletin No. 33 for use up to July 20th by the four minute men has paid particular and unflattering attention to the colored race. On the second page, under the heading "Talking to the Negroes," it invites the attention of the speakers to page 10. On that page it prints two paragraphs upon Liberia and seems to think that the vital reason for the colored man supporting the American Republic is because Liberia has also declared war upon Germany. This of course is ridiculous, but another paragraph is far worse and the Guardian gives it in full:

"Colored preachers can help. Colored men have shown their fine, loyal Americanism. Keep it up. The clergymen in colored churches should preach patriotism every Sunday; should remind the people every Sunday that in this war time every American, white or colored, must be especially loyal, especially obedient to the laws, and especially orderly."

This article was called to our attention so lately that it is impossible for us to offer an editorial symposium of the friends of the Negro Race concerning it but a representative of the Guardian was able to interview Sherwin L. Cook one of the most active and earnest of our white friends whose stand on "The Birth of a Nation" and Bosfield case as well as his constant support of the war fits him especially to discuss the matter.

"I am surprised to see this paragraph" said Mr. Cook. "It seems to me ill timed, ill advised and worse than unwise to have printed it. I realize as well as any man the necessity of avoiding harsh judgments at this critical time but to criticize the well meaning but constantly blundering Mr. Creel is not criticizing the government itself. I assume that a great deal of German Propaganda has been directed to the American Negro This is not anywhere nearly so great a reflection on him as upon the American white man because it is naturally to be expected that where a class has been ill used and—in a great section of the country—lawlessly dealt with, that the enemies of the nation should expect that class to be amenable to their suggestions. It is to the everlasting honor of the American Negro that he has understood his citizenship so well and that the German [illegible] to alienate him should be so futile. This propaganda cannot be met in the way Mr. Creel urges. It is a very poor return for the Negro's loyalty to pick him out to be preached to every Sunday to the end that they be "obedient to the laws an despecially orderly." If Mr. Creel and his Public Information Committee will ask not merely every clergyman but every Anglo-Saxon of any influence whatsoever in Georgia and her sister states to reiterate the doctrine of obedience to laws and orderliness to their own race they would be showing a grasp of the situation which they seem at present to lack."

Debts Against Book Concern and Denominational Colleges Cancelled by Secretary B. F. Watson.

April 26, 1918

Washington, April 25.—Reports covering the work of the Department of Church Extension of the A. M. E. Church for the fiscal year ended March 31 by Rev. Dr. BenJamin F. Watson, secretary-treasurer of the department, at the 26th annual meeting of the board held here Wednesday, show that the assets total $418,686.12. There is a cash balance in bank of $27,178.98. Loans amounting to $17,600 were authorized by the board at its meeting.

In calling the meeting to order, Bishop W. H. Heard, who presided, asserted that the present world war is not giving the race a great opportunity, but the church, as well.

The following members of the board were present: Revs. C. P. Cole, A. J. Wilson, Charles Bundy, W. H. Jones, William H. Peck, Lee A. Logan, J. T. Hall, F. R. C. Durden, L. V. Carter, George V. Young, James M. Wise and George Jones.

The report of Dr. Watson was a general review of the working of his department. At his suggestion, outstanding debts against the A. M. E. Book Concern, Allen University, Columbia, S. C., and Paul Quinn College, Waco, Tex., were cancelled.

Among those who made addresses during the day were Prof. John R. Hawkins, who told of the bond of cooperation between the financial and church extension departments; Revs. P. G. Hill, C. H. Stepteau and P. W. Wortham, of Baltimore.

The auditing committee highly commended Dr. Watson for the way in which he conducted the affairs of the office. In acknowledging the compliment, Secretary Watson said that when he assumed the office of secretary in 1900 he resolved to make a record, laying aside ambition for higher office. Denying that he had announced that he intends resigning, he said he would not make a scramble for the position, leaving it to the general church whether or not his continuance is desired. Rev. Dr. William H. Peck, secretary to the board, was instructed to write a letter of sympathy to Rev. James Jones, a member, who is ill in Arkansas. The members also sent a substantial remembrance to their sick colleague.

The board voted to file a protest with the War Department against the order recently issued by Major General Ballou, commanding the 92nd division of the national army, in which colored officers and soldiers were urged to stay away from public places where some may object to their presence, even though they had the legal right to be there.

SOLDIERS IN THE BLACK DIVISION ADVISED TO ACCEPT COLOR INSULTS

The Richmond Planet April 20, 1918.

OFFICERS AND MEN OF NINETY-SECOND DIVISION ARE ADMONISHED IN OFFICIAL ORDERS.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, through its Secretary, John R. Shillady, makes public the following letter addressed to the War Department concerning an order issued on March 28, 1918, by command of Major General Ballou, Division Commander of the Ninety-second Division Camp Funston, Kansas, in which colored officers and men are advised that "no useful purpose will be served by any action upon their part that will cause the color question to be raised," and admonishing them to "refrain from going where their presence will be resented."

The Association directs the War Department's attention to the fact that Major General Ballou's order concerns illegal actions taken against colored officers and not illegal or unworthy acts performed by colored soldiers themselves.

Copies of the Division order and the Association's letter follows:

Headquarters Ninety-Second Division
Camp Funston, Kansas,
March 28, 1918.

Bulletin No. 35.

1. It should be well known to all colored officers and men that no useful purpose is served by such acts as will cause the "color question" to be raised. It is not a question of legal rights, but a question of policy, and any policy that tends to bring about a conflict of races, with its resultant animosities, is prejudicial to the military interest of the Ninety-second Division and therefore prejudicial to an important interest of the colored race.

2. To avoid such conflicts the Division Commander has repeatedly urged that all colored members of his command, and especially the officers and noncommissioned officers, should refrain from going where their presence will be resented. In spite of this injunction, one of the Sergeants of the Medical Department has recently precipitated the precise trouble that should be avoided, and then called on the Division Commander to take sides in a row that should never have occurred, and would not have occurred had the Sergeant placed the general good above his personal pleasure and convenience.

This Sergeant entered a theatre, as he undoubtedly had a legal right to do, and precipitated trouble by making it possible to allege race discrimination in the seat he was given. He is strictly within his legal rights in this matter, and the theatre manager is legally wrong. Nevertheless, the Sergeant is guilty of the greater wrong in doing ANYTHING, no matter how LEGALLY correct, that will provoke race animosity.

3. The Division Commander repeats that the success of the Division, with all that that success implies, is dependent upon the good will of the public. That public is nine-tenths white. White men made the Division, and they can break it just as easily if it becomes a trouble maker.

4. All concerned are again enjoined to place the general interest of the Division above personal pride and gratification. Avoid every situation that can give rise to racial ill-will. Attend quietly and faithfully to your duties, and don't go where your presence is not desired.

5. This will be read to all organizations of the Ninety-second Division By command of Maj.-Gen. Ballou:

ALLEN J. GREER,
Lieutenant Colonel, General Staff,
Chief of Staff.

Official:
EDWARD J. TURGEON,
Captain, Assistant Adjutant,
Acting Adjutant.

GEN. BALLOU'S REPLY DODGES ISSUE—REFERS TO ACT BEFORE HE ISSUED CIRCULAR 35.

For some reasons unknown to us the Emmett J. Scott press service even though he is obliged to represent the ENTIRE Colored race as a special assistant to the Secretary of War for Negroes, is not sent to The Guardian. Hence we did not see the letter which the author of the objectionable and improper army order sent to Hon. Mr. Scott till it appeared in most of the other Colored newspapers. For the same reason we cannot reproduce the text of it at this late day when space is demanded by the latest events. However, the Omaha Monitor has told much of the truth of the matter in an editorial parts of which we quote and for the most part commend.

The Monitor says of the reply:

"Major-Gen. Ballou, commanding the Ninety-second Division, has at the request of Emmett J. Scott, special assistant to the secretary of war, written him a letter explaining the issuing of Bulletin 35, which provoked such a tremendous wave of protest from all sections of the country. The letter is published elsewhere in this issue. It recites the fact, published in The Monitor several weks ago, that General Ballou had instituted legal proceedings against the offending theatre manager before he had issued Bulletin 35, intended only as salutary advice to the men of his command.

"We pointed out at that time that there were certain expressions in the order that were unwise, unfortunate and indefnsible. While we did not indulge in the strongly denunciatory language of some of our more radical contemporaries our position as to the duty of insisting upon our legal rights was unmistakable.

In his letter to Mr. Scott General Ballou implies that pro-German influences are actively at work in this country striving to aggravate the grievances of the Colored Americans on the one hand and inflame white Americans on the other. It is implied that these sinister influences were at work at East St. Louis and Houston. We doubt this very much. Southern prejudice against the Colored American has been intense and as he has advanced in intelligence, bitter for years, and increasingly so material prosperity and self-respect. It has manifested itself on every hand by indefensible and most reprehensible acts of injustice, which have been enacted into laws. This hatred for the black race has required no fanning into flame by German propagandists. It is a peculiarly simon-pure American product of which the United States wil be most heartily ashamed some day, when she shall have grown out of her narrow and crude provincialism. Let us not lay our sins of race prejudice on the Germans. Thehy have enough to answer for, God knows, and so has America."

But let the Colored American representatives meet in the National capital June 21-27, and on the ground get our understanding on all this Colored race discrimination. We hope every representative leader will be there, and from Omaha we hope among others will come Mr. Wilkins, editor of The Monitor.

DANGER IN A REST HOUSE UNDER COLORED AUSPICES.

Guardian 4-20-18

Disgust and indignation are rife in Massachusetts over the act of Mrs. Butler R. Wilson, National lecturer for the N. A. A. C. P., and Dr. John B. Hall in establishing on a city playground in the Colored district a soldier Rest House as a measure of work for Colored soldiers benefit, their newspaper notoriety for which operates against the idea of Colored soldiers using the Rest House other soldiers use.

Short signtedness is dangerous as Jim-Crow isnot such a distant danger as some Colored people think who are willing to put the notion into Colored soldier's heads of seeking out a Rest House run by Colored people rather than asserting equality by patronizing the regular Rest Houses along with all other soldiers and into the heads of managers of these established Rest Houses of telling the Colored soldiers that there is a House especially for their benefit established by Colored citizens up in the Colored Section.

For Detroit is far North, yet the following letter on Jim-crow was published last month in a Detroit daily newspaper:—

"The writer is a northerner and has every sympathy with the Colord race. It is because I belive I underx-o -m dangert '..,ahok hER eshhr stand the Negro and his situation in the northern city that I desire to call attention to he need of providing him with sparate schools and separate transportation facilities in Detroit.

"The large influx of Negroes from the south has brought in hundreds—perhaps I should have said thousands of Negroes who have not been used to associating on an equal footing with white men, and it is well that we do not allow them to get the idea that they can mix with the white men.. and white women. For as soon.. as they do get the idea, they will try their best to break down the race barriers which now keep our race and their race pure instead of both being merged into a mulatto inferior if not degenerate people.

"It is to be hoped that some member of the legislature will have the courage to propose a law providing SEPARATE SEATING FACILITIES IN OUR CARS AND SEPARATE SCHOOLS, FOR NEGROES.

J. B. DEERING.

Colored Americans especially of the advanced type of Mrs. Wilson and Dr. Hall should not be short-sighted, should keep danger afar off as erstwhile proponents of non-segregation and as persons who have come from points farther South into Boston where the parents of some of us made civil rights safe in law and by the practise of using public facilities to educate the whites up to equality.

From the shortsightedness of our friends, "Good Lord deliver us," whose mass meeting circular for this Rest House carried in flaming headlines, "1000 men for special service to back our "Colored Soldiers."

Defender Gets Real Story of Camp Funston Color Line Trouble

The Chicago Defender
May 11, 1918.

Camp Funston, Kan., May 10.—It took several days before a reporter of the World's Greatest Weekly could really obtain an accurate account of the Color line trouble which resulted in General Ballou issuing the objectionable order No. 35, an editorial on which appeared in last week's issue of the Chicago Defender.

Refused Seats Although He Wore the Uniform of a U. S. Soldier

All members of the 92nd division seemed scared to talk on the subject, but the reporter found out that Sergeant Mathews and his wife had one evening gone to Manhattan, Kan., for the evening. Seats were purchased in the balcony of one of the theaters. As all seats in the balcony are sold without any reservations the purchaser is allowed to pick any seat vacant. Seeing two near the front, Sergt. Mathews and his wife sat down to enjoy the show.

An Irish usher immediately went to the sergeant and informed him that he was in the wrong seats, at the same time asking for the stubs of the tickets. He told the sergeant that the tickets did not call for those seats, but admitted later they did not call for any seats in particular, as seats in the balcony meant any seats vacant.

The Irishman insisted that Mathews leave the seats or leave the theater. He refused. The manager was called. Mathews stuck to his rights and then the manager, refusing to be outdone, rushed out and got a military police guard. Mathews was told to leave the theater. Under military orders he got up to go and so did his wife. It was then that the wife was told she did not have to go. She went to the street with her husband, who asked the guard to permit him to send her home. This request was allowed.

Guard Puzzled

Mathews then turned to the guard and asked him what charges were preferred against him. He was told none. The guard was told that some must be preferred as the guard must take him to the guardhouse, because he had been arrested. The guard became scared then and went to one of his fellow members of the military police, also white. This fellow, having a little more sense, told the guard having arrested Mathews that he was simply in a mess of trouble and better let it drop. This was done. Mathews went to the camp and reported same to his commanding officers. It was later sent to the judge advocate's office and there the fight began.

A representative of the judge advocate's office went to see the prosecuting attorney of the county, but there was met with rebuff until he made his identity known. The case was to have been called some time ago against both owner and manager of the theater, but twice it has been postponed. In the meantime Capt. Walker, a member of the Race, has been sent to see the mayor of Manhattan and the two went to this same showhouse and sat in A BOX SEAT TOGETHER to show that there was no Color line. The art of camouflage is getting to be great in this country. Of course the theater owners would naturally do that after General Ballou's order came out and the judge advocate's office was forcing the county authorities to prosecute the case against their will. It will come to trial despite the postponing of the case by the city folks.

In the meantime Lieut. T. T. Thompson has written several editors asking them to print his story, saying Gen. Ballou has been misunderstood. It is too bad the army has such able men like these whose thinking faculty is so weak they cannot ever see the sun shine through the cypress trees.

The constitution of the United States has been violated; the uniform of the government and the army has been insulted and the theater owners and managers must pay the penalty.

BALLOU'S DRASTIC ORDER CAUSES ADVERSE COMMENT

The Afro-American.
April 19, 1918

Protest of Officers at Camp Grant Presented to War Department by Rev. A. J. Carey.

Washington, April 18.—Much adverse comment has been expressed here about the recent order of Maj. Gen. Ballou, commanding the Ninety-second division, urging colored army officers to stay from white places of public resort where prejudiced managers and owners objected.

A sergeant complained that the management of a white theatre near Camp Funston, Kan., had objected to his presence on account of race.

In issuing his order advising colored officers to stay away from such places, even though they have the legal right to enter, General Ballou says that the success of the division "is dependent upon the goodwill of the public. That public is nine-tenths white. White men made the Division and they can break it just as easily if it becomes a trouble-maker."

The wording of the order is regarded as a direct slap at the colored people of this country, and especially at the colored officers. This is all the more apparent when it is recalled that legislation has been enacted to prevent discrimination against the men in uniform. And then it is recalled that the same General Ballou only a colonel when he had charge of the Officers' Training Camp at Des Moines, and that he was made a general when the men who won the commissions voted unanimously that he be placed in command of colored troops.

RIVALRY THE CAUSE?

The issuance of the order is said to be the result of a number of white officers being desirous of leading colored troops in France. It is believed that colored soldiers will be an important factor in helping to win the war and that their commanding officer will be regarded as a heroic leader of a valiant band of troopers. The order that General Ballou is issued is regarded as one tickling the Southern whites, in that the colored trooners will have a commander who knows how to keep them in "their places."

The order is resented among the colored officers and men at the various cantonments, it is said, and has somewhat dispirited them. Out at Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill., a protest was drafted. The protest recites that wherever the colored officers have been—Des Moines, Chillicothe and Camp Grant—for example—there has been first hostility among whites against their presence and then praise followed after it had been found out what fine men the troopers are.

The protest contains clippings from the Chicago Herald and the Rockford Gazette, in which the officers and men are lauded for their deportment, and asserted that if this country is good enough for colored men to die for that it is good enough for them to enjoy its amusements and pleasures.

The order was discussed informally at the meeting of the A. M. E. Financial Board Wednesday, and the opinion expressed that it was an unfortunate one.

Rev. A. J. Carey, of Chicago, presented the protest of the Camp Grant officers to the War Department Thursday. Emmett J. Scott, special assistant to the Secretary of War, has received a number of protests against the order.

Lieut. W. J. Howard, Jr., who is connected with the medical corps at Camp Meade, recently brought a complaint against some alleged unfair treatment. The matter has been referred to the inspector general of the army for investigation.

OPPOSED TO DISCRIMINATION

Writer Says General Ballou Has Never Countenanced "Jim Crowism"—Ordered Judge Advocate to Proceed Against Owner of Theatre.

Lieut. T. T. Thompson, assistant personnel officer of the 92nd Division, has written a letter to THE AGE asserting that the motives that prompted General Ballou to issue Bulletin No. 35 have been misunderstood, and that the order was not issued in recognition of any segregation laws nor as a measure of approval of such discriminations.

Following is Lieutenant Thompson's communication to THE AGE:

The discussion of Bulletin 35, Headquarters 92nd Division National Army, in a recent issue of your paper, does so much injustice to General Ballou that I am taking the liberty to present herewith some facts and observations which I hope you will publish—not in extenuation of bulletin 35 or in defense of its author or in apology for the promulgation of the order, this is unnecessary—but rather because it is clear that you have failed to understand the situation as it exists and the motives that prompted the issuance of the bulletin.

Presuming that you are willing to look at both sides of the question and that you would not willfully place General Ballou in a false light before your readers, permit me to itemize a few incontrovertible facts and at the same time to assure you that like yourself, I stand for the fullest liberty of every man, woman and child, and especially for the rights of American citizens now denied to our race to which we are entitled by every consideration of right and justice.

1. Bulletin 35 was not issued in recognition of any segregation laws or practices of local communities, nor was it issued as a measure of approval of such discriminations. No such motive was in the mind of the author of that bulletin when it was issued. Proof: on the same day that the bulletin was issued, the Commanding General ordered the Judge Advocate of the 92nd Division to proceed to the town where the incident occurred and institute proceed-

AFTERMATH OF BALLOU GEN. ORDER NUMBER 35.

The Daily Herald May 9 1918.

From every community in every section of the country having a Negro population there have been an outpouring of protests and denunciation against General Order number 35. Seldom has the race been so stirred and incensed over a declaration of policy towards Negroes promulgated by one in high official station. It would be difficult to find a half dozen Negroes in any community who would express themselves as in accord with the views of the author of that infamous order.

The most unfortunate and serious result following its publication is the bitterness aroused in the hearts of the soldiers who are ordered to submerge their manhood and voluntarily degrade and humiliate themselves. Inevery camp there is righteous indignation and seething anger and in some camps open and manifest resentment. Reports say that at Camp Upton the order was three times torn down when posted, with the result that a company of three hundred soldiers have been disciplined because the names of the culprits who tore down the order was not revealed by their comrades. From other Camps it is said that there have been similar evidences of anger and resentment.

3. The Division Commander reports that the success of the division, with all that that success implies, is dependent upon the good will of the public. That public is nine-tenths white. White men made the division, and they can break it just as easily if it becomes a trouble maker.

4. All concerned are again enjoined to place the general interest of the division above personal pride and gratification. Avoid every situation that can give rise to racial ill-will. Attend quietly and faithfully to your duties, and don't go where your presence is not desired.

5. This will be read to all organizations of the Ninety-second Division.

By Command of Maj. Gen. Ballou.
Allen J. Greer,
Lieutenant Colonel, General Staff,
Chief of Staff.

Official:
Edw. J. Turgeon,
Captain, Assistant Adjutant,
Acting Adjutant.

The National [illegible] Advancement of Colored People, through its secretary, has addressed a letter to the War Department, directing the attention of the department to the order as most unjust, humiliating and inexpedient.

Negro soldiers at Camp Funston have been officially advised not to do anything that tends to stir up race feeling upon part of the white soldiers. This means, of course, that the Negro soldiers must not let the white soldiers see their [illegible] on their heads and acting like more human beings.

In this critical period of "world democracy" it would be a good time to advise poor white people, soldiers and civilians, that they should show a decent amount of respect for the black soldiers in uniform, the best American fihters, the men who will deal the final blow to kaiserism and preserve the dignity of the American flag.

GEN. BALLOU'S IMPUDENCE.

Bulletin 35 issued by the Major General Ballou, at Camp Funston, in which he tells Colored soldiers not to insist on theeir legal rights, nor go where their presence is not desired, is the rankest bit of impudence we have ever read.

Louisville

If the General issued that order as a type of white man who thinks the Black Man ought to keep in his place, and then defines that place as the lowest in the social scale, then his order is pure impudence, and he is utterly out of place in a commanding position fighting for democracy.

Louisville Courier Journal April 20, 1918

If it was a so-called friendship which urges expediency and the policy of surrender, then we hope his valor is greater than his wisdom. Either way the order was much out of place, and the N. A. A. C. P. did a good thing when it reported the case to the War Department. Colored people will await anxiously the result of the protest. It is to be hoped the War Department will live up to the declarations of making the world safe for democracy

COLOR AND CUSTOM.

A peculiar phase of the defence set up by an army captain on trial by court martial for disobedience to the order of a superior officer, is the plea that the order was against the customs of the service. The order called for the captain to lead out his company for brigade review, and the captain believing it would lead to intermingling of the races, refused to obey the order.

On the other hand it is reported that the color line has been drawn in the army training camp at Porto Rico, contrary to the custom hitherto prevailing on the island, and despite the decision of the authorities that it would not be wise to attempt any division of the races in said camp.

In the first case which occurred at Camp Pike, Arkansas, custom is relied upon to bolster up discrimination on account of color and to save an insubordinate captain from the penalty he has incurred by putting his prejudice ahead of his duty as a soldier. In the other case a colonel disregards the custom of the service in the effort to introduce the color line in a territory where it was unknown.

It remains to be seen how the ingenious plea of custom is regarded by the court martial as an excuse for disobedience in Arkansas, and also how the violation of custom in Porto Rico is regarded by the War Department, especially as these diametrically opposed actions were resorted to in the cause of color discrimination.

In the emergency of war, there should be no time lost in drawing lines of color or caste. The only lines drawn should be the lines of attack upon the enemy.

from going where their presence will be resented. In spite of this injunction, one of the Sergeants of the Medical Department has recently precipitated the precise trouble that should have been avoided, and then called on the Division Commander to take sides in a row that should never have occurred, and would not have occurred had the Sergeant placed the general good above his personal pleasure and convenience. This Sergeant entered a theater, as he undoubtedly had a legal right to do, and precipitated trouble by making it possible to allege race discrimination in the seat he was given. He is strictly within his legal rights in this matter, and the theater manager is legally wrong. Nevertheless, the Sergeant is guilty of the greater wrong in doing anything, no matter how legally cor-

Colored Troops Sent to clean up Southern White Camp!

Camp Shelby, Miss., April 8.—Upon the arrival of a detail of fifty Negro soldiers at Hattiesburg this morning en route for Camp Shelby, considerable excitement was caused among the citizens, especially the working classes, who at once believed the rumor that was spread, that the detachment was the forerunner of a regiment of Negro troops which will follow. The detachment will be all of the Negro troops that will come to this camp at present at least. They will be used in the sanitary department, having been assigned for work under the orders of Capt. Jennings. Much work is under way cleaning up and putting the camp in an excellent sanitary condition prior to the advent of warm weather and the Negroes will be used in this way.

Continued reports and rumors that Colored troops are being made scullions and menials for White troops are dampening the ardor and patriotism of Colored people. What is Emmett J. Scott, assistant to the Secretary of War, doing to correct these evils?

STILL DISCRIMINATE AT CAMP MEADE

Cleveland Advocate 8-17-18

CAMP MEAD, Md., July 10.—in spite of the fact that there is a large body of Colored soldiers here, the disposition of the higher ups is not to recognize Colored men as non-commissioned officers, or to provide the camp with commissioned Colored officers. This policy, contrary to the secretary of war's declaration that Colored soldiers must have a square deal, is discouraging to the men in the ranks. It is hoped that, for the morale of the men, better recognition will soon be forthcoming.

Makes Stirring Speech to Colored Troops—Is Heartily Cheered.

Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill., May 1.—Four thousand Colored soldiers in Brig. Gen. Malvern Hill Barnum's fighting brigade cheered Emmett J. Scott to the echo tolay when he told them that in this war they are fighting to maintain the principles of liberty given to the black men by Abraham Lincoln.

"This is your war," cried the special secretary who represents Colored soldiers in the War Department. "All that you have and are depends on victory over Germany, for if the Hun wins on the western front he will tear the freedom from your homes as certainly as he tore it from Belgium. America is looking to you just as she is to her white defenders, and I know that her trust will be justified. I have seen you in action today, and I am proud of my race. Go over and make a name for the colored men of your country that will ring through all of the years to come.

No Time for Argument.

"This is no time to discuss race problems. Our duty now is to fight and to continue to fight until this war is won. Then we will adjust the problems that remain in the life of the Colored man."

Mr. Scott, who is known as one of the leading educators of the country, explained that his position in Washingtin was created in order that every Negro in the nation's service shall have a special representative to look after his interests. He declared that Gen. Barnum has produced the crack Colored unit of the country in the 183rd brigade in Camp Grant. The brigade passed in review before the commander and the visitor.

NEGROES RESENT CAMP ORDER

The Kansas City Sun.

Wilson Asked to Countermand Funston "Color Line" Bulletin.

Boston, April 21.—A telegram of protest against an order said to have been issued at Camp Funston requesting Negro soldiers and officers not to go where their presence is not desired was addressed to President Wilson today by the National Equal Rights League here. The telegram read:

"The National Equal Rights League calls upon you to countermand General Ballou's bulletin, No. 35, for the Ninety-second division, Camp Funston, enjoining officers and soldiers to refrain from going into public places where their presence is resented because of color.

"His dictum that asking public service is putting pleasure above the general good is not applied to white soldiers, destroys all civil rights, causes fresh discriminations, fosters race prejudice, humiliates our race and degrades the army uniform."

The above news item appearing in the Kansas City Journal this week concisely reviews an event in army circles which has stirred the race throughout the entire country.

General Ballou doubtless meant that his recommendation to colored soldiers would produce just the opposite effect from that which followed. His so-called "distum" was advisory rather than imperative. He appreciated an existing condition and evidently preferred to molify it rather than aggravate it. His course was wrong even though his intentions were right. Being of the "big man" type the General did not fully understand the galling rasp of the race prejudice either from the colored man's experience or its despicable unreasonableness from the "little" white man's feelings.

As a result such an order emanating fro mthe General's office would only have the effect of increasing the trouble which the General sought to Ameliorate. The "Little White Men" would be all the more upon the alert for presumptious acts of colored men and would construe every motion as tending toward "social equality." That's really where the trouble all starts. If colored men remain away from every place where their presence is resentd on account of their color they will have no place upon the Earth at all. The "Little White Men" resent every time they see a Colored man anywhere, espcially if he looks intiligent and holds his head up. That's what makes them so "little." It is to these "Little White Men" both in the army and out that fatherly advice ought to be given. They are the ones who need official spanking. They have needed it for a long time and have grown almost to the point of thinking they are too big to be even called down.

Preparation for war against a national foe is not a social matter and is no place for the agitation of race distinction. In the trenches of France the blood of the white and the black will be mingled in equally heroic sacrifice. The training camps are not pink tea quarters by any means. The white soldiers should be so instructed by their superiors. This much talked of race superiority is becoming very tiresome to all colored people and a great many white people. Suppose we forget it for a while, at least until we destroy the evils of Prussianism. The colored men will be needed for this and they may be needed very much, too. If Negro men are good enough to die for their country they are good enough to be treated like human beings while making the sacrifice.

Chairman at Concord Baptist Church Meeting Reluctantly Consents to Singing "America."

More than 400 men and women were present last night at a meeting in the Concord Baptist (colored) Church of Christ, Adelphi street, near Myrtle avenue, at which resolutions were adopted protesting against the recent order of Major General George Ballou of Camp Funston to the Ninety-second Division, advising negro soldiers to refrain from visiting places and amusements frequented by whites. The resolutions will be sent to Secretary of War Baker.

The Rev. George Frazier Miller, rector of St. Augustine's P. E. Church, presided and outlined the purpose of the meeting. He declared that negro soldiers were being denied the privileges of exercising their legal rights. This, he said, in the last analysis makes the German soldier superior to the negro.

"God made me a man," he said. "I feel like a man, and only a man's treatment of me will be satisfactory. The negro is called upon to shed his blood upon the field of battle so that the white man may be free, and still he is denied the right of the fundamental principles upon which this Government is founded.

"The black man has won many a victory. The negroes saved Roosevelt and his Rough Riders at San Juan Hill. They fought at Carizal. Now they are asked to fight to make the world safe for democracy and still they are denied the privilege of enjoying this democracy right here at home."

George Wibecan, president of the Frederick Douglas Forum, and of the Citizens Club, declared that if it had not been for this prejudice the negro would long ago have enlisted in the National Guard and that there would be more than 83,000 negro men and 1,000 officers fighting for the cause of this Government.

The Rev. Frederick R. Cullen, pastor of the Salem Zion A. M. E. Church of Manhattan, took exception to statements of the Rev. Mr. Miller regarding a meeting that had been held in that church, in which he accused the men there of cringing in their protest. He declared that all differences should be forgotten in the crisis.

So many requests were made upon Mr. Miller for the singing of "America" that he finally consented, but stated that he did not feel disposed to do so, as the only bar of the hymn that he sings is "The land where my fathers died."

Brief addresses on the necessity of organizing were delivered by John A. Shillday, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored Race; Walter White of the same association, and R. M. Meroney, secretary of the Carlton Avenue Branch Y. M. C. A. The resolutions were signed by all present.

The following were in charge of the meeting: The Rev. George Frazier Miller, Mrs. Charles H. Lansing, Miss M. W. Ovington, Dr. W. H. Buckley, Emory Jones, Dr. Franklin Myers and F. W. Morton.

SEGREGATION TOILETS AT MASS. ARMY CAMPS

Prof. Allen W. So the delegation, Mr. E. T. Morris, Chairman, Rev. J. W. Hill, Prof. Whaley, and W. M. Trotter laid hte matter before the Governor and especially on the Jim-Crow toilets and he assured his interest in all possible redress.

NEGROES PROTEST BALLOU BULLETIN

Army General's Action Bitterly Denounced at Meeting in Concord Church.

BKLYN N Y STANDARD UNION
APRIL 23. 1918

Major-Gen. George Ballou, commanding the Ninety-second Army Division at Camp Funston, Kansas, and his bulletin No. 35, suggesting that negro soldiers forego their constitutional privilege of mingling with white comrades, in the interest of army discipline, at social or public assemblages where the latter predominate, were bitterly denounced last night at a meeting of several hundred colored men and women in Corcord Baptist Church, Duffield street, near Myrtle avenue. There were a number of white persons in the audience.

The Rev. G. F. Miller, pastor of St. Augustine's Church, St. Edwards street, who presided, declared the colored man had freed himself once and will have to free himself again." Walter F. White, assistant secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored Persons, said that if there was any one group of people in the country who needed organization it was the colored race. George E. Wibecan declared Gen. Ballou had spent most of his life in the South, and that little else could be expected of him. He characterized the posting of the bulletin in every cantonment as "unmanly, unsoldierly and vicious."

Addresses were also made by Miss Mary White Ovington, John R. Shillady, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and the Rev. M. Cullen, president of the New York Branch National Association. All the speakers referred to the promulgation of the bulletin as an act of injustice to the colored race.

The statement published in THE AGE last week, made by Lieut. T. T. Thompson, assistant personnel officer of the 92d Division, as to the motives that actuated General Ballou in the issuance of Bulletin No. 35, was gratifying to the extent that it contained a disavowal of recognition or approval of segregation or color discrimination. Nevertheless it did not alter the fact that the order was open to just such an interpretation and was so regarded by all who read it. THE AGE still regards the bulletin as a most insidious and dangerous blow to the morale of the officers and men affected by it.

POISON GAS

The foe on the battle front in France invariably precedes his attacks by bombing the Allied defenders with poison gas. The Americans in the front line have already had their bitter experience with this sort of warfare, intended to destroy their morale before the enemy attempted to rush them. Luckily, means of defense have been provided them in the form of gas masks, against this sort of attack.

But what defense is afforded the men of the 92nd Division of the National Army against the bomb launched at them by the division commander in the shape of Bulletin No. 35, printed in THE AGE last week? The poison gas disseminated in the truckling attitude enjoined in this bulletin is just as deadly an attack upon the morale of the division as that of the German bombs. The ready acquiescence demanded in all forms of discrimination and proscription is just as poisonous to the spirit of true manhood as the German gas.

It is up to the War Department to protect the soldiers against all such attacks, both at home and abroad.

SPRINGFIELD MASS NEWS
APRIL 9, 1918

AS TO HECKLING OF NEGROES

It is to be hoped for the sake of the southern soldiers stationed at the United States armory camps in this city that the stories of their alleged mistreatment of colored people are exaggerated. We should dislike to believe that southern soldiers would carry their prejudice against the Negro so far as the reports of recent occurrences in the Hill district would indicate. It is not a nice story to contemplate at this particular time, and it is not the way we have come to treat the Negro in the North, and especially in Springfield.

Any such feeling as seems to have broken out on the Hill, if the story of recent occurrences is to be believed, should be promptly nipped in the bud. The soldiers are stationed not far from a district that contains a large number of lawabiding Negroes, who are entitled to fair treatment, whether from their permanent neighbors or from our southern visitors. The Negro has come to expect this fair treatment in Springfield, although we do not pretend to say that all barriers are broken down, or all color prejudices washed away. It is to be hoped that a hint to the southern soldiers in our midst will be sufficient to prevent anything in the way of unpleasant hostility on either side. This is not the time for any feeling of that sort.

Major General Ballou Issues Insulting Order To Men of His Division

The Advocate April 13, 1918.

FUNSTON, Kan., April 6.—Perhaps the most repulsive order ever issued to men who have enlisted to fight for world democracy was issued to the Colored soldiers of the 92d Division here by the command of Major-General Ballou. In the order, which is designated as "Bulletin 35," is the offensive threat that "white men made the division, and they can break it just as easily." Following is the offensive order to American soldiers of dark skins given under date of March 28, at Camp Funston:

"1. It should be well known to all Colored officers and men that no useful purpose is served by such acts as will cause the "color question" to be raised. It is not a question of legal rights, but a question of policy, and any policy that tends to bring about a conflict of races, with its resulting animosities, is prejudicial to the military interest of the 92d Division, and therefore prejudicial to an important interest of the Colored race.

"2. To avoid such conflicts the Division Commander has repeatedly urged that all Colored members of his command, and especially the officers and noncommissioned officers, should refrain from going where their presence will be resented. In spite of this injunction, one of the sergeants of the Medical Department has recently precipitated the precise trouble that should be avoided, and then called on the Division Commander to take sides in a row that should never have occurred had the sergeant placed the general good above his personal pleasure and convenience. This sergeant entered a theatre, as he doubtedly had a legal right to do, and precipitated trouble by making it possible to allege race discrimination in the seat he was given. He is strictly within his legal rights in this matter, and the theatre manager is legally wrong. Nevertheless the sergeant is guilty of the GREATER wrong in doing ANYTHING, NO MATTER HOW LEGALLY CORRECT, that will provoke race animosity.

"3. The Division Commander repeats that the success of the Division with all that success implies, is dependent upon the good will of the public. That public is nine-tenth white. White men made the Division, and they can break it just as easily if it becomes a trouble maker.

"4. All concerned are again enjoined to place the general interest of the Division above personal pride and gratifyfication. Avoid every situation that can give rise to racial ill-will. Attend quietly and faithfully to your duties, and don't go where your presence is not desired.

"5. This will be read to all organizations of the 92d Division.

"By command of Major-General Ballou;

"Allen J. Greer,
"Lieutenant-Colonel, General Staff,
"Chief of Staff.

"OFFICIAL:
"Edward J. Turgeon,
"Captain, Assistant Adjutant,
"Acting Adjutant."

By the above order profiteers who are making money out of amusements may continue to discriminate against patriotis who have enlisted to fight "to make the world safe for democracy, and because an American soldier attempts to enjoy Constitutional rights he, according to General Ballou's order, is "guilty of the greater wrong," greater than the profiteer who insults the men who must defend the flag and the Constitution. As an insult to the race—to patriotic Colored soldiers, the order is perhaps without an equal among American military orders. General Ballou tells Colored soldiers they "should refrain from going where their presence will be resented." Their presence will be resented by Germans "over there," but the Colored boys are going there, when ordered, and to die there "where their presence will be resented" for world democracy.

LIGHT ON GEN. BALLOU

The Guardian May 11, 1918.

AN ILLUMINATING LETTER ON THE POLCIES OF COMMANDERS OF COLORED SOLDIERS IN ARMY CANTONMENTS PREPARING FOR WAR OF WORLD DEMOCRACY.

New York City,
April 28, 1918.

To the Editor, Boston Guardian:

During the last three weeks it has been my good fortune to come in contact with many of the soldiers of the great National Army. And in as much as there are a great number of New England men at Camp Upton which I visited recently, I feel constrained to make a few statements to the Guardian.

The now notorious bulletin 35 of Maj-Gen. Ballou calling upon all Colored Officers and soldiers to refrain from going into places where their presence might be resented by white people, notwithstanding the fact that they have legal rights to frequent such places, has truly aroused the entire race. It is hard to recall a single act that has evoked a more thorough and general protest. It seems clear now that whatever the immediate action in the matter might be, the General will ultimately be forced to relinquish his command of the 92nd Division because of this bulletin. He made the fatal error of failing to take into account the fact that these are new times, and that the Negro of today is as wide awake as any other section of the population of this country of ours.

DR. FRANK R. COURSEY.
Who took Mrs. Feurtado and Mrs. Trotter to Camp Devens in his Limousine.

Not only has this edict greatly excited the civilians, but it has created the greatest commotion among the soldiers. The New York Age in a recent editorial demanded an investigation to determine how far this act went in breaking down the morale of the Colored troops. So far as we know that has not been done. But it is a well knon fact the soldiers ere so indignant at its presence that in one company of the 367th Infantry at Camp Upton they pulled it down from the bulletin board three times after it had been placed there by the captain. This was the regimental Headquarters Company the captain of which is white. My experience out there led me to the conclusion that notwithstanding the fact that the ocers and men was mentioned, they are genuinely disappointed in this act of their Commander.

Same as at Des Moines.

Now it might be asked is this an isolated case on the part of this one man in which he has not the sympathy of other officers in his command? My recent experience leads me to say NO. In the first place it is simply a rehearsing of a speech he is reputed to have made as Commandant of the Fort Des Moines, Officers Training School last year in which he admitted that the Colored men had a legal right to enter places of amusement, but told them that it would be very poor policy for them to insist on going to places where their presence was not wanted, or resented. He also gave emphasis to this statement that nine-tenth of the population are white.

As to Col. Moss.

Nor is the General the only one who still clings to this old undemocratic and reactionary southern point of view. It is reported that Col. Moss of the 367th Infantry announced the same policy last November when that regiment was first organized. Take for instance the matter of saluting. This is a regulation, the merits of which arer ecognized in all civilized armies. It is strictly observed as between enlisted men and officers in all armies. At present it is being specially emphasized in our armies on the recommendation of Gen. Pershing. Col. threatened to permit no officer of the regiment to leave the camp on week ends unless the me nshowed marked progress in their saluting. "Tell your men how to recognize officers", he said, "and let them know that they must salute all officers." Continuing however, he is said to have explained, "you are Colored officers. You will meet a number of white soldiers who will not salute you....But in the interest of yourselves and the success of the regiment I want to caution you against insisting that these soldiers salute you, as they undoubtedly should.

As to Saluting.

At this time most of the white soldiers at Camp Upton were men from the East who recognized and respected all officers as such, and there was no ground to complain against them. But now it is said that there are men from other sections who refuse to follow that fine spirit. Only recently it is said that the Colored regimcent was passing through the regimental area of one of these undisciplined regiments, and that two of the Colored ocers became so embarrassed in the presence of their men, who they had instructed to salute all officers, these soldiers who invariably looked into their faces but refused to salute, that they spoke to a sentinel on post, whose immediate retort was "I am from Georgia, and I will not salute a Colored officer. And if you fool with me I will tell Hoke Smith." Referring to this ncdent, Col. Moss is said to have had the Colored Officers understand that had they taken his "advice" the thing would not have happened.

As to his consideration of the Colored officers, his own words in his talk relating to the incident referred to above speak for themselves: "consider myself the guardian and custodian of all your rights, and the rights of the Colored race as they have to do with this regiment. And I can handle them more judiciously than any of you, because I have more education, more training, and more experience." With such a high estimate of his own wisdom in handling all their rights, the Colonel thinks that if a white soldier desires to salute a Colored Officer, "it is all well and good" but if he does not so desire, the Colored ocer, should not offend by insisting.

Does he think that this policy will add to the efficiency of his regiment, or will he accept an inefficient and demoralized regiment rather than abandon his ancient prejudices. Undoubtedly a man of his repute should be able to see that he is really placing the Colored officerso on a different status from that of the whites. Has he not been told that America entered the war to crush that very spirit in Germany?

BALLOU SHOULD RESIGN

Bulletin No. 35, which we published two weeks ago, was an insult to every self-respecting Negro and an insult to the United States Army; and the man responsible for it should resign. We want victory for our forces. No man can lead soldiers to victory who will surrender these soldiers to unjust discriminations, and threaten them that if they do not submit "white men will break up the regiment."

Our soldiers are neither slaves nor mercenaries; they are citizen soldiers, and the man who would consider them less should have self-respect enough to resign; if he has not he should be put out. If Ballou is responsible for Bulletin No. 35 the Negroes should demand his resignation: and that is what we do.

GENERAL BALLOU'S "EXPLANATION."

Advocate 6-1-18

Mr. Emmett J. Scott, special assistant to the secretary of war, last week sent out to Colored newspapers the "explanation" made by General Ballou of his infamous bulletin, No. 35, to the Colored soldiers of the 92nd Division of the army.

It is significant that Mr. Scott sent out that "explanation" without comment. Mr. Scott knows too well the temper of his race; he knows too well how the race and the race's newspapers have unreservedly criticised that bulletin, and he knows too well how INSISTENT is the race for General Ballou's removal to have attempted to temporize that bulletin even in the light of General Ballou's "explanation." And he, Mr. Scott, is not the man to temporize a grievous wrong.

General Ballou would have done himself infinitely more credit had he not attempted an explanation. For his infamous bulletin No. 35 the late Elbert Hubbard's coinage, "An explanation explains nothing," is most applicable.

Bulletin No. 35, issued by General Ballou to the patriotic native-born American men who compose the 92nd Division, was an INSULT, plain and unvarnished. In that order he clearly placed southern race prejudice above constitutional rights. In that bulletin he did what no other high American army officer has ever done—THREATENED THE MEN OF HIS COMMAND if they dared to exercise RIGHTS AND PRIVILEGES GUARANTEED BY THE CONSTITUTION their forbears helped to make possible in 1776, and helped to preserve in 1861.

General Ballou stands today a discredited army officer, with the Colored people, in this country. They have no respect for an officer who brutally tells his men, on pain of disbandment of their division, that they MUST NOT attempt to exercise constitutional rights.

There is but one thing to do, and that is for the War Department to remove General Ballou from the command of the 92nd Division. We shudder at the thought of our splendid, loyal, patriotic Colored soldiers being sent to France to fight "to make the world safe for democracy" under a commander who does not believe that this democracy for which they are offering their blood and their lives ought to be safe for them.

It was eminently proper that Mr. Scott should have sent that weak "explanation" to the Colored newspapers for the information of twelve million Colored people, and it was eminently proper for him to have done, as he did, decline to accompany it with temporization.

Remove General Ballou from the command of the 92nd Division is the earnest request of Colored citizens and Colored soldiers.

AN APPEAL TO SECRETARY OF WAR BAKER

Washington Bee 7-27-18

Dear Mr. Secretary:

The Washington daily press has announced that 1,050 colored registrants are to be called in August, and sent to Camp Sevier, at Greenville, S. C. The calling of these registrants is proper. The colored race is willing to do its bit, and valiantly, to help win the war. But, please, Mr. Secretary, don't send our boys to Southern camps. To do so, with the South's well-known attitude towards our race—the South's damnable discrimination against colored men, even when they wear the uniform of an American soldier—is such as to either break down an erstwhile splendid morale before they land on foreign soil to fight with every drop of their valor the Hun, or arouse a hatred which would be against the best interests of the army, the country and the race.

The Northern born and reared colored man cannot fit in with contentment into the South's scheme of un-American discrimination, segregation and brutality to the race. Send our boys anywhere, Mr. Secretary, to the ice fields of Alaska, if you will, but for God's sake, for the sake of a splendid morale, for the sake of buoying up their enthusiasm and sustaining their traditional loyalty, don't send them South. They do not fear the microbe-infested trenches of France, or France's bloody battlefields—these they are eager to be in and on—but they do shrink from the discriminations, the hurtful animosities the race is forced to suffer in the South.

THE EDITOR.

WHAT DOES "BREAKING" MEAN?

afro American April 12/18

General Ballou's bulletin recently issued enjoining colored troops from insisting on their legal rights which are likely to stir up race trouble represents nothing new. The same bulletin, with slightly changed form, was read to the Officers' Training Camp in Des Moines last summer, and widely discussed.

The bulletin reminds all colored soldiers that they must submit to illegal discrimination in theatres or elsewhere rather than cause a disturbance by insisting upon having their rights. The reason for this is odd enough. General Ballou rather strangely states that the "success" of the colored soldiers depends not on their faihfulness and attendance to duty, but to the good will of the public. "That public is nine-tenths white. White men made the Division, and they can break it just as easily if it becomes a trouble-maker."

It is just possible that General Ballou is making threats that the War Department will not countenance. Just what does he mean by "breaking" the colored Division? Can he mean that the colored soldiers will be disbanded or put to work on Southern farms, or what? A statement is being awaited to clear up this bulletin from a well-meaning commander.

At last an explanation of Bulletin 35 comes before the public in the form of a letter from General Ballou to Assistant to the War Secretary, Emmett J. Scott. The General claims that "his position and action were deliberately and maliciously represented to the colored people." Admitting this to be true it still remains to be explained what was meant by the statement hat whites made the Division and could BREAK it just as easily." Certainly no misrepresentation could put any construction on this sentence other than its actual meaning.

While the General's vigorous defense Bulletin No. 35 will be accepted on its face value, there is still some wonderment on the part of the race as to why such a detailed reference to Bulletin 35 failed to elicit the information most sought —just what was mean by "BREAKING" the Division.

No Place for Such Here

Did you miss the news story of the Arkansas captain in the army who refused to give a command to negro soldiers at Camp Pike?

This shining light in the forces of democracy was extinguished when an army order dismissed him.

The captain, still obdurate and remaining an exponent of the color line at all times and in all places, is going to Russia.

A good selection. Bolsheviki democracy will just about fill his bill.

DRAFT BOARDS WARNED IN REGARD TO NEGROES

Commercial Appeal 6-23-18

Secretary Baker Says No Discrimination Will Be Tolerated.

Washington, June 22.—When his attention was called today to reports that draft boards in some districts were being accused of discriminating against colored drafted men, Secretary Baker said:

"The war department will brook no discrimination and any cases of alleged or suspected discrimination brought to our attention, will be investigated, and any wrong done will be righted.

"I have heard that draft boards in adjoining counties take a different view of practically identical facts with regard to white men; but I never heard of the question being brought up with regard to colored men. The answer in all of these cases is that a review is provided directly by the president and all that is necessary for anybody to do is to point it out to the war department and any grievance will be investigated. If the draft board acts unfairly we will correct their action."

Discriminations and Distinctions.

A SERIOUS REPORT WITH TIMELY SUGGESTIONS

Advocate 8-29-18

A report of the Committee on the Welfare of Negro Troops, of which Bishop Thirkield is chairman, to the Executive Committee on the General War time Commission of the Churches, deals most directly with the several serious situations with reference to our troops. There are discriminations, and the fact that there are so few Negro commissioned officers and that, in a great many instances, even the non-commissioned officers are white, in combatant as well as non-combatant regiments, is not only galling but a source of great dissatisfaction. We know no report that more thoroughly represents the situation and is more worthy of a serious consideration than the report of Bishop Thirkield's committee, which we herewith insert:

The Executive Committee of the General War Time Commission of the Churches has had its attention called by its Committee on the Welfare of Negro Troops, which has made a careful first hand investigation into the conditions surrounding our colored troops, to certain inequalities of treatment inconsistent with the democratic ideals of our country in this war. Among these matters that seem to merit the special consideration of the War Department are the following:

1. In the combatant regiments of negroes the morale is high, the relation between white officers and colored men is good, and the effect of military training upon the men is conducive to wholesome results in civil life after the war. In non-combatant units, however, the situation appears to be far from satisfactory. The failure to give military training to service battalions and stevedore regiments has stood in the way of their attaining to the feeling both of self-respect and full loyalty that characterize the combatant units. Further, many of the white officers in the non-combatant units have carried over into the army old traditions and prejudices acquired in connection with managing gangs of negroes on plantations, turpentine farms or construction of public works, and have not had, therefore, toward the men under them the attitude of sympathetic interest that officers take toward fighting men. The fact that in the majority of cases the non-commissioned officers in the service battalions and stevedore regiments have also been whites, who have taken a condescending attitude toward the negroes, hs intensified a feeling of discontent. The inevitable result has been to make it more difficult to sustain among the colored people as a whole an adequate recognition of our democratic ideals in the war and the largest devotion to our cause.

2. Information has come that in certain draft boards an unfair and discriminating attitude has been taken toward negroes, resulting in inducting into the army large numbers, who, if white, would have been exempted in accordance with the provisions of the draft law. To what extent such irregularities prevail it is impossible to say without further investigation, but certain it is that thoughtful negroes are convinced that this is very frequently the case.

3. Although the number of illiterates among the negro troops is exceedingly large, little provision is made for instruction. A military order requires all non-English speaking people in our Army to be taught, but because even the most illiterate negroes can understand orders of command it has not been deemed necessary to provide for their instruction. Such instruction would, however, be of great value not only in increasing the usefulness of the negro in civilian life afterwards but also in securing a finer morale during the war through his enhanced recognition of our concern for his welfare and his appreciation of our national ideals.

4. In the case of negro regiments, particularly non-combatant units, little or no systematic provision has been made for organized athletics, and consequently the colored soldiers have been deprived of the valuable training that comes therefrom, and which is gneerally more needed by colored soldiers than by white.

The General War-Time Commission of the Churches, therefore, respectfully suggests to the War Department that the following steps be taken, looking toward a treatment of our colored troops that shall be more consonant with the democratic ideals that animate us in this war:

1. That a small commission of prominent negroes be appointed to go to France to investigate the conditions surrounding the colored troops in the American Expeditionary Force and to make report to the Government upon the situation. Such a report brought by men in whom the negroes of this country have confidence would be of great service in dissipating doubts now entertained by many negroes as to the treatment accorded to the colored troops in France and consequently in increasing the loyalty of the race to the aims of our Government.

2. That the attitude of draft boards in dealing with negro citizens be investigated by the Government and any discrimination against the negroes be eliminated.

3. That all stevedore regiments and service battalions be required to have military training.

4. That in the appointment of white officers to non-combatant units special care be taken to secure such men as will take a sympathetic interest in their men, and that white officers now in charge of such regiments be instructed to take the same attitude as is taken toward white soldiers.

5. That in the organization of new service battalions negro non-commissioned officers be assigned so far as possible.

6. That larger provision be made for sending properly qualified negroes to officers' training camps.

7. That an officer in charge of atheletics for colored troops be appointed in each camp where they are stationed in considerable numbers.

With reference to the attitude of white officers, we are not very far wrong when we state that perhaps Southern white men have been placed over most of the stevedore regiments in order that they may exercise the same spirit toward the troops as is too often manifested on the plantation, turpentine camps and other public works by white overseers. We have known a number of instances where our boys have been willing and enthusiastic to enlist, but their courage failed them when they knew they were going to be sent to certain Southern camps.

With reference to the Draft Boards being unfair, this is too true. We have in mind several cases, one where a young Negro, a college graduate of a Northern school and a competent chemist, prior to his being drafted, wanted to enlist for special service. He was refused, only to be told, "Wait until later." He has now been drafted and is in one of the supply companies. We know of another case of a Negro, a little less than twenty-one years, who has been anxious to enter the service. He preferred, however, to take special training. No effort was made to enlist him, in fact he was refused.

The report calls attention to another very serious matter—that of the failure to offer educational advantages to Negro troops. There has been too much discrimination in American life against the Negro in favor of the non-English-speaking people already, very much to the embarrassment of the Republic, too.

The suggestion that a small committee go to France to report the conditions among Negro troops is very timely. As to the third and fourth recommendations, we are heartily agreed that all the stevedore regiments and service battalions should be required to have military training. A visit to one of the camps revealed the fact that our Negro boys were very much dissatisfied because they were not even drilled with guns. They are being organized purely into stevedore regiments, with little thought of being mustered into service even in case of an emergency. As for the appointment of non-commissioned officers in the non-combatant units, we urge that Negroes should be appointed. It is absolutely unfair and detrimental to the service to appoint white men as non-commissioned officers when there are literally hundreds of Negroes who are prepared to take such offices and who can secure from their own race a larger amount of loyalty, obedience and results. The appointment of white non-commissioned officers is resented by soldiers who enlist and by civilians.

Negroes Attack Gen. Ballou

Protest to War Department Against Recent Camp Order

Major General Ballou, division commander at Camp Funston, Kan., is attacked, and a recent order which he issued to the negro officers and men of the camp is denounced in a letter sent to the War Department by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The order to which the letter of the association takes exception was one in which Genefal Ballou admonished the negroes of his command to "refrain from going where their presence will be resented." He also told them that "no useful purpose will be served by any action upon their part that will cause the color question to be raised."

The association denounced this order to the War Department as "unjust, humiliating and inexpedient."

"We cannot believe," it continues "that the War Department of the United States will approve of an order characterizing as 'personal pride and gratification' any proper exercise of the rights of citizenship, if exercised by a colored man in uniform."

BULLETIN AT FUNSTON REQUEST BLACKS TO YIELD TO SEGREGATION

THE REQUEST IS COWARDLY AND A DISGRACE TO THE CAUSE FOR WHICH THEY ARE FIGHTING

Major General Ballou is Commanding the 92d Division---Will the United States Army Stand for This Kind of Democracy?

We are in receipt of a bulletin reported to have been issued by some of the officers of the 92d Division at Camp Funston March 28, 1918, known as Bulletin No. 35, purported to be signed by some of the commanding officers of this division, which speaks for itself.

We are surprised to know that there is a commanding officer in the army who would issue such a bulletin to the men in his command who are preparing to go over the seas to defend the honor of this country against kaiserism. This is an insult not only to the colored citizens of this country but to the entire American people of all races. It is a disgrace that such bulletins should be issued to these men simply because they attended a theater or other places of amusement on the grounds of Camp Funston or anywhere in the surrounding community. This is all the privileges and enjoyment these boys have, and for one of their superior officers to issue such an order is, we repeat, a disgrace, a shame and inhuman.

In Paragraph 1 of the bulletin the colored officers are told that in order to be useful they must bow to the behests and become humble to prejudiced white men who are performing the same military duties and are under the same orders of this government. It is not the colored officers who are raising the color question; it is the prejudiced white men, and this first paragraph of the bulletin should be directed to white officers instead of colored, informing them that colored people should be treated as citizens and soldiers and not as serfs.

Paragraph No. 2 says that in order to avoid conflict the colored men should refrain from going where their presence will be resented. It is admitted that this sergeant was strictly within his rights, then why should Paragraph No. 2 apply to the colored regiment? This sergeant was acting within his full rights and as a perfect gentleman and attending to his own business and paid his money to attend this theater, but there are some prejudiced southern white who do not even want to be buried in the same cemetery with colored people, let alone to fight on the same battle ground with them, yet these colored men are told that they are inferior and must accept whatever white men give them without any protest. Race discrimination comes from the white and not from the colored man, therefore Paragraph No. 2 should have been directed to the white soldiers of the 89th Division, and the white officers imploring them to treat colored soldiers fairly and honorably, as they will go over the seas to fight for the same cause the whites are going for, and the sooner every man in this country is made to respect the rights of this government, irrespective of color or condition, the better off everybody will be.

In Paragraph No. 2 the implication here is that as long as colored men conduct themselves according to the orders and wishes of the white men and white soldiers and officers they will be treated as colored men, but not as soldiers. Because the public is nine-tenths white is no reason why white men should expect any better treatment than colored men who are sent to the camp for the same cause. Now as to white men making this division and white men breaking it, is erroneous, and the statement is made to cow and override the ambitions and manhood of the colored soldier, because the white men are in the majority. We want to say to the commanding officers that had it been left to a large number of southern white men and copper-heads in the North and West, there would have been no colored soldiers or officers, but the level-headed men of this country, seeing their danger ahead and knowing the valor and bravery and honesty of colored men in battle, which has been demonstrated in all the wars of this country from early history until now, they realized they could not do without the colored man and had to take him. There is no way to stop the colored soldier from going over the seas to fight for his country, and no attempt will be made. The colored man had to fight to get into this war by the assistance of the loyal Christian white men who know the worth of the colored soldier. Now he is told by some of the white officers that if he does not bow, grin, and scrape to some prejudiced whites, he will be forced out of the army. This is nothing more than a threat.

Paragraph No. 4 should have been addressed to the whole encampment at Funston, for if everybody were made to live up to the rules and regulations of the army there would be no need of divisions. The personal pride and gratification of one soldier is not above another, and all should enjoy the same rights and benefits, and it is the duty of the commanding officers to revoke this bulletin. We are surprised at commanding officers issuing such bulletins to these brave men whom they will have under their command in Europe.

We are informed that in Ohio the places of public comfort such as theaters and restaurants attempted to draw the color line on soldiers, and that the commanding officers of this cantonment issued a bulletin and had their men to visit the theaters and other places of amusement and found that the color line was drawn, and in twenty-four hours these managers of these places of amusement were given to understand that if any discrimination was made toward the soldiers their places would be closed. Now the boys in Ohio are enjoying all the rights and benefits accorded any other soldier. If the government can intern prostitutes and aliens and bar saloons five and ten miles from soldier encampments, we do not see why it can not compel keepers of restaurants and other public places and white soldiers to respect the rights of colored soldiers. A soldier is a soldier, and when he measures up to all the requirements of the army, there should be no restrictions put upon him.

We hope that if this order has been issued the commanding officer will rescind it and send a general order to all soldiers to respect the rights of each other, and that all public places of amusement be open to all soldiers. The colored man demands no more or less than his personal rights, and it is the duty of the officers to see that they are respected. We hope the commanding officer will see his way clear to follow in the footsteps of the lowly Nazarene and assist his brother in black to come into full possession of all his rights and benefits which his white brother already enjoys.

Headquarters Ninety-Second Division
Camp Funston, Kansas, Mar. 28, 1918

BULLETIN NO. 35.

1. It should be well known to all colored officers and men that no useful purpose is served by such acts as will cause the "color question" to be raised. It is not a question of legal rights, but a question of policy, and any policy that tends to bring about a conflict of races, with its resulting animosities, is prejudicial to the military interest of the 92nd Division, and therefore prejudicial to an important interest of the colored race.

2. To avoid such conflicts the Division Commander has repeatedly urged all colored members of his command and especially officers and non-commissioned officers, should refrain from going where there presence will be resented. In spite if this injunction one of the sergeants of the Medical Department has repeatedly precipitated the precise trouble that should be avoided, and then called on the Division Commander to take sides in a row that should never have occurred, and would not have occurred had the Sergeant placed the general good above his personal pleasure and convenience. This Sergeant entered a theatre, as he undoubtedly had a legal right to do, and precipitated trouble by making it possible to allege race discrimination in the seat he was given. He is strictly within his legal rights in this matter, and the theatre is legally wrong. Nevertheless the Sergeant is guilty of the greater wrong in doing anything, no matter how legally correct, that will provoke race animosity.

3. The Division Commander reports that the success of the Division, with all that that success implies, is dependent upon the good will of the public. That public is nine-tenths white. White men made the Division, and they can break it just as easily if it becomes a trouble maker.

4. All concerned are again enjoined to place the general interest of the Division above the personal pride and gratification. Avoid every situation that can give rise to racial ill-will. Attend quietly and faithfully to your duties, and don't go where your presence is not desired.

5. This will be read before all organizations of the 92nd Division.

By command of Maj. Gen Ballou.

ALLEN GREER,
Lieutenant-Colonel,
U. S. A. Chief-of-Staff.

The following letter has been sent to Senator Charles:

Topeka, Kans., April 9, 1918.

Hon. Charles Curtis, U. S. Senator,
Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator:

Find enclosed a copy of a bulletin reported to have been issued by one of the commanding officers at Camp Funston, which explains itself.

Now, my dear Senator, this is an outrage for any commanding officer to issue such orders asking the colored soldiers to curb their manhood and ambition to please southern whites who are now in camp at Funston, where they are preparing to be soldiers to go to Europe to put down kaiserism. You will please notice these paragraphs, and you will admit that it is a disgrace to issue such orders.

Had this order been issued to white soldiers to respect the rights of their brethren, it then would have been proper, because in several instances colored soldiers are not respected or treated cordially and are often made to feel their inferiority when they come in contact with white men. Traveling in Oklahoma a few days ago we boarded the train at Bristow en route for Sapulpa in the Jim Crow car, and in the front of the car were three colored commissioned lieutenants going to Ohio from Fort Sill, where they had been in training. Now on this same train in the Pullman car were white commissioned officers who were permitted to have berths and enjoy a comfortable trip while these colored soldiers were compelled to ride in Jim Crow cars cut up in sections and in parts of which white men were smoking. This train stopped twenty minutes for supper at Sapulpa. These colored lieutenants went in to the lunch counter and stood there for a few minutes without any attention being paid them, and when they asked to be served were told they could not serve them but sold them some lunches to put in a sack, while the white officers went into the dining room, sat at the table, and were fed with great pomp and style. A number of white men on the train remarked that a shame and disgrace it was that colored men going to fight for the same cause as white men were not allowed a seat in the dining car or to ride in comfort.

Now, my dear Senator, we want to call your attention to the fact that there is no law upon the statute books compelling these restaurants to serve these colored soldiers. There is such a law that applies to the Hawaiian Islands and some other possessions of the United States, but in the confines of this territory there is no law against such criminal acts of discrimination. Some time ago we called upon you with reference to this fact, and you spoke as though there were some law governing the same but you will notice from the statute books that my contention is right. Colored men are loyal and no slackers and want to fight for their country and are fighting, and there is no reason why they should be discriminated against as they are.

Very truly yours,
NICK CHILES,
Editor The Topeka Plaindealer

Discriminations and Distinctions

THE COLORED FOLK OF JERSEY CITY.

HOBOKEN N. J. OBSERVER
DECEMBER 10, 1918

By ELLA BARKSDALE BROWN.

Commenting in the Christian Advocate on Irvin S. Cobb's statement that "hereafter n-i-g-g-e-r will be another way of spelling the word American," Bishop Wilbur P. Thirkield says: "The term that will stand for the American of color will henceforth be spelled with a capital 'N.' The word 'nigger' must go the way of all terms of racial contempt and inferiority, face to face with the dauntless heroism and sacrifice of white and black, yellow and red and brown on the world's great battle front. The writer means well, but he does not seem to know that the term 'nigger,' that has persisted as a relic of slavery and has in it the sting of liquid fire to every self-respecting Negro, must go. The American Negro, with the freedom and rights of a man, has arrived.

"When the first two American soldiers to receive the Croix de Guerre on their wounded breasts because of dauntless valor in trench defense against a score of Huns, and when the record of a race shows that it is no accident that they have black skins; when the news of this battle against such odds sends a thrill along the whole American line that breaks into cheers, the day has come when the American soldier-millions will no longer tolerate any such terms of contempt against a compatriot of any race or color."

Corroborative evidence of the spirit of fairness prophesied by the Bishop is found in a letter which has come from Corporal Drysdale, well known here, and a member of the famous old Fifteenth New York Infantry. He says: "I had ocacsion to stop in the city of Tours and, being very hungry, I stopped at the only available place to get an American meal, which happened to be an American Y. M. C. A. After entering the restaurant and quietly seating myself at a table, a French waitress attempted to take my order. Before she could accomplish the same I was accosted by the Y. M. C. A. official, who informed me that I would have to depart, as they did not serve colored soldiers in that restaurant. I really felt hurt to think I had come all the way to France, in a land where the inhabitants know no discrimination, and then to be belittled by this official. I asked him did he think me an American or German. I had many sympathizers, some white soldiers from New York National Guard regiments. They protested against the official's action and said if I was good enough to fight side by side with them in the trenches I was certainly good enough to eat with them. I, not being served, and having their protests ignored, they refused to eat and walked out, disgusted."

The Colored Presbyterian Ministers'

The reception and service flag raising of the Second Separate Company, S. M., N. J., at the Armory, Friday evening, Dec. 13, promises to be one of the largest gatherings in Jersey City this year. The draft made a heavy call on the company and reduced its numbers very much. Captain Gannon is now recruiting to former strength and any one desiring to join can communicate with him. The company has always made excellent showings and received favorable criticism from authorities.

In addressing the colored troops while in France, Secretary Baker said: "In after years, men will come home and tell with pride and with a glow upon their faces how they had met and fought with valiant colored men at Belleau Wood, at Chateau-Thierry, at Soissons, on the Velse and at Champagne. The history of America is in your hands, for you have enlarged it and helped to make it what it is to-day—a thing to fill every American with pride."

Unit 47, Circle for Negro War Relief, met Monday evening, Dec. 2, at Williams' Hall. An enthusiastic gathering planned larger service for the future for the circle's object. The war's end does not conclude the circle's work and both local units are strengthening for demands that may arise.

Negro Troops Ask Same Rights as Whites

The right of negro soldiers to enjoy the same treatment as their white comrades was demanded of Secretary Baker yesterday by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People as the result of the recent banishment of Private S. P. Jones, a colored infantryman, from a Pullman coach.

Private Jones was travelling from St. Louis to Camp Cody, Deming, N. M., on government transportation. He paid for a berth and was getting ready to go to bed when the Pullman conductor, he asserted, ordered him out of the sleeper.

"The uniform of the United States should protect any citizen from indignity," it was stated in a letter from the association addressed to the Secretary of War. "We ask your sympathetic consideration of a problem which is typical of the treatment which is accorded or likely to be accorded to thousands of his fellow American soldiers."

COLOR LINE DRAWN IN PORTO RICO CAMP

WASHINGTON D C STAR
APRIL 27, 1918

100 Colored Candidates in Officers' School Segregated, Says Official Report.

The color line has been drawn in the Army training camp in Porto Rico, and has created considerable comment, because it had never been done before in the history of the island. Following complaints to the War Department to that effect, an investigation was instituted by Assistant Secretary Keppel.

A report made by Adjt. Gen. McCain showed that the original instructions for the establishment of an officers' training camp in Porto Rico provided for the admission of 400 candidates and nothing was said about color distinction.

Wanted Colored Candidates.

Col. Orval P. Townsend of the Regular Army, who has been attached to the Porto Rican Infantry since 1900, and who was in command of the training camp, asked the department for authority to select 100 colored Porto Ricans as part of the quota. The authority was granted, said the adjutant general, but no instructions were given, he said, for the separation of candidates according to color.

It appears, however, from a report made by Col. Townsend that the color line was drawn when the camp was established and has been maintained since. The colored candidates, he said, were quartered in a separate building with separate mess and were not connected in any way with the white students.

Action Uncalled For.

Admitting that the action taken in this case by Col. Townsend had not been anticipated, in view of the mixture of races and the absence of a color line in Porto Rico, the authorities say they do not see that any action in this particular instance is called for. The question had been considered before the establishment of the Porto Rican camp was authorized and it had been concluded that it would not be wise to attempt any division of the races in the training camp.

The commissioner of education discussed the matter with Secretary Baker before his departure for France and represented that it was impossible to draw a sharp color line among Porto Ricans and that any attempt to do so would cause all sorts of social difficulties.

HUMILIATION FOR NEGRO SOLDIERS

Recent Order Issued Gives Comfort to Race Discriminators—Negro Soldiers Commanded Not To Go Where Whites Resent Their Presence

Camp Funston, Kan., April 4.

Many think a great blow was struck against Negro soldiers when Bulletin No. 35 was issued, telling Negroes not to seek their legal rights to enjoyment if whites objected. A sergeant went to a theatre, and he was discriminated against in the seating. He demanded his rights. Now Negro soldiers are told that they must not demand their legal rights according to the order issued. They are told they must not go where they are not wanted, regardless of their legal right to go. This, of course, does not mean that they should not go "over the top" if the Germans object. This means that if a few whites object to them following in a legal and orderly way their constitutional right to "the pursuit of happiness" they must desist. The bulletin is as follows:

"Bulletin No. 35

"Headquarters Ninety-second Divicion, Camp Funston, Kansas, March 28, 1918:—

"1. It should be well known to all colored officers and men that no useful purpose is served by such acts as will cause the 'color question' to be raised. It is not a question of legal rights, but a question of policy, and any policy that tends to bring about a conflict of races, with its resulting animosities, is prejudicial to the military interest of the Ninety-second Division, and, therefore, prejudicial to an important interest of the colored race.

"2. To avoid such conflicts the Division Commander has repeatedly urged that all colored members of his command, and especially the officers and non-commissioned officers, should refrain from going where their presence will be resented. In spite of this injunction, one of the sergeants of the Medical Department has recently precipitated the precise trouble that should be avoided, and then called on the Division Commander to take sides in a row that should never have occurred, and would not have occurred had the sergeant placed the general good above his personal pleasure and convenience. This sergeant entered a theatre, as he undoubtedly had a legal right to do, and precipitated trouble by making it possible to allege race discrimination in the seat he was given. He is strictly within his legal rights in this matter, and the theatre manager is legally wrong. Nevertheless the sergeant is guilty of the greater wrong, in doing anything, no matter how legally correct, what will provoke race animosity.

"3. The Division Commander repeats that the success of the Division, with all that success implies, is dpendent upon the good will of the public. That public is nine-tenths white. White men made the Division, and they can break it just as easily if it becomes a trouble-maker.

"4. All concerned are again enjoined to place the general interest of the Division above personal pride and gratification. Avoid every situation that can give rise to racial ill-will. Attend quietly and faithfully to your duties and don't go where your presence is not desired.

"5. This will be read to all organizations of the Ninety-second Division.

"By command of
"MAJOR GENERAL BALLOU,
"ALLEN J. GREER,
"Lieut.-Colonel, General Staff, Chief of Staff."

Official:
"EDW. J. TURGEON,
Captain, Ass't Adjutant.
"Acting Adjutant."

The boys heard the order in silence.

URGES DEPUTY COMMISSIONER TO GIVE COLORED TROOPS A SQUARE DEAL

The Washington Bee. 1242 8

TYLER OF THE BEE EXPOSES AMERICAN DUPLICITY AND TREACHERY

Deputy Commissioner in Charge of of Colored Troops in France Urged to Give Colored Troops Same Treatment They Receive in America—Colored American Soldiers Discriminated Against By White Americans.

Nancy, Dec. 1.

With the American Army in France.—Monsieur Blaise Diagne is the Deputy Commissioner General of France in charge of the effectives, or fighting colored troops of France's colonies, and is a close friend of Premier Clemenceau. Monsieur Diagne is a black man, but color does not count in France—France has no color problem, though she has millions of colored subjects. The deputy commissioner has an intimate knowledge of the conditions surrounding the colored man in America. His sympathizes with him, as do all of France's colored subjects. When in Nancy last week, he stated he had requested Premier Clemenceau to make some helpful reference to the colored troops from America at the peace table; that colored Frenchmen had requested that an audience at the peace gathering be given to a delegation of France's colored subjects that they might give voice to sentiments that might be helpful to their kinsmen in America who had come over here to fight for world democracy.

The discriminations to which colored officers and soldiers have been subjected to at the hands of many American white officers and soldiers has been noticeable to colored Frenchmen, and they have felt it keenly. It has been observed, even by white French officers, to all of whom color prejudice is unknown, and they have been at a loss to understand why such brave, enduring fighting men of the race the United States sent to help win world democracy should be subjected to embarrasing and retaring discriminations and segregation.

Monsieur Diagne also told of certain American white officers writing to French high officials urging that the treatment accorded colored men from America in France by French officers, be the same treatment accorded our race in America by certain white people; that colored Americans were an inferior race and should not be accorded the equality of treatment French officers and civilians had been in the habit of according to colored soldiers. This request for discrimination against colored soldiers and officers on the part of Frenchmen was referred to Monsieur Diagne, a colored man—genuinely black in complexion, who is "Depute Commissaire General, charge due Control des effectifs Coloniaux," with the request that he tear it up, such destruction of the paper to constitute the French officials' only reply to the impertent and unreasonable request from certain American white army officers. Commissaire General Diagne is keeping the torn bits of that request as a souvenir.

There have been some American white officers over here—not a few but many, who have, ever since being here, prosecuted a propaganda against the colored soldiers; who have done their utmost, but without avail, to taint French with America's prejudice against America's loyal fighting colored soldiers. There have been a few American white officers—not many, over here, who have treated the colored soldiers as American soldiers, notable among them being Brigadier General M. H. Barnum and Brigadier General Sherburne.

In spite of the unjustifiable discrimination and handicaps at the hands of certain American white officers over here, colored soldiers—officers and men, have given the best in them for their country; have patiently endured discriminations because of their color, as they have heroically endured the expected hardships of soldier life, and as heroically fought against the Hun.

Had it only been the Boche colored soldiers had to fight against they would return to the States without a single complaint, but in not a few instances, I regret to admit, they have had to fight the Hun while at the same time they were enduring an infilading attack from those whom they had supposed were here to fight for the same thing they came overseas to fight for—world democracy.

However, with it all, the colored soldier is proud that he had an opportunity to again prove that which the country had never had an occasion to doubt—his loyalty to his country.

Thousands of our colored soldiers are now busily preparing for the overseas return. They are impatiently counting the days—even the moments, that must intervene before they can again see the face of the Statue of Liberty in New York's harbor—before they can again greet relatives and friends. Many of them who came hence on American troopships, in the fullness of manhood and patriotism, will not return, for they are lying, where they will forever lie, in a soldier's grave, rudely marked, up around Verdun, Chateau-Thierry, Soissons, Champagne, in the Argonne Wood and in the Mousson Valley.

France has been magnanimous toward the American colored soldier; she—her men and women—has voiced her praise of their fighting qualities; of the soldiery bearing, and of their faultless behavior. France would welcome them as permanent residents of France, but they—those who have survived this awfully decemimating, frightful war—are going to return to the States, firm in the resolve to help secure, through peaceful means, for themselves and their people, that which their arms, their blood, and their lives helped to achieve on the battlefields for the alien countries over here—"democracy."

The 92nd Division has orders to prepare to move for a port of embarkation. I hope to move with it. The real "first page" story of the colored soldier in this war—his fighting and his enduring, will be written on my return.

Ralph W. Tyler.

AMERICA'S BLACK DEVILS

AMERICAN NEGROES' GLORIOUS FIGHTING RECORD GIVES RIGHTS OF FULL CITIZENSHIP.

Race Already Proved Itself in War—"Black Devils" Feared by Huns.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6.—France has her "Blue Devils"—fierce fighting men. America has her "Black Devils"—fiercer fighting men.

The Negro race has already proved itself in this war. Hundreds of Africa's colonials serving in the French and British armies showed the Huns how a black man can fight—but it took the American Negro to put the finishing touches on their education.

The result is that while a German soldier might stand up and fight a white soldier, he now flings down his rifle and shouts "kamerad!" with all his lung power when a Negro face shows behind an American bayonet.

An American Negro regiment took a valorous part in the fighting east of Rheims on July 15 and 16 when the German drive was stopped. So furiously did they fight that they earned a contemptuous but appreciative place in the German official reports of the defeat.

Two Negro divisions—the Ninety-second and Ninety-third—are known to be in action on the western front. There may be more of them. Some of them are in training in England, and the English tell many tales of their humor and whimsical attitude toward the war.

The Ninety-second and Ninety-third divisions were organized under the ommand of Maj. Gen. C. C. Ballou and Brig. Gen. Roy C. Hoffman respectively. The company units are in large measure commanded by colored officers.

About 650 commissioned officers were graduated from the first training camp for colored officers at Des Moines, and these offiers have for the most part made good and are in command of troops of their race.

Under the first draft there were 737,628 Negro registrants, or nearly 8 per cent of the country's total registration. Of this number 100,000 have been called to camp and the majority of them are now at the front.

About 1,000 Negroes, including 250 medical officers, have been commissioned as captains, first lieutenants and second lieutenants.

In addition to the fighting men there are thirty-four colored chaplains in the army, and 150 Negroes with the Negro branches of the Y. M. C. A. at the camps in America and in France.

The Houston Post 9-22-18.

With the 372nd Infantry, S. P. 179, A. E. F., France, August 17.—American newspapers are publishing daily of the great success of the allied armies in this present drive, and I am confident that the colored citizens of the U. S. A. are anxious to know what part of this great task their boys are doing and where they are situated.

It is against the law of the A. E. F. for me, or any one else connected with said organization, to tell the names of the different sectors held by any soldiers in France, as it would afford much valuable information to the enemy, but nevertheless I will endeavor to describe the important trenches and sectors held by colored American soldiers during this great drive.

COLORED SOLDIERS CAPTURE A NUMBER OF PRISONERS.

The colored soldiers, including the Fifteenth New York or 369th Infantry, Eighth Ill. or 370th Infantry and the 372nd Infantry, are holding some of the most important sectors in France, in which they have succeeded in capturing a number of prisoners and officers, including two majors.

The 372nd Regiment is now holding one of the greatest sectors in France, in which thousands of German soldiers have given their lives in a vain effort to capture. Our boys marched to this sector under a terrific shell fire, losing some men, but never wavering in their speed. Several times the enemy has attempted to wrest this sector from us, but have been unsuccessful in each attempt.

GERMANS SMOTHERED BY FIRE AND KNIVES OF OUR BOYS.

Each time they attacked they received such a fusillade of machine gun fire, grenades, bolo knives, trench mortars and shell fire, that they will have to content themselves with the knowledge that the sector is as impregnable as in the year of 1916.

During this great drive in which the German hordes have suffered such a crushing defeat, it is very important to keep a constant watch on every inch of the front which they occupy. They remind me of what my teacher used to call (mischievous students) "eye servants." They must be watched at all times unceasingly and then if you are not extremely careful they will put one over on you.

GERMANS SURPRISED AT VALOR OF ALL AMERICAN TROOPS.

They seem to be mad at heart and sick in spirit at the success of the allies, during the months of July and August, especially the battles which the American forces have been so closely identified, first because they were so surprised at the presence of such hordes of Americans in France: 2nd, because of their valor and dash which they deemed impossible, due to information regarding their untrained and incompetent rookies.

I suppose they are thoroughly acquainted with Uncle Sam's fighting valor by now, because the Yanks have had them in constant retreat ever since they made their debut in Belleau Woods, in which one American regiment completely destroyed thousands of old German vets, especially the much vaunted Prussian Guards, in this woody fighting, where they had machine guns placed in most every other tree.

THOUSANDS OF GERMANS ARE MADE PRISONERS BY ALLIES.

Considering the American soldiers in regards to numbers with that of their allies and the short time they have had for training, their mark of efficiency and accomplishments can be recorded along with their older and more experienced comrades. The prisoners captured by the allies during the months of July and August are as follows:

July — British, 4,500; French, 33,400; Americans, 4,300.

August — British, 28,000; French, 8,426; Americans 4,008.

The Germans have been driven back 21 miles during July and August, and they are still advancing towards Berlin instead of Paris.

NEGRO TELLS OF GASSING

Colored Soldier, Back from France Say Huns Have Lost Nerve

William Gant, 1430 Lombard st., the first Philadelphia colored soldier wounded in France to reach this city, arrived yesterday afternoon with nineteen of his comrades. They are the guests of the Mercy Hospital, 1024 Lombard st.

Gant was gassed while assisting in the repairing of a shell-hole in a road over which the Allies were advancing in the Toul section.

He and other members of the 302d Motor Supply Train, to which he was attached, were thus engaged when a German gas shell burst directly over-head. There was no time to don gas masks and the entire squad was rendered unconscious by inhaling gas fumes.

They were rescued just in time by members of a medical corps and taken to a base hospital, from which Gant was later ordered home.

"Are the Germans afraid of us," he countered in response to a query. "Well, to tell the truth just now they're afraid of everybody. No I did not get much chance to talk to any of the German prisoners as they are allowed to talk to no one but the intelligence officer. They are a bum-looking lot and the majority I saw were only boys. Most of them were Prussians."

Prior to his enlistment, Gant was employed in theoffice of the Adams Express Company, 18th and Market sts.

Only One Death Since They Left America

Chicago Defender 6-10-18

REGIMENT MAKING HISTORY

BY SERGT. E. A. TOOKE
Company F, 370th Infantry

Somewhere in France, in Active Service, American Expeditionary Forces, July 7.—Dear Editor: You have no idea how glad it makes me feel to be given assurance that I can send in an order for Defenders with a meager possibility of receiving them.

How are you and members of your staff, and your office force?

I am feeling fine, although at the present moment I am lying prone in a trench a few hundred yards in front of the enemy.

Most of our boys are well, and all join in sending a word of greeting, or love to all America; and believe me many of us never realized just how good it was to be an American until we got "over here."

A more hospitable people than the French can hardly be found in all the world. We all are trying to learn French, while all the French are picking up Americanized English.

We of the Eighth have been a number of places and have undergone some privations and hardships in our clashes with "the guerrillas of war," but nevertheless we still stand pre-eminent as a regiment of fighting men. Of course, through a natural sequence of circumstances, there have been many changes in the personnel of each battalion of the regiment, consequently each company, platoon and squad. But be it as it may, when we return to America it will be the Eighth Illinois bringing home the "bacon."

Many of the boys receive no mail from anyone, and I have planned to have them cheered a bit by requesting those who may be interested in the Eighth Illinois to drop a line to any or all of the soldiers whose names I shall send you on a separate sheet of paper.

If you could see some of our boys when mail is being distributed and note that longing—hoping against hope—expression on their faces when tons of mail has been distributed and still no letter or even a card for them, it is a heartrending sight to behold. Then, too, there are some of us who have lost father, mother, sister or brother or kindred relations who were near and dear to them, who have departed this mundane sphere since we left America and of whom they have received no word. For instance, just the other day (to be exact, July 1, 1918), a young man in my company received a belated letter from New Orleans containing a bill from an undertaker for services rendered in putting this young man's wife away decently. Just think of it now! No news from his wife since he left Camp Logan, March 6, 1918, and to be greeted with such a letter after hours, days, weeks and even months of hopeful anxiety, with no balm for the superheartache the letter caused but the boche shells. 'Tis maddening indeed! He tells me he has no other relative and I shall include his name in my list. Well, enough for that.

"The Charcoal Division" is a myth no longer, as the enemy has already had cause to know. With the permission of the censor I will say that the 369th, 370th, 371st and 372d are in close proximity to each other—in France. We have one purpose only—to get Kaiser Bill and return to America with the key to "equal rights for all American citizens in all the states, regardless of race, creed or color."

Our mail usually reaches us from six to eight weeks, sometimes ten, after we have written (pardon me, I mean an answer to a letter written, say about, from Paris, France, May 1, 1918 will be received by the writer in Paris about July 1 to 7, 1918, provided it is answered immediately).

We are fortunate in having our "Y" secretary, Mr. Pierce, who was with us at Houston, Tex., and Newport News, Va. Having arrived in France and locating the Eighth he immediately set out to catch up with us, which proved quite some job, since we have been shifted to a number of different places and have been on every front, which is some distinction in itself.

Later on I may be allowed to tell something about the hazards and harrows of the world's great conflict and of the part played by those in whom we are most interested.

For the present, I can only say that France is a beautiful country and every man, woman and child is working at some occupation from morn till night, except on Dimanche (Sunday), during which day every one attends at least one service at church (L'eglise).

Switzerland is beautiful also, but I being a participant in this great war, I'm afraid that I may disturb the serenity of our censor should I dissertate on it in any manner whatever. Suffice to say, that "Apres le guerre," meaning "After the war," I'll tell you a few things more. How interesting it would be to describe an air battle or the clash of an enemy patrol and members of the Eighth, but just you wait until I get back.

I shall send postcards to various friends—and others on request—whenever available.

Rev. Braddon is still our "grand old man" and the "premiere" (first) chaplain of all the armies, in our estimation. Ah! if I only had his power of oratory, or even his descriptive eloquence, then, I'd—er—have to get Kaiser Bill just the same.

Most of our officers are still jaunty and debonnaire, as are the French and British.

We have met some Italian and Russian troops, not to mention Japanese and Chinese (who are breasting this conflict also).

But—mind you—in every village, hamlet or town we have visited we have found an abundance of American tools, of various kinds, and practically all implements for farming used by the French bear an American trade-mark. Then, too, in about 12,000 miles of travel I have not found anything that surpasses our own America. Even the tots along the thoroughfares realize the value of an American cigarette, and prefer one American to half a dozen of any other nationality. If the grocer or butcher or winekeeper or baker is tendered American money for a purchase he will accept it eagerly, but in giving you change he takes particular care that he keeps all American money and will not give anything but French in exchange, deeming American money to be on a firmer basis and preferring it even to the currency of any other nation, England not excepted.

Gee! Now stick out your chest and thank the powers that be that you are an American. Still another incident: On the arrival of a battalion at a certain village, many of "the boys" searched the village for eggs, butter, chocolate, jellies and jams (eggs, d'oeufs, d'buerre, chocolat et confitures, etc.), found some in an epicerie (grocery), but the owner refused to sell to any one except they had a souvenir (American) to "donne" (give). Later the writer gave the owner of the store one postcard, received from Galveston, Tex., for six magazines, for which she had been offered $1.00 (about 5 francs) but refused to accept.

Then, too, in America the ordinary comforts, which every one in any walk of life takes as a matter of course, are luxuries to nine-tenths of the natives of France.

Now for a few words concerning the boys.

With best wishes to all friends, relatives and acquaintances of the Eighth Illinois Regiment.

Only Lose One Man

Somewhere in France July 10, 1918.—Mr. John Mallet, 3328 Michigan Avenue, Chicago: Dear John—No doubt you have wondered why I have not written sooner, but to tell you the truth, I have simply been on the jump until now.

I and the regiment are in the best of health; in fact, there have not been over forty men sick and but one death since we left home.

At the present time, even as I am writing, the big guns are going back and forth, first French, then the German, but we have become so accustomed to the noise we do not pay any attention to it any more. They rock us to sleep at night and awaken us in the morning, and during the day the machine guns chime in the chorus. Some life, believe me.

This is a great country. I have seen the herds of goats, cows and the chickens in the yards have eaten the sausage from the rafters and the cheeses and eggs. Also the red and white wines, to say nothing of the champagne, which you can purchase for $1.40 per bottle; and take it from me, these boys are showing the French how to sport. Everywhere we go, when we leave every one is sorry to see us go. The French soldiers and people are simply crazy over this regiment. On the streets, in the houses, you will find a bunch of French and our men all together, men and women.

Today I was the guest of a French colonel and had the honor of being present at the presentation of medals for bravery given to a famous French regiment in a very historic spot. How's that for class?

This is, as I said before, a beautiful country. It is sad to see such fine towns simply ruined by shell fire.

In some towns not even the walls are left standing. But the towns that are all right. O, la! la! Some towns.

The land of wine, women and song, and, believe me, this regiment is putting Chicago in France.

With best wishes, and expecting an early reply, I am your friend.

NEGRO TANKS AMUSE FRENCH

In Battle Show Fearlessness Where Personal Danger Is Involved and Annoying to Officers.

(Correspondence of the Associated Press.)

WITH THE AMERICAN TROOPS, in France, Sept. 14.—American negro soldiers in France are a source of never-ending interest and amusement to the French, who do not tire of watching and listening as they wield picks and shovels, and chant as they work in a wierd minor key. They have shown a fearlessness amounting almost to utter indifference—if their white officers are with them—a carelessness where personal danger is involved that is at once amazing and sometimes annoying to the officers, and a desire to fight that amounts to a mania.

The American negro soldier, in the words of a colonel who commands a regiment of them and has for years known a good deal about their characteristics is very close to a fatalist when it comes to fear. Repeatedly his own troops bandy remarks among themselves, the gist of which is about as follows:

"Don't worry 'bout that shell, Rastus. It ain't got your numebr on it."

And the shell screams by, the negroes who believe it had not their number stand idly around and expose themselves as they should not. The colonel frankly admits being afraid when big shells are flying around, and seeks cover.

The first regiment which went into action, long ago now, went in primarily because it threatened to decimate itself in inactivity. Razors and knives came more and more freely into play, and the men demanded so frequently and so insistently of their officers, why they might not get some action that it was finally arranged for them. They proved quite as strenuous fighters in the line as they had behind it.

It goes without saying that the negro soldier is as boastful as any in a similar profession. The marines had just covered themselves with glory in the Chateau Thierry fight when a delegation from a negro regiment in the line in a quiet sector waited on the commanding officer and asked him if they too might not get in on the "fun."

"Let us go in, colonel," they said, "We are the only real fighters. The marines are all right, of course, but just let us have a whack at the boche. Then the marines won't be in it. And as for the rest, Lord, they don't count at all."

Battle Scarred Hero Tells of Trials On Firing Lines

Chicago Defender 8-17-18

Back with a story of bleeding France, whose fertile fields now lay waste strewn with dead and dying, whose once rich cities are now marked with naught but stricken ruin, wrecked and mutilated by the wanton hand of the enraged Hun, whose air is filled with the noise of roaring cannon and whose soil echoes and will still echo with the tread of the millions of allies that are massing and driving these "mad dogs of war" back to their lairs. This is the yarn Private David Meadows, who saw fighting in the Champagne district, brings to us.

Pvt. David Meadows

He arrived in the city Saturday morning, having been recently discharged from one of the eastern base hospitals, where he was being treated for the effects of gas and shell wounds. He is a Chicago boy and prior to his enlistment in the United States army, eight months ago, he resided with his mother, Mrs. Ida Meadows, 2028 West Lake street.

"I was a cook on the B. & O. Line when I suddenly became seized with a desire to join the army," he said. "I cannot describe those days when I was tortured with the stories of the fearful outrages of German kultur and their heinous outrages gainst womanhood. There was an issue that I must decide, and I did. In October, 1917, I enlisted here and was sent to Jefferson barracks, Missouri, where I was placed in the 3——d Regiment, then forming.

France Heroic Through Grief

"On the 1st of December we arrived in France. Not the gay France such as described in stories, but France the horrified and sad at the destruction of her manhood, her cities, her homes, But with heroic patience she bears on. I shall never forget that day. The snow was just beginning to fall and a pale haze hung over the city, but this fact did not dampen the enthusiasm of that vast throng that lined the quays to pay us homage. Those were breathless moments for me and all of us. Right into the hearts of the people, their homes, we went. Truly when Robert Burns wrote his poem, 'A Man's a Man for a' That,' he must have been thinking of France. But more exciting moments than these were in store for me.

A Nightmare of Ruins

"Not long afterward we were on our way to the front, and as we moved up we met heartless scenes of devastation. The grim trail led through village after village which had been pillaged, districts where the earth, furrowed by big shells, was bleeding; while smoking ruins still tottered under the heavy explosions; wheat, corn and oat fields wasted by the trampling of huge armies that swayed back and forth in their death grapples; here and there parts of equipment strewed the road; forests were stripped naked by shell fire. Hell. More than that, this hideous nightmare, a one that served to fire our determination to 'see it through.' And we were determined.

"Imagine a thousand explosions at once, a million noises in one grand chorus, and this is the calm sereneness of battle, and at night the sky lit by rockets and signals of a thousand fireworks. My life in the trenches was exceedingly exciting. One incident I will relate. My comrades and I had just arrived at our dugout and had thrown our tired bodies down to snatch a bit of sleep, when we heard a German 'Katy' strike. The force of the explosion buried us beneath a pile of debris, but we were lucky, and after we dug our way out you can wager some Boche paid dearly for disturbing our beauty nap.

Withering Fire Cuts Boche

It was in that fierce fighting around the Champagne district that I was wounded.

Great masses of those gray hordes came against us liken to waves, but they rolled back under the withering fire of our machine guns. And then our counter attack. It was glorious, as we attacked them across desolate fields, honeycombed by shell fire, through barb wire entanglements, with cold steel, and those Boches shuddered. Many of our prisoners were glad to be captured. Among some we found boys around the age of 16, hungry, gaunt and wild-eyed creatures.

"It was on the morning of March —, a dense barrage preceding us, as we awaited word to go over. It never came for me, for out of that cloud of fearfulness came gas. In the midst of this and bursting shells we were, and then I forgot. All about me was the dim outline of moving figures. I struggled to go on, but something uncanny restrained me. I was wounded."

THE BLACK MAN'S BRAVERY.

Plaset 6-15-18

Despite the misrepresentations to which the colored people of this country have been subjected, they are winning a place in this "world's war." The short, crisp, straightforward declarations tell their own story. Here they are:

With the French Army in France, June 11 (By the Associated Press; noon).—The strongest effort made by the Germans in the course of last night and this morning in their new offensive was in the direction of the railroad connecting Estees-St. Denis and Montdidier. The Germans met with such resistance that they renounced for the moment their attempts in this region.

Negro troops, supported by entente allied tanks, which did great execution, delivered a brilliant counter attack in this vicinity and recaptured the forest running southwest of Marqueglise, between Perte farm and Loges farm.

Colored men are fighting and dying on the battlefields of France in an effort to secure rights for white men that they themselves have not enjoyed. They are doing this too in the face of misrepresentations and slanders at home. They are doing this although numbers of them have been put in the penitentiaries of this country and executed in a disgraceful manner from the gallows. But God will bring all things right in His own time.

This show of patriotism on their part will raise up more white friends in their behalf. A President of these United States will be impelled by their heroism and sacrifice to speak a word in their favor and in securing for them when they come marching home all of the rights and privileges vouchsafed any other citizen. Let us take courage. Let us fight on for this country for our country, for this flag, for our flag.

Six Colored Laborers Capture Twenty Germans

The Houston Post 8-

With the American Army in France, During an American attack on the northern flank of the front, six colored Americans employed in laboring detachments wandered through the forest in an effort to get a better view of the battle. Suddenly they came upon a detachment of twenty Germans. The colored Americans had no weapons save picks and shovels, but they charged and the Germans surrendered. The race men marched proudly to the rear with their prisoners.

SERGEANT RICHARDSON TELLS OF ATTACK

Freeman 9-30-18

SAYS YANKS DO NOT HESITATE IN GOING "OVER THE TOP"—BLACK DEVILS BRAVE

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Aug. 28.—Regimental Sergeant Major Alexander Richardson, of Co. B, 24th U. S. Infantry, who has just returned from the Vesle front, after twelve months' continuous fighting in the front line trenches in France, is stopping in New Brunswick, on his way to his home in Chicago, Illinois. He is visiting Mrs. Robert Mason, of 144 Lee avenue.

Sergeant-Major Richardson is a veteran of the Spanish-American war. He has been in the service for twenty-nine years and two months, and has been a Sergeant-Major for ten years. During the Spanish-American war he fought at the battle of San Juan Hill, helped in the rescue of Theodore Roosevelt on July 4, 1898, and fought in the Philippines in 1900. He was wounded in Cuba, by a bullet which passed through his shoulder. The scar is still visible.

Richardson was also down on the Mexican border, where he fought in 1913. But he says that the fighting in the present war is quite different. "The Germans are better fighters," he said, when asked to compare them with former enemies. That seemed to sum up the situation for him. But he also said it was much more satisfactory to fight against more worthy opponents. And he will not admit that any nationality can come up to the Americans as fighters.

HOME ON FURLOUGH.

The Sergeant-Major is at home on a ninety-day furlough, but he does not desire this long rest, he says that if he were well enough he would go back to France today. But he is still weak as a result of his wound. He received a flesh wound from a bullet in his leg on June 6 for which he now wears a wound stripe.

On the morning that he was wounded, the Americans had gone "over the top," at five o'clock. They had crossed "No Man's Land," and were fighting with bayonets in the enemies front line trenches, when he was wounded about nine o'clock. He went right on fighting, however, and they cleared that trench of Huns, and pushed them back to other trenches. At 2:30 that afternoon, Richardson fainted, weak from his wound. But he had been fighting all that time, hardly knowing he was wounded, but growing weaker all the time.

TAKEN TO BASE HOSPITAL.

He was taken to a base hospital, where he said he was given excellent care. This was the first wound he had received in all the year that he has been fighting in France, and now he wants to get back again, and "get 'em."

When asked if the American boys ever show any hesitation about going "over the top," toward the enemy, he replied, "no, they want to go right along into 'em." He admitted, however, that these bayonet charges were the hardest kind of fighting.

He is very proud of his native land, and confident that the United States will win the war. "It takes the Americans to win the war, and they'll do it soon," he declared.

"THEY ARE DARING," HE SAYS.

The Americans realize that it is up to them to win the world's greatest conflict and strenuous efforts are being made to bring the war to an early end by going right into it with a vim and a determination to subdue "Wilhelm the Last" in his illusion of world-wide dominancy.

FRENCH ARE GREAT SOLDIERS.

The French are great fighters, the soldier intimates, but they lack the aggressiveness of the Yankees.

On a certain sector of the front there seemed to be a friendly feeling—even though warring against each other—between the French and the Germans. A little brook ran between them at this certain place. On one morning the Germans would go down to the stream and bathe and wash their clothes and on the next day the French would do the same. A detachment of Yanks was put on that sector and on their first morning there—which happened to be the morning for the Germans to go down to the brook. Not knowing of the mutual understanding existing between the French and the Germans the Yanks charged on the Huns when they neared the water and killed and captured a big bag of them. The French went down to the brook on the next morning and the Huns retaliated for the attack made on them the morning before and killed a number of the French. The French colonel in command of the troops, very much angered at the German retaliation, severely reprimanded the Yanks for their attack on the Germans which caused the latter to inflict a loss on the French.

The Yanks' reply to the colonel was: "We didn't come here to run a kindergarten—we came here to fight and end the war."

The presence of the Americans have put into the soldiers of bleeding France "pep" and new life. Before the Americans took part in the war it is said by soldiers who have returned from the front that the French would never bombard the enemy until he fired on them. They always waited on him to be on the aggressive.

But now a new plan of warfare has been instituted whereby the French—and the British too—have been put on the aggressive and this is largely due to the new spirit and style of warfare brought into the trenches by America.

BLACK DEVILS ARE FEARLESS.

The Colored troopers, known as "Black Devils," have been highly commended for their valor and fearlessness under fire. They are "over there" fighting, giving their life blood for democracy over in Europe and throughout the world, with prayers that there will be a greater conception of it here under the grand old flag of the "home of the brave."

Efficiency of American Soldiers at War Front Described by "Y" Worker

Carl Wetzel, Back From France, Tells at Church Patriotic Meeting of Wonderful Qualities of Our Fighting Men in Battle Zone.

ST. LOUIS MO REPUBLIC
SEPTEMBER 30, 1918

At a meeting of Christian patriotism at the Third Baptist Church last night Carl Wetzel, a member of the Third Church and formerly with the Ely-Walker Dry Goods Company, who has just returned from 10 months of Y. M. C. A. work in France and Italy, gave a message to mothers from their boys in France.

Wetzel was in the first draft, but was rejected on account of defective hearing and was given permission by his local board to go over as a "Y" secretary. He returned home on the call of his board, only to learn he had been placed in Class V. He will return to France immediately for further service with the Y. M. C. A. While in France Wetzel, with 10 others, accompanied the American force sent to encourage the Italian Army.

"When we got to Italy," he said, "we were hailed everywhere with delight upon the part of the Italian people. One old woman grabbed me by the hand and spoke her greeting in Italian. They called us brave and glorious Americans."

"The Battle Hymn of the Republic" and "There's a Long, Long Trail," are two songs that the American soldiers sing with great ardor, Wetzel said. They know how to put "pep" into the former song that the people at home have not yet learned.

Boys Attend Church.

"Your boys are thinking a great deal about the church over there these days," Wetzel told the mothers. "Often they will tramp miles to attend some church. Weather and hardships do not prevent their attendance."

The speaker said that the Americans were the most cheerful, smiling and whole-hearted soldiers on the battle front. The people there look on him as the saviors of humanity.

"Why shouldn't we be kind to America?" is the way a prominent French official put it, Wetzel said, "France no longer belongs to us. It is yours, for you have saved France."

On the Fourth of July, beautiful girls in Paris, Wetzel said, threw at marching American soldiers flowers with little notes attached. One of these notes said: "You are the most beautiful soldiers in the world, but you are as brave as you are beautiful."

Wetzel told of the wonderful efficiency of the Americans, which began immediately on their arrival in France, and of how they took hold of the telephone system and the railways, and the rapid work they did in construction. There was no doubt of their spirit, energy and initiative wherever they went, Wetzel declared.

"At one point the Allies were retreating," he said, "and the Americans had just arrived. To the retreat order the Americans responded: 'Hell, no; we have just got here. We go forward.'"

Go to Front Smiling.

Americans go to the front with that famous American smile, Wetzel said, and when they return for a few days' rest and breathing spell, they still wear that same smile. When returned to the front they would be singing American songs and shouting, "We're going to get Bill this time."

The boys will come back loaded down with souvenirs, if they can possibly bring the quantities they are collecting. They go out into the middle of No Man's Land, Wetzel said, to get a souvenir from a dead German. If it has blood on it, all the better. In Italy an American doughboy proudly showed him a button, Wetzel said, and when asked where he got it, replied:

"I cut that from the coat of a Swiss guard in the Vatican when he was not looking."

The American soldier is the most loyal, the most religious and the cleanest in the world, the speaker declared. When he reaches a new location his first thought is to find a washerwoman, he said, and if he canot find one he proceeds to wash his own clothes. One soldier, Wetzel related, was making a small fortune taking in washing. He had thought to bring a washboard along as a part of his equipment.

Negroes Preserve Humor.

While the negro soldiers are brave and fully intend doing their part to whip the Hun, Wetzel said, he has the same candid and humorous way of answering questions and meeting a sudden situation that he had back at home. One squad of negro soldiers was called upon to volunteer for some special service, he related as an instance of this candor, and only two responded. Later he asked one of them if he had volunteered.

"No, suh, Mistuh Secretary," the negro replied. "Ah nevuh even vollunteehed foh dis army."

Another negro came into the Y. M. C. A. hut looking blue and out of sorts. When Wetzel asked him the trouble he replied that it was in the specifications that Uncle Sam would bring them over there, but that nothing was said about the return fare.

Letters written to soldiers by the folks at home, Wetzel declared, are carried around with them until they are worn out, and each one carries pictures of every member of the family at home. These he will show to anyone who will look at them.

Wetzel said the Americans were also noted as "some" eaters over in France. They would come to the "Y" hut after a 10-hour day in the mud and slush, to find out what was "doing," and if nothing was "on" they would immediately ask, "What can we get to eat?"

St. Louis Marine Who Is Prisoner of Huns

Leo J. Tevlin

Private Leo J. Tevilin of the 83d Company, 6th Regiment, Marines, was reported a prisoner in Germany in yesterday's casualty list. Tevilin, who is 26 years old, and the husband of Mrs. Anna Tevlin, 5867 North Market street, joined the marines in May, 1917, and left Quantico in October. He was in a base hospital two months recovering from a gas attack. Mrs. Tevlin received her last letter in May, and for four months had sent one letter a day to her husband. Last week Mrs. Tevlin received a postcard from her husband saying that he had been a prisoner since the battle of Chateau Thierry. The postcard was mailed from Limberg, Germany, but instructions on the card said not to write to Limberg as it was a distribution camp.

IRVIN COBB ON THE NEGRO SOLDIERS.

Irvin S. Cobb, a well known writer, has a long article in the current number of The Saturday Evening Post on the Negro soldiers at the front. Such an article in The Saturday Evening Post has added importance on account of the tremendous circulation of that magazine, a circulation of more than a million. Of course, in this large number of readers there are hundreds of thousands who are not particularly interested in the Negro, and who would not trouble themselves to look up anything written about him. However, The Saturday Evening Post puts it directly under their eyes, and they cannot help but read. It is safe to say that between four and five million people will read Cobb's article. 8-31-18

Now about the article itself. There are things in it which many colored people will object to, or at least feel were unnecessary in writing an article about men who are conducting themselves so bravely at the front. Mr. Cobb works in the traditional mule and the old graveyard joke and the worn out reference to the watermelon. He also makes frequent use of the traditional so called Negro dialect. We know, of course, that Mr. Cobb was writing a magazine story and not a defense of the Negro; that he wanted to make his story as readable and entertaining as possible, so he worked in as much color and background as he could. But even Mr. Cobb must feel that the color and background which he used is old and hackneyed. It is the stuff that most writers who have written stories about the Negro have used for a half century or more.

These black boys, but a generation or two removed from slavery, and not yet having full democracy for themselves, yet fighting in France for the democracy of the world, must have a distinct background but it certainly is not the background of the watermelon and the 'possum and the rest of the worn out "literary color" of Negro stories. Mr. Cobb could see the black boys but he did not have the genius to discern their new background, so he placed them in the old setting with which he was familiar, the rural districts of Georgia. Some writer will come, perhaps he will be a colored writer, who will see the new background behind these sons of American slaves now fighting for the freedom of European peoples. Mr. Cobb missed it; and missing it, his story would have been better if he had left out "color" and "background" entirely.

Yet, it is only in justice to Mr. Cobb to say that there is no spirit of meanness in his article; indeed, in spite of the faults we have mentioned, it is written in a spirit of sympathy. He writes that he visited two colored regiments, one a regiment recruited from the far South and the other a Northern regiment, evidently the Fifteenth of New York, for he mentions Johnson and Roberts. He mentions particularly that it was a Negro, Johnson, who was the first private of the American Expeditionary Forces to get the French Gold Palm along with the Croix de Guerre. In commenting on Johnson's deed he says, "If ever proof were needed, which it is not, that the color of a man's skin has nothing to do with the color of his soul these twain then and there offered it in abundance." It is also only fair to say that Mr. Cobb confines his Georgia "local color" to the regiment from the far South; when he writes of the Fifteenth of New York, he writes in a different vein.

There are many things in the article worth reading and worth the wide circulation which the article will get. There are one or two touching spots in the interview with the colonel of the second regiment visited, evidently Colonel Hayward. Several of the paragraphs we should like to quote, but we have not the space.

In the closing paragraph of his article he brings in this thought:

> Coming away—and we came reluctantly—we skirted the edge of the billeting area where the regiment of Southern negroes was quartered, and again we heard them singing. But this time they sang no plaintive meeting-house air. They sang a ringing, triumphant, Glory-Glory-Hallelujah song. For—so we learned—to them the word had come that they were about to move up and perhaps come to grips with the "Bush-Germans." Yes, most assuredly n-i-g-g-e-r is going to have a different meaning when this war ends.

It might be surmised from these quotations that Mr. Cobb himself has been a user of the term "nigger." The surmise is correct. Anyone who has read some of the things which he has written regarding the race will see by this article that the war has wrought many great changes, even in Irvin S. Cobb.

New York, Sept. 3.—Private Walter Martin, of Company G of the old Fifteenth New York, gassed in an action with the Germans "somewhere in France," in June, told at length in the office of the New yesterday the exploits of the Fifteenth, now the 369th. The New Yorkers had proven their mettle in every engagement, he said, driving the Huns back with the bayonet "in many engagements and holding all positions to which they had been assigned when attacked. Captain Napoleon Marshall died of pneumonia, Martin declared, in June, and that the casualties from gas, wounds and disease, he said, in the entire regiment had not amounted to more than three hundred when he was sent home on sick leave. Captain Fillmor, who led the first company of the regiment into the trenches had been a major of the Third Battalion when Major Spencer was relieved. Many of the sergeants had been promoted to commissions, Private Martin said. Lieutenant James Reese Europe had been gassed in the eyes, he said, but was convalescing in the Hospital. Captain Hamilton Fish was still the idol of his company and Colonel Hayward has endeared himself to his command by standing four square for their rights on all occasions. When differences arose between them and Southern white regiments. The French people knew no color line and worshipped the black soldiers, said Martin. He is now at the Lakewood U. S. Hospital from being gassed in the lungs.

NEGRO SOLDIERS AGAIN WIN PRAISE

Herald—9-14-18

Negro soldiers on the battle front are maintaining their old record of bravery, dash and execution. Their numbers are not large as yet on the front and, perhaps, they have been handicapped, for that reason, in making their prowess felt as a distinct fighting force but even the small fighting unit which they compose wring recognition from war correspondents and praise from their commanding officers from time to time.

Reports this week bring the news that they delivered a brilliant counter-attack and re-captured from the Germans territory which they had gained and had intrenched themselves.

It was a signal victory and thrills every Negro heart with delight.

The Press Associations are exceedingly sparing in reporting news of Negro activities news matter of interest to the Negro people. Unless Negroes figure as principal in some dastardly or heinous crime or is the center of interest in a lynch-ng-bee his activities are not deemed of sufficient importance to the white reading public to warm the telegraphic wires of the Press News Associations.

Negroes throughout the country, especially in the South have rallied to the call of the government and have contributed hundreds of thousands of dollars to the purchase of Liberty Bonds, The Red Cross and are still aiding by purchase of War Saving Stamps winning thereby spontaneous and high praise from their white neighbors.

But these facts and many of equal interest to the public never reach the great dailies over the Press wires.

War correspondents accustomed to this one sided condition in America may follow the same practice on the war front. If so it is to be hoped that they will be given instructions to make as frequent mention of the activities of Negro soldiers as circumstances invite. Every mention made of their efforts as well as their distinguished achievements heartens and stimulates the race at home to greater endeavor for the nation's cause.

Paris Likes U. S. Soldiers

Visitors Admire Open Air Methods at Auteuil Hospital—Negro Dialect Makes a Hit—Dogs Lose Popularity.

N Y C EVE SUN
AUGUST 28, 1918

By LEONORA RAINES.

PARIS, Aug. 10.—With the measles conquered and quarantine lifted, visitors are many to the open air hospital at Auteuil, where the American soldiers sick and injured are sheltered. Sunday is an especially busy day for convalescents and attendants. Men on duty are "off" on Sundays and generally find some girl or girls who will accept an escort in khaki for a stroll along the boulevards.

The American soldier is the whole show at the Auteuil hospital. He is interesting in pajamas or kimono, bedridden or walking about or well enough for work. He plays croquet. He amuses himself in the gymnasium. He cooks soup for the evening meal. He has caught on to the French way of making "long" pot au feu. A fine looking fellow was standing over the pots stirring and seasoning. He smiled knowingly as we sniffed and remarked "Yes, it's good. I've learned how to make it out here. Won't I be a fine wife for some girl when I get back home?"

Other soldiers were washing dishes, for with such a great family there is always some serving to be done, and the boys slinging dish cloths and whistling over the work looked sheepish at our unexpected invasion of that screened part of the grounds. However, they took the intrusion good naturedly, and one called after we had admired their agility, "If you see mother, don't tell her about this. When I get home she'll send me to stay in the kitchen."

Sick Men Want Their Mothers.

Speaking of mothers, one of the nurses who had attended some of the badly wounded remarked: "The devotion of these boys to their mothers is beautiful. The well ones don't talk of mother often, but when they get ill or when serious cases come in the one craving of the soldier is for his mother. He does not seem to think of sister or sweetheart or even wife. It's his mother he longs for."

It is so clean and attractive—that hospital. The long canvas tents are like doll houses, as neat and as pretty. All doors are tied back and the vista at the other end presents sunshine and green foliage. There are a canteen and a reading room, and the nurses and orderlies have their own comfortable quarters. A piano is on the pavilion and somebody pounds it from morn till night. Not infrequently the Y. M. C. A. sends out entertainers. It is like a seaside scene when you catch one side of the tents with the men in clothes that look like bath costumes.

The hospital is on the grounds of the old racecourse. The grand stands are opposite and the little houses where one could make a bet are used to store soldiers' belongings. Windows and doors are never closed. Not only are the soldiers taking the fresh air cure, but all France is living out of doors. Those Parisians who could find no houses to rent in the country are renting in the fields. Whole families go to the Bois de Boulogne Sunday mornings with rugs, screens and food to lounge on the grass all day.

This country has not yet adopted the sleeping porch idea, but from time immemorial its people have patronized open air restaurants. This is the terrasse season, and to get a seat at any of the popular places for the 5 o'clock gouter you must secure it long in advance. Soldiers help swell the terrasse clientele. There are many here on leave and their friends are entertaining them. Paris is filling up now that people are sure there'll be no more scares. It is as crowded as if there were no such thing as a summer vacation.

Damrosch to Teach Bandmasters.

Many negro soldiers in khaki go by the terrasse cafes. The United States soldier, I am told, is noted for his good conduct in camp and trench. Among the few gas patients at the Auteuil hospital were two or three negroes. There are negro Y. M. C. A. men and women [redacted] Paris. All well dressed and well mannered, and attending strictly to their own business, they are highly respected. The "coo" voice clings to them no matter where they go, and among so much nasality it is a treat to hear it.

Dogs have become such a luxury that when they pass out of existence they are not replaced. Since the tax has been increased and dog biscuit and food become so dear, feeding the brute is an item to be reckoned with in every household. People cannot find servants and dispense with the dog sooner than look after him themselves.

Contrary to expectation, Damrosch will not take the band organized in this country under the Y. M. C. A. to the camps behind the firing line. The scheme has been declared impractical by Gen. Pershing, who says that railroad space is too valuable to be given up to a big orchestra with its heavy instruments and other baggage. Under suggestion from Gen. Pershing, who believes in entertainment for the troops, special efforts will be made to develop competent orchestras at the different regimental headquarters. There are more than 200 American bands in France, it is said. The bandmasters are to visit Paris, study methods with Dr. Damrosch and return to their regiments and get to work on the regimental musicians. Men who qualify for orchestral work will be excused from fatigue and all other but military duty.

ALL HONOR TO "J. HENRY."

From somewhere in France comes a story of a black color sergeant who was carrying an unfurled Stars and Stripes along a dangerous road over which an enemy airplane was hovering when the following dialogue took place:

The Cleveland Advocate, 1/4/18

"WHITE OFFICER: 'Drop that flag and get under cover.'

"COLOR SERGEANT: 'I ain't goin' a run away with this heah flag of mine from no Germans, Cap'n. I wanta show 'em baby-killers what a real flag am.'"

It does not need a Sherlock Holmes to tell who the color sergeant is. He is one of those brothers of ours—whom, thank God, we are not ashamed to own—who was reared in the boasted land of the free—without being given the opportunity, perhaps, to get an education, hence the dearth of language to express the resolve in his inmost soul—"I ain't goin' to run away with this heah flag of mine from no Germans."

Poor, and unlettered though he was, the black color sergeant had the heart of a hero. He somehow felt, though he could not express it, that his human liberty had been moralized and loaded with responsibility for service, and that life to him was shorn of glamour and of attraction if the path of its duty did not lead up to the supremist sacrifice for liberty.

"I ain't going to run away with this heah flag of mine from no Germans." What visions must have flashed up before the mind's eye of this intrepid son of the twilight. An aged mother, perhaps, somewhere in America, wrinkled, decrepit, hobbling painfully along on a crutch, listening for the footfall of a mail-carrier, who would bring no letter from her boy—her boy who refused to run away with that flag of his—who courted death on alien fields, disdaining to run with Old Glory, or hide behind cover with that starry emblem, whose folds he swore to protect.

There might have been no old mother in his vision, but yet there must have been some vision of someone, or something, somewhere, as J. Henry—for that's his name—shouted in answer to his captain's command, "I ain't goin' a run away with this heah flag of mine from no Germans."

Uncultured, untutored, crude, though the words of J. Henry were, their echo shall go sounding down the corridors of time. Such sublime courage, such hallowed devotion to duty, shall not go forgotten.

Let us carve out a niche in the chambers of our memory and place this answer of J. Henry's along with the now famous answer of another son of the twilight, Sergt. Carney: "Colonel, I will bring back this flag, or report to God the reason why."

"I ain't goin' a run away with this heah flag of mine from no Germans—I want to show them baby-killers what a real flag am."

Greater love of flag and country than this hath no man. All honor to J. Henry!

What Colored Soldiers Are Doing In France

MORE FACTS ABOUT JOHNSON AND ROBERTS

One From Newark and One From Albany Earn Praise From French for Desperate Fight Against Heavy Odds.

(By Thos. M. Johnson, Staff Cor. of Evening Sun.)

With the American Army in France, May 20.—The fine heroism of two Negro soldiers who, although wounded, beat off a raiding party of twenty-five Germans, killing and wounding five of them in a fierce hand to hand fight, offers an auspicious opportunity for announcing that the American Negro troops, many of whom are New Yorkers, are holding the front line trenches in the region of Ste. Menehould, west of Verdun.

They've been there more than a month and they have acquitted themselves splendidly. Every one, white or black, in New York or anywhere else in the United States, can justly be proud of them.

The Negro troops have many unique accomplishments to their credit. They have already been over the top in company with the French, entering German trenches under barrage and bringing back three German prisoners and No Man's Land has no mystery for them or their patrols. They've been all over it and have gone as far as the Boche wire entanglements almost every night.

"Why, we are the best patrollers in the while army," was the way one of them put it to the correspondent of The Evening Sun. "Dem Bush Germans can't see us at night, and we don't need nothing to black up our faces with."

Commanded by New Yorker.

Since entering the trenches a month ago they've taken over from the French a long sector, which they are now holding. Their commander is a well known former New York official (probably Wm. Hayward, former Public Service Commissioner) and have been visited by at least a dozen French Generals. Petain himself has sent his aide to convey his good wishes.

These troops are acting in closest association with the French and practically are a part of the French army. They have been so detailed as part of our contribution in the present crisis.

In appearance the are almost indistinguishable from the French Colonils. The difference only becomes apparent when they open their months, and then it is quickly seen that they are teh same troops as the tw The Evening Sun correspondent told of meeting a few days ago.

What the Censor Deleted.

The meeting took place in the rest billets right behind the trenches, but the fact that it was not certain at that time whether the Germans knew they were there necessitated sending only fragmentary information.

But the heroism of the two Negro soldiers in the fight that occurred on last Thursday night now makes it possible to reveal what the censor then deleted.

It should be remarked at the outset that the deeds of those two soldiers were as fine and gallant as any achieved by any American soldiers since they came to France. Their heroism recalls some of the old tales of devotion of Negro troops in the Civil War.

The two men are Harry Johnson, 23 years old, of Monroe street, Albany, and Needham Roberts of Trenton, N. J. Both have spent much time in New York City.

They have been cited for the Croix de Guerre before the French army, which means they will receive the cross with the palm.

Text of Citations.

The citations say that "Johnson, finding himself on sentinel duty at night, and being attacked by a group of a dozen Germans, put one hors de combat with a shot from his rifle, seriously wounded two others with a knife and although wonded by revolver bullets and grenades at the beginning of the fight. went to the assistance of his wounded comrade, whom the enemy was about to drag away, and continued fighting until the Germans were put to flight. He gave a magnificent example of courage and energy.

"Roberts, attacked and seriously wounded in the leg by a group of Germans, continued to fight with grenades although he had fallen to the ground, and until the enemy had been put to flight. A good and brave soldier."

Stationed in Marsh Grass.

Here is the full story of what happened: Johnson and Roberts, with three others, were on duty at 3 o'clock Thursday morning at a small advanced post. The post was on marshy land and in the midst of a heavy, rank grass. The two were on patrol while the three others were getting a little sleep in one of the dugouts.

About 2 o'clock in the morning, as the investigation later undertaken showed, the party of twenty-five Boches crawled into a bit of abandoned trench to the right of the post and then started to work their way toward the sentries."

Johnson heard them as they cut through the barbed wire encircling the post, but Roberts insisted that the noise was made by rats which infest the trenches.

But hearing the noise repeated Johnson became convinced that the Boches were approaching and shouted at the top of his voice: "Here they come."

Fifty yards back of that held by the two Negroes was a larger post, and at Johnson's cry a flare was sent up from there, which disclosed the dark forms of the Germans breaking through the wire.

Both Wounded by Grenades.

They were scarcely fifteen yards away, and as the flare went up the Germans instantly threw hand grenades, which exploded with a crash, wounding both Negroes. Roberts was struck by a fragment on the right elbow, forearm and left leg, and Johnson on the right hip and left leg.

Both were knocked down by the concussion, and Roberts was not able to get up again.

But despite the suddenness of the attack and their wounded condition, both of them struggled toward their own grenade supply, and although both were on the ground at that time, threw several of the grenades just as the first Boches entered the post.

Johnson managed to get on his feet and shot the Boche through the chest with a rifle. A second German leaped over the body of his fallen comrade, and Johnson, using his rifle as a club, brought it down with a groan on his head. He dropped with a groan, but there were more coming, and Johnson saw out of the corner of his eye one big German throttling the helpless Roberts. Two other Germans were helping him, and the three were trying to take him prisoner and carry him off.

Drops His Useful Rifle.

The infuriated Johnson cast about for another weapon, his rifle having jammed just before he felled the second German, but found that the small supply of grenades at the post had been exhausted. He suddenly bethought himself of his "bolo knife" which he had at his belt, and drawing this brought it down with all his strength, driving the razor-edged blade into the German's head.

It must have cleft his skull, for the blade later showed blood to the hilt, and the German's cap, when picked up was found to have been cut almost in half.

This ended that German. Another flung himself at Johnson almost before he had time to recover himself after delivering the first blow, but he succeeded in turning his "bolo" against him also.

Screams in Good English.

As he plunged the knife into the German's body the latter gave a cry of anguish and—Johnson and Roberts agree as to this—screamed out in good English, "The son of a — got me!"

By this time Johnson was weak from the loss of blood, and when another German shot him in the right arm with a revolver he fell to the ground. He was vaguely conscious that the little post was filled with rushing figures, all jumbled together in the darkness, and then his hand fell upon a single grenade that happened to be lying on the ground. He threw this in the direction of the Germans, heard it explode, and then everything became blank as far as he was concerned.

But that grenade literally blew another German to pieces, and there was a big stain on the duckboards outside of the dugout with bits of gray cloth strewn about, to prove its effectiveness. It was Johnson's last effort, but it was enough to put the Germans to flight.

They went so fast they barely had time enough to carry off their dead and wounded in the stretchers which, as is their custom in making raids, they brought with them.

But they did not have time to take with them two stretchers, six wire cutters, twenty-four grenades and three revolvers which they left behind as mute evidence of the fact that the two Negroes had been too much for them.

The other three Americans at the post were just emerging from their dugouts when the fight commenced and were knocked down by the force of the exploding grenades. They got to their feet barely in time to see the last of the Boches disappearing. They gave chase but could not catch up with the fleet footed foe.

A few minutes later Lieut. Richard Pratt of Brooklyn and Arthur W. Little came up leading a strong patrol, which also was unable to find any trace of the enemy.

When Johnson recovered consciousness the first thing he said was:

"Corporal London, turn out the guard," this being what he had been shouting during the whole, breathless fight.

Both Johnson and Roberts are in the hospital and will recover. They told the commander who visited them that as soon as they recovered they wanted to go back to the trenches. In the meantime the story of their exploit has passed from mouth to mouth, and when they do retu the trenches it will be a sort of triu phal return something after the ma ner of the victorious Roman emperors.

All Want "Bolo Knives."

The fight has also had another result. Every Negro wha hasn't one already is importuning his officer for a "bolo knife."

Here is what the French General in command wrote to his superior about the fight:

"The American report is too modest. As a result of the verbal information furnished to me it appears that the blacks were extremely brave and this little combat does honor to the Americans."

The story of the fight will make a splendid paragraph when the time comes for writing the history of the war. It will show that when it comes to a question of heroism there is no color line.

Troops Lost a Long Time.

When we found these men they had been lost for a long time. Imagine running into two men who were to all appearances "French Colonials" and thinking that there was something familiar about them, taking the chance of asking them, "Where do you come from?" to receive the reply "We comes from the trenches. We's had shells bursting around us, we has," and then finding that these men were from New York.

It took some little effort to realize that these were the same men who had marched along Fifth avenue last summer in the "Wake Up America" parade.

It is a treat to see these fine colored troops who are participating enthusiastically in the new war for freedom and the United States can be proud of these first American Negroes who have thus been honored andof their comrades who are going about the trenches whistling or singing when they haven't their helmets and gas masks on or who are standing watch silently at some listening post.

"Roll Bones" in Trenches.

These men are as much at home here as if they were on Lenox avenue or Fifty-seventh street. It is actually true that in making the rounds of one of the supporting trenches you will frequently find them "rolling bones" with francs as stakes, and they'll proudly show you shell holes where the Boche shells have hit.

Some of these shells were of heavy calibre, yet the wounding of Johnson and Roberts is the first of the casualities sustained by the Negro troops. The sector they are occupying is a quiet one, but interesting.

The setting is almost weird, because No Man's Land there is a strange, vague region. Here and there are bits of abandoned trenches, isolated listening posts where snipers are concealed and communicating trenches that lead out into nowhere in particular, while here and there are clumps of woods.

At one place a ridge extends from one headquarters to another, and one rides along a narrow gauge railway with a tiny car drawn by a long eared mule whom the Negro driver adjures to C'mon, shake a laig."

Innumerable stories could be told illustrating the humor of these troops. Here's an example. One soldier was reprimanded by his captain because, although a private, he insisted on wearing the chevrons of a sergeant. Here's what he told the captain:

"Well, Cap'n, I wants to be a sergeant so you'll give me a dangerous message to deliver."

One officer, Lieut. Marshall L. Johnson, received the Croix de Guerre for pursuing some Germans to their second line during a raid.

At night the famous jazz band which the Negroes brought with them plays ragtime behind the trenches, and sometimes, as was the case last night, when there was a fine moonlight, the bandmaster will sing Negro melodies or a translation into French of the song "Joan of Arc."

One French officer in command of the Negroes is Capt. Andre de Fouquieres, once well known in New York. These troops are fairly bubbling over with jubilation at being in the front line after their long stunt at manual labor at the port of entry, when they despaired of ever seeing the trenches. As a result their chaplain has sent back the following biblical message to the unit of which they were once a part:

"The same stone which the builders rejected is become a headstone of the corner. This is the Lord's doing and marvellous in our eyes."

This sums up the spirit of the Negroes whom the French call "Les Noirs." They're proud to be doing their bit in the war and whatever the future may have in store for them they will face it with the same courage as Johnson and Roberts—two men who beat twenty-five.

Sergt. Archie Niblack of the Old 15th Home After Fight with the Germans.

WOUNDED IN 'NO MAN'S LAND'

Col. Hayward Praised by Sergt. Niblack, Who Says Regimental Commander Could Not Treat His Men Better—Speaks Highly of American Red Cross.

Members of the old 15th had a lively encounter with the Hun in "No Man's Land" before that memorable occasion when Private Henry Johnson and Private Needham Roberts put to flight a score or more of Germans. The bayonet wounds which Sergt. Archie Niblack of Company K, 369th Infantry, is carrying out will bear out this assertion.

Sergt. Niblack is in the city visiting his wife, who resides at 2322 Seventh avenue. He is on a furlough from the General Hospital at Ft. McPherson, Ga., where he has been receiving medical attention for several weeks.

Sergt. Archie Niblack is the first member of the old 15th to walk about in Harlem since his regiment landed in France. He is a resident of Manhattan Isle and his homecoming has created a small sensation among his many friends and acquaintances.

There are several thousand men in the 369th, and yet Sergt. Niblack is expected to tell their relatives and friends how each and every member of the regiment is getting along. Of course, this is an impossibility, but the sergeant does the best he can.

Sergt. Niblack was wounded in "No Man's Land" while a member of a scouting party in May. Although the Hun bayoneted him in the abdomen, wounding him severely, it can be said that this particular member of the Kaiser's Army has been permanently relieved from further military service. His comrades now speak of him in the past tense.

After being treated at a French Hospital for several weeks Sergt. Niblack was transferred overseas to the General Hospital at Ft. McPherson, Ga. He was granted permission to come to New York to see his wife, and to say that it is a pleasure to walk down 135th street once more is putting it mildly.

Praise for Hayward.

Sergt. Niblack is profuse in his praise of Colonel Hayward's treatment of his men, and says Capt. Hamilton Fish, Jr., is loved by every man of Company K.

"I want to take this opportunity to deny any and all statements being circulated that Colonel Hayward is not treating his men properly," Sergt. Niblack stated to an AGE representative. "There is no truth in such a report, and from what I can learn this talk has been started by men who were originally in the regiment and got out because they did not receive commissions. Colonel Hayward could not treat his men better, and I should like this fact made known, for his enemies do him a rank injustice when they speak of him otherwise.

"The French nurses gave me the very best attention, and I want to speak in high terms of the American Red Cross, which is doing a wonderful work for all soldiers and making no distinction of any kind.

"When I reached this country and was told I was to be sent to Ft. McPherson, Ga., I did not like the idea and wanted to be sent to some hospital in the East. But Colonel Babcock and his assistants have been unusually attentive to me and I want the world to know it. They have not treated me as an inferior patient on account of my color.

Proud of Johnson and Roberts.

"I was in the hospital at the time Johnson and Roberts made short work of the Germans, but I heard of their deeds of heroism and it certainly made me feel proud to learn that members of my regiment had so distinguished themselves.

"Only a few men in the regiment had died up to the time I sailed for America, and these deaths were due to natural causes. We have been very fortunate.

"In the United States I used to see a colored minister almost every time I turned, but I did not see one over in France. Colonel Hayward conducted the religious services, assisted by Major Dayton, affectionately known as 'Pop' Dayton, when I left."

Sergt. Niblack proudly exhibits a service badge which he wears on his sleeve. No one is entitled to wear this badge unless he has seen six months active service in France. Sergt. Niblack was one of the first to join the old 15th, becoming a member of the regiment in 1916.

He reports that Captain Marshal and Capt. Fillmore were in excellent health when he left France.

YANKEES PUSHING THROUGH ARGONNE

Overcoming Almost Insurmountable Obstacles in the Dense Forest Near Verdun.

REPULSE HUNS ELSEWHERE.

Col. Sherrill Improvises Chicken Wire Bridge.

N Y STANDARD UNION
CR 2. 1918

WITH THE AMERICANS WEST OF VERDUN, Oct. 2.—While activity in the remainder of the line is confined to repulsing counter-attacks and consolidating newly won positions, the Americans in the depth of the Argonne forest are shoving forward somewhat to-day.

Overcoming almost insurmountable obstacles, they are rectifying their line. The density of the forest renders liaison most difficult, but each group goes forward as rapidly as possible, maintaining communication with the aid of runners.

Continuous counter attacks in the region of Apremont resulted in certain territory changing hands four or five times. At the end of the whirlwind fighting the Americans had won a slight advantage. The Boche, it is estimated, had suffered heavy losses, prisoners saying that some companies lost fully 30 per cent, of their effectives. Heavy counter attacks north of Nantillos also were repulsed. 96

All Kinds of Huns Used.

The Germans continue to reinforce their lines with fresh troops. Troops ordinarily used exclusively for road-building are among the prisoners as well as some from crack divisions.

Wire bridges, upon which American soldiers walked over the deepest network of barbed wire in the Argonne forest are among the unique features of the recent fighting. In some places the Boche wires were interwoven in the underbrush to the depth of a hundred yards. They were practically impassable and held up our advance more than the enemy resistance until Col. Sherrill, of the engineers, already famous as the author of several army textbooks on engineering, devised a scheme to overcome them. It consisted of rolls of chicken wire, reinforced with iron bars and strips of steel. These were thrown over the entanglements. The Americans walked across the chicken wire easily and rapidly. The colonel said he knew the bridges were good because he had walked on them himself.

Boches Lose Dominating Position.

The taking of Montfaucon deprived the Boche of a position dominating everything from south of the old line to north of Vonziers. So long as the Americans threaten a further advance, the Germans' ultimate retirement to the Vonziers line is inevitable. The Kriemhilde-Stellung line is understood to be only partly completed. If it is broken the Americans are likely to pour through some distance, necessitating the employment of still additional reinforcements to prevent them from breaking through entirely.

New York troops are operating in the Argonne. At the other extreme of the line, Illinois units are advancing along the left bank of the Meuse and have reached the outskirts of Breuilles. Colored troops are participating in the French advance on the west side of the Argonne.

In the centre the Boches are hurrying in reinforcements by battalions, companies and even platoons. The American artillery is badly smashing up the enemys transport.

The Americans at Bois-de-Mont captured a balloon shed and three balloons.

Four Pennsylvanians captured seventy-five Germans without any help.

American aviators are dropping food and cigarettes on the front lines when the troops are without rations.

The Negro and the War

Two Editorials Reprinted in Compliance With Many Requests

PHILA PUBLIC LEDGER
MARCH 4

From The North American of June 1, 1918

Recently at Camp Upton Major General Bell addressed a certain regiment of soldiers, and among other things said to them: "This is the best disciplined and best drilled and best spirited regiment that has been under my command at this cantonment. I predicted last fall that Colonel Moss would have the best regiment at Camp Upton, and you men have made my prediction come true. I would lead you in battle against any army in the world with every confidence in the outcome."

He was speaking to an up-standing, fine-looking body of men. Every face in front of him glowed with pride at his praise. A feeling fully justified, for every private in this 367th regiment and most of the officers are negroes.

They call themselves "The Buffaloes," and undoubtedly when they get in action on the other side the Huns unfortunate enough to be pitted against them will thereafter think of a buffalo as a something to be avoided at any cost.

This 367th is the only regiment in the new national army with a name, regimental stationery and a regimental swagger stick. It is one of the few with a regimental song and a regimental pennant. And the person who thinks these are matters of small consequence exhibits a lack of knowledge concerning the nature and needs of men who are going to fight.

This person perhaps was puzzled by Pershing's recent request that all regimental bands be increased from twenty-eight to fifty pieces and that a bugle and drum corps be created for every infantry regiment, followed immediately by an order to that effect from the general staff of the army. Yet, despite the president's memorable advice against permitting anything of a sentimental nature to seep into this "practical" business of war, most of us know by this time that morale is mothered and fed by just such things.

And every one knows morale is as necessary to military success as men and munitions.

There has been a good deal of talk about the part the negro should or would play in this war—much of it as irresponsible as the bulk of "war talk." It is on a par with the assurance lately given us by a man of high standing in the community to the effect that our soldiers were being landed in France at the rate of 25,000 a day. Or the "fact," vouched by a lawyer, that the missing collier Cyclops is secretly safe at League Island, after a wild adventure in mutiny on the high seas.

In the course of such talk we have heard that the negro doesn't make a good soldier; that he is too lazy, too emotional or too unresponsive to discipline to be counted upon as a fighting factor.

The facts in the case indicate exactly the opposite. The superlative praise we have quoted from General Bell, whose rank and long experience as a soldier lend added weight to such words, is amply backed by the record of history. As Lieutenant McKaine, himself a Buffalo, has said in an article in the Outlook, the traditions of the negro as a soldier may be traced "in the history of the great Chaka in the valley of the Nile thousands of years ago; Hannibal, 'the greatest of tacticians,' in the war between Carthage and Rome; L'Ouverture in the Haitian rebellion against the mighty Napoleon; Attucks as the first casualty in America's first battle against the tyranny of George III on Boston Common; black sailors with Perry on Lake Erie; Black Samson at Brandywine; Peter Salem at Bunker Hill; Carney at Fort Wagner; the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth regiments of infantry and the Ninth and Tenth cavalry at El Caney and San Juan in Cuba and during the insurrection in the Philippines; and the feat of the Tenth cavalry at Carrizal while with the punitive expedition in Mexico."

And Colonel Moss, of the Buffaloes, a southerner by birth and one of the best-known military authors in the world today, has said:

If properly trained and instructed, the colored man makes as good a soldier as the world has ever seen. The history of the negro in all of our wars, including our Indian campaigns, shows this. He is by nature of a happy disposition; he is responsive and tractable; he is very amenable to discipline; he takes pride in his uniform; he has faith and confidence in his leader; he possesses physical courage—all of which are valuable military assets.

The secret of making an efficient soldier out of the colored man lies in knowing the qualities he possesses that are military assets, and which I have named, and then appealing to and developing them—this is, utilizing them to the greatest extent possible.

Make the colored man feel that you have faith in him, and then, by sympathetic and conscientious training and instruction, help him to fit himself in a military way to vindicate that faith, to "make good." Be strict with him, but treat him fairly and justly, making him realize that in your dealings with him he will always be given a square deal. Commend him when he does well and punish him when he is refractory—that is to say, let him know that he will always get what is coming to him, whether it be reward or punishment. In other words, treat and handle the colored man as you would any other human being out of whom you would make a good soldier, out of whom you would get the best there is in him, and you will have as good a soldier as history has ever known—a man who will drill well, shoot well, march well, obey well, fight well—in short a man who will give a good account of himself in battle, and who will conduct and behave himself properly in camp, in garrison and in other places.

This, we think, should dispose of any doubts as to the fitness of the American negro for a part in this fight for freedom. Of course, the military department of the government and the country at large still must put up with the baseless accusations of those who would like to seize upon a national emergency as an opportunity for settling the race question.

Because of the activities of this small but insistent group, the secretary of war six months ago found it necessary to publicly call attention to "a certain amount of overworked hysteria" on the part of such agitators. These trouble-makers had much to say about unjust discrimination, and based their complaints chiefly upon the allegation that only colored draftees were being assigned to duty in service battalions. Not only was this statement untrue, but, as shown at the time, unfitted to the purpose of those who disseminated it. For, as Secretary Baker said, "There is far less hazard to the life of the soldier connected with the service battalion than of the soldier who faces shot and shell on the firing line."

Nearly 100,000 negro soldiers now are serving or preparing to serve in the new national army. Several hundred of these have won officers' commissions—more than half of those who completed the course at the reserve officers' training camp at Fort Des Moines, Ia., having been commissioned.

We believe few, if any, of these have any other feeling than that they would prefer to be on the firing line. And we have no doubt that such of these soldiers as are sent there will account for themselves in the same fine way that negro fighters always have.

There is, so far as we know, no reason to question either the fighting power or the effectiveness of these soldiers. Of course, the negro in this country has had comparatively small experience in the business of war. And in view of the past experiences of this race, which was introduced to civilization thru slavery and cruel exploitation, it would be reasonable to assume theoretically that the negro might not make the best sort of fighter.

As we have briefly shown, the facts of history more than discount any such theory. And as we have reason to believe from the reports of other negro regiments besides the Buffaloes, the American negro is going to perform a part in this war which will far outshine any previous service on his part.

In the first place, already he is injecting into the new army a spirit which, if spread among all our soldiers in like degree, could not but greatly add to their effectiveness. Of all the men in our fighting forces, he is the one who most effectively uses the power of song. And this is a potent factor.

As an officer recently said: "The Metropolitan Opera Company, the Boston Opera Company, the Chicago Opera Company, the Hampton Quartet, the Fisk Jubilee Singers—you think some of these groups can sing. You're wrong. They can't. You have never heard any singing unless you marched with the Twenty-fourth across the border after Villa in the spring of 1916."

And to this may be added the testimony of a brigadier general who, after listening to a regiment of negro soldiers sing "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" in a western cantonment, said, thru tears, "I did not know there was music like that in this world." Surely, backed by such a spirit, our eyes shal see "the glory of the coming of the Lord"!

Undoubtedly under such training as they now are receiving the negro forces in our new army will gain for their race the highest distinction they yet have obtained. As for many years they have made the best soldiers of our regular army—and this is the opinion of the military organization itself—so now they probably will match in heroism, courage and effectiveness the finest of the white forces.

For the first time since the war which liberated them from slavery and gave them citizenship, they have a chance on a large scale to show how much they really appreciate freedom. As their people on every side are being encouraged and helped forward and aided in freeing themselves from the conditions of life which make for inefficiency and immorality, so in turn these regiments now have gone or will go to free the world from intolerable conditions which threaten a worse slavery than that which their fathers endured.

It is a wonderful chance for a people to evidence appreciation of a service rendered them. And we believe it will be eagerly seized and admirably used.

Surely regiments like the Buffaloes have it in their power to do something more than fight when they get to France. They have it in their power to refresh and renew in war-wearied comrades of other countries that spirit without which no military organization can be effective.

We have heard more than one story of troops going into action with a song on their lips. The most thrilling of these stories is yet to come, however. For when our negro soldiers march forward to the music of their own voices, a new note shall have been sounded. And its echo will carry not only to other fighters near at hand, but to non-combatant millions far away, whose effectiveness is to be measured largely by the degree to which they can be inspired with the vision of democracy triumphant.

Said to be in French Hospital—French General Attends Funeral of Soldier of Old 8th Illinois.—Many Exploits of Chicago Boys Told by War Correspondent on the Scene.

BY JUNIUS B. WOOD.

Special Cable to the Chicago Daily News

(Copyright, 1918, by The Chicago Daily News Co.)

With the American Army at the Front, Aug. 11, 1918 (delayed).—"If we could only get into the big push we'd show what we can do, but our turn will come later," said American colored soldiers whom I saw today. Like many other American units, they are on that portion of the front which must be content to "bite" several kilometers of the German line daily. Still, there is enough fighting to satisfy the ordinary man, and these colored troops are winning the praise of the leaders of their French allies with whom they are regimented.

A unit o..cered by former New Yorkers is just at present the "hottest." These Colored Americans, with another unit, all of whose ocers are Colored, are at a place a few kilometers distant from a point rapidly assuming strategic importance. The first unit achieved distinction a few weeks ago in holding the extreme left where the Germans attempted to drive with such valor. Many men and officers covered themselves with glory.

Notes of the Old 8th Illinois.

When I had completed a long automobile trip half way across France I reached the headquarters of the one of these units that I knew best. Lieut. Franklin McFarland of 327 Federal street, Chicago, had just returned from a midnight raid in "no man's land." These soldiers were holding trenches where in places the German lines were no more than a hundred yards distant.

In a hidden emplacement in one of these spots a German Maxim gun persisted in sniping every time a head appeared at an exposed place in our trenches. A patrol had previously located the gun and Lieut. McFarland's party set out for the purpose of ending the sniping. It was just ready to start when Sergt. John Ingram of Chicago appeared, equipped with a gas mask and a sack of grenades, and insisted on accompanying the patrol.

Though Ingram returned with his skin whole, he left behind his mask and steel helmet in the flight which followed. The patrol stalked through "no man's land" and was just ready to rush the gun when instead of one, three opened fire. The men threw grenades and then dropped into shell holes and fired until the guns were silenced. Then they retired. The Germans were making the ground as light as day with rockets, so the advance of er-enforcements to capture the guns was impossible.

French General at Funeral

When the first soldier of this regiment—a Chicago boy—was killed by German fire a few days ago a French general attended the funeral services and issued a general order praising the individual soldier, also saying: "This American unit gives proof of the liveliest desire for information, the men maneuver with energy, spirit and care and exhibit the beeutiful military qualities with which the Americans daily impress me."

Col. Denison Believed to Be Ill.

The colonel commanding this regiment has been active since its organization. He is a lawyer at home. He is ill with heart trouble at the army hospital at present.

Chicago Colored Boys Fighting Gallantly.

Ever since the other of these Colored units stopped the end of the German push it has been nip and tuck day and night, with constant shelling of the trenches back of the support areas. The men stood up like veterans. The commanding officer accompanied by his orderlies, Privates Stillman Hanna, former butler at the home of Mrs. Parlesa Harper, 1 West 67th street, New York, and Ernest Hunter, a runner of the Salem Crescent club, 321 59th street, New York, reconnoitering a position, advanced several hundred yards into no man's land in daylight before he discovered his situation. Hanna's helmet was pierced by a fragment of shell, but his head was uninjure d. They returned precipitably through the shelling which followed and were safe. The only German encountered was a corpse that had been there so long that the hobnails of its boots were rusted.

To the Front on Stretchers.

An epidemic of Spanish influenza gripped the regiment. At that time Capt. James Dugald White, Capt. F. W. Cobb, Lieut, R. M. Roland and Second Lieutenant P. M. Clendemen were carried to the front on stretchers and continued to direct their men during the critical hours of the fighting. All these men are from New York, as are the others whose actions are briefly related below.

Other Instances.

Lieut. Harold Landon, whose mother was recently killed by a long range shell in a church in Paris, with Private Daniel W. Lewis and Lieut. William S. Keenan, got out the dead and wounded mules when their supply train was struck by shells, hitched up others and drove through the barrage to the front, making it possible to hold the position.

Private Samuel Jackson led his men through the barrage and several of them were wounded. He returned to the supply train and brought up the mules through the same fire. Sergt. Charles Risk, when he reached the front, discovered that wagons had been left in three places. He made three trips through the barrage. Half the animals were killed, but he brought up all the wagons.

Knocked Down, Keeps Fighting.

Sergt. Robert Collins was knocked down by an explosion as he rushed out of an abri (shelter) during the shelling and was dazed, but refused to be evacuated. He remained until the fighting was finished directing his squad.

Private Arthur Simpson returned 600 yards through a barrage, when a comrade was struck by a shell and his mask was torn and he was gassed. brought up stretchers and started back carrying his gassed comrade when a shell killed the other stretcher bearer and the man they were acrrying.

Private Howard Gailard crawled out over the paapet under fire, when he was unable to fire at two hostile groups, with a machine gun, and started shooting from the hip. He stopped both advances.

Capt. Leslie Shaw, commanding a machine gun company, which was stationed at the top of an abri, which was under high explosive, machine gun and grenade fire, kept in touch with each gun, encouraging his men.

Corporal Frank Harden, second in command of the machine guns, worked under the fire of two stationary hostile patrols until he had located them. Then he sent up rockets disclosing their location to the artillery.

Take Machine Gun Apart.

Private Smithfield Jones and Geo. Woods took apart their machine gun when it jammed after firing fourteen clips, re-assembled it and resumed firing, all the time under fire.

Private H. D. Brown and Private Patterson were in a fight in which the telephone wires were cut after the bombardment started. Brown insisted on going out of the dugout and repairing the wires, though French officers cautioned them against entering the barrage. The two men repaired twenty-five breaks and restored communication.

Private Joseph Rawlins made a 900-yard trip through a barrage, taking a mesage to a company which enabled it to protect its exposed flank.

Second Lieutenant O. H. Parish was leading a patrol at night through the hostile trenches when a German suddenly wrenched the rifle from one of the Colored soldiers. The American grappled with him and fought with bare fists for fifteen minutes until the German fell unconscious. When Lieut. Parish brought the prisoner bac kto our lines it was discovered that he was a sergeant-major. The information secured was valuable to the French and they gave Parish a reward of 500 francs.

KEEN TO GET INTO BATTLE

Officer Would Prove Race's Right to Equality—Lilting Music of Regimental Band.

(The appended dispatch, filed by Mr. Gibbons before he was wounded in the action near Chateau Thierry, has just been released by the censor.)

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, May 25, (Delayed.)—France has sent her "Blue Devils" to America. America has now reciprocated by sending her "Black Devils" to the western front. The "Ole— —th," but now bearing a totally different and unmentionable regimental number, is in training behind the lines in France. I have just returned from a visit to their camp.

Daily I have watched from the hill slopes our sturdy blacks as they indulged in machine gun and automatic rifle practice. The reports of the machine guns across the valley sounded strange, because the men of the "Ole— —th" have introduced syncopation into their shooting, and are now able to strike the beats of "alkin' the Dog" with 100 rounds.

The regiment's inspiration to great deeds on the front was explained to me by a negro lieutenant.

"One of my men came to me several days 'ago,' he said, "and asked me why I had joined the army. He reminded me that I was above draft age and he wanted me to tell him what I was fighting for. I told him I was fighting for what the flag meant to the negroes in the United States. I told him I was fighting because I wanted other oppressed people to know the meaning of democracy and enjoy it. I told him that millions of Americans fought for four years for us negroes to get it and now it was only right that we should fight for all we were worth to help other people get the same thing.

Question of Equal Rights.

"We are supposed to have had equal rights for fifty years now, but many times we have thought that those rights have been denied us, and many times it has been held that we have never done anything to deserve them.

"I told him that now is our opportunity to prove what we can do. If we can't fight and die in this war just as bravely as white men then we don't deserve an equality with white men, and after the war we had better go back home and forget about it all. But if we can do things on the front; if we can make ourselves felt; if we can make America really proud of the Ole—then I am sure it will be the biggest possible step toward our equalization as citizens. That is what I told him, and I think he understood me. The whole (Censored) has the same spirit."

And so the strife for distinction has been inculcated to the ranks of the Old (Censored.) The men are looking forward to being known as the "Black Devils," the same as the Chasseurs have earned the right to the "Blue Devil" nickname.

These negro officers and men have tasted a new equality since arriving in France. In the village square of a small hamlet serving as headquarters I saw them mingling on the eastiest terms with the most cultivated French officers. And as officers they carry out their bearing in their personal appearance. Among no American officers in France now, even the nattiest, whose habitat is at G. H. Q., far from the dust and mud of the camps, have I seen more highly polished shoes and leathers or better pressed uniforms. Pride in the wearing of clothes is something which these negro officers did not have to learn from orders.

In the ranks there are all types of intelligence, the same as in white organizations, when men have been picked up from all walks of life. Coming up on one dusty, dusky figure on the road I invited him to a seat in the motor and asked him to guide me to Headquarters. As we rode I talked to him.

"What do you think of these French black troops?" I asked.

"Never seen them drill, but I knows we got a better band than they has," he said while particles of the English walnuts he was munching formed a white fresco about his lips. "They say though that they sure is fighting people. When we got here we found out that 2,000 of 'em had captured 50,000 Germans one night. They says they must gets crazy like in battle and throws away their rifles and goes after them bushes with knives.

"We hear that they can't keep 'em rest camps long or they go crazy. Just wants to be killing Germans all the time. Seems like they just got to see blood. If they ain't killed a German for some time they takes a knife and cuts themselves on their hand. They ain't no other way 'bout it. They sure is fighting people. They calls 'em Samboleese.'

Rivalry Hits New York.

I told Lucius that a New York negro had been in the front line trenches for six weeks and had killed many Germans, and had made a wonderful record. He received the news like a wounded man would drink vinegar.

"Yeh, I guess dat's so," he said. "But if this yeare bunch cain't kill more Germans in a night than that New York outfit can in a month, then I'm a mighty mistaken black man. You know tain't right the way they keeps us back here trainin'. Why we been in France for weeks and they say we can't get to the front for a while yet. Say, somebody else's got our place up there just now. But just wait till we get there. Them New York boys is got their white officers, but we've got officers of our own color, and if we cain't do somethin' under them they'd better take the guns away from us and give us shovels."

Everyone in the army has heard the old saw that negroes make fine troops if led by white officers. The old —th is making a great effort to show that they will be just as good soldiers, if not better, under officers of their own color. These same officers, as far as I could see, received the same respect from their men as their men would give white officers, and I have seen white American officers and officers of this (censored) drinking beer together in a nearby town.

That evening in the litle headquarters village the "old —th" band played guard mount and followed it up with a syncopated rendition of "I Don't Love Nobody," rendered with ticklish variations that started the Frenchmen and Americans alike to snapping their fingers and swaying their shoulders. I saw an old French woman knitting in a doorway swinging her rocking chair back and forth to the time of the music while her wrinkled pink face was wreathed with smiles. Jazz has found a ready home.

There was even a lighter lilt in the following piece, which sent a thrill through homesick hearts and involuntarily brought to lips the words: "By the Rivers Gently Flowing, Illinois." The last verse was repeated with slower time and fervent sweetness and was applauded by the French soldiers who have come to know and like it. Thousands of miles away from home, it sounded sweeter to me than ever before.

That band is going to lead these men to that line where there is no color line. They are going for the purpose of proving that white and black both bleed red under the Stars and Stripes.

CHEERS AS COLORED SOLDIERS MARCH

FLAG PRESENTED BY HUGHES

Colonel Promises His Men Will Prove Worthy.

BKLYN N Y STANDARD UNION
MARCH 24 1918

A solid line of determined looking men, clad in khaki, under a forest of shining steel bayonets that glistened in the bright sun like so many mirrors, that was the 367th Colored Infantry, also known as the "Buffaloes," that marched up Fifth Avenue yesterday afternoon, and at the command of "Halt" came to a stop before the Union League Club at Thirty-ninth street, where the reviewing stand was filled with many prominent men and high army officials.

Charles Evans Hughes stepped out of the throng, carrying a large silk flag, the Stars and Stripes. A cheer that can only be equaled when the returning heroes bring the news of the downfall of autocracy was heard and echoed up and down the canyon between the big buildings.

A short address praising the "Buffaloes" was made by Mr. Hughes, who presented the flag to Col. James A. Moss, commander of the regiment. The Colonel in his address thanking the Union League Club and Mr. Hughes said:

"I am sure that these men who are before us in review this afternoon will show themselves worthy of this flag and make this country proud of them. With my own hands I take this flag and present it to the Color Guard of the regiment. I know from experience with these men that that flag will never fall into disgrace as long as there is a man of this regiment left to defend it."

Crowd Takes Up Cheers.

The regiment band struck up "Star Spangled Banner," the Buffaloes smartly standing at attention, and every head in the throng uncovered. "Over There" was the next tune, and the men of the regiment and the throngs along the avenue took up the chorus until it seemed that every window along Fifth avenue was shaking, such was the volume of voices. The band then struck up a snappy march and started up the avenue at a brisk pace, followed by the regiment. As company after company filed past the reviewing stand, the command "Eyes right!" was given, and the men obeyed with a precision that showed careful training.

Library Mass of Color.

The crowd that thronged Fifth avenue was mostly made up of friends of men in the regiment, and many colored persons were to be seen. The steps of the Public Library, at Forty-second street were a mass of color, red, white and blue predominating.

The men all looked in the best of shape and marched briskly with a spring and snap that told of long training and excellent condition. The men marched up Fifth avenue to 110th street and then through Lenox avenue, and were dismissed in Harlem.

COLORED TROOPERS FROM UNITED STATES MAKE GREAT RECORD AS BAYONET FIGHTERS IN BIG DRIVE

New York Age 6-18-18

According to despatches from London, Negro soldiers from the United States have been declared to be the greatest of all bayonet fighters by the French. The consensus of opinion here is that the colored Americans to make such an enviable reputation are the old 15th from New York and the 8th Illinois, who are brigaded with the French.

The despatch from London reads:

American Negro troops, brigaded with the army of General Gouraud, east of Rheims, are doing such remarkable work in action with their bayonets that they now are said to excel all other men on the fighting front in their use of these weapons.

It is said they are particularly fond of this style of fighting, and have broken all bayonet records on the western front.

So pleased are French commanders with the work of these men from the United States that all Negro regiments arriving from America will receive hearty welcomes to the fighting lines.

Private Henry Johnson and Private Needham Roberts, of the old 15th, showed the Germans how Negro soldiers could effectively use the bolo knife and now our colored troopers are causing consternation in the ranks of the Hun with the bayonet.

Reception of 367th Infantry as It Marched Up Fifth Avenue Was a Remarkable Tribute.

BROOKLYN N Y EAGLE
MARCH 24 1918

The 367th Infantry, Colonel James A. Moss commanding, marched for over seven miles through Manhattan yesterday afternoon between walls of solidly packed humanity. It was a great day for the regiment. New York turned out to see and cheer the colored soldiers. The reception by white and colored people was a remarkable one. The city does not hold enough negroes to constitute even a noticeable minority in the crowd, and the cheers which greeted the marchehs came from whites, who recognized in the soldiers a crack fighting unit.

The regiment formed in the Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory and marched through Twenty-fifth street to Fifth avenue. As Colonel Moss and his staff swung into the avenue there was a burst of applause that seemed to ripple ahead of the marching column during its entire march. The regiment halted at the Union League Club, where the chorus of 1,000 men who will sing this afternoon and evening at the Manhattan Opera House sung "The Star Spangled Banner," while Charles Evans Hughes, president of the club, presented the regiment with a stand of colors, the gift of the club. It will be recalled that the Union League Club during the Civil War equipped a regiment of negroes, and this recognition of the 367th is but another instance of the interest taken by the club in the colored race.

With the ceremony of presenting the colors over the regiment passed in review before Governor Whitman, the reviewing officer. The club tendered a luncheon to the guests before the parade. Colonel Moss and Lieutenant Doane attended the function.

At One Hundred and Tenth street the regiment swung east and paraded through the section of Harlem chiefly populated by colored people. Here they were received as heroes. After completing the route of march the regiment entered the subway at 125th street and returned to the armory, where they were dismissed.

The chorus will assemble at the Manhattan Opera House this afternoon at 1:30 o'clock for the matinee, which begins at 2:15; a performance will also be given at 8:15 o'clock. The chorus will feature the old-time Southern melodies. A part of the programme is devoted to specialty acts recruited from the regiment.

PEDGED TO FLAG'S HONOR

Three Thousand Sing 'Star-Spangled Banner' and 'Over There'— Soon to Go to France.

N Y C TIMES
MARCH 24 1918

New York's negro regiment, which in army records is the 367th Infantry, National Army of the United States, paraded up Fifth Avenue yesterday afternoon at full war strength, while thousands of persons cheered. More than 3,000 men were in line when the command, led by its own band and bugle corps, swung into the avenue at Twenty-fifth Street shortly before 2 o'clock. So many negro fighters were never before seen at one time in New York, and when the parade was over and Colonel James A. Moss, the commander of the unit, had accepted a stand of colors from the Union League Club, the unanimous verdict of the great crowd that had seen the regiment was: "They'll do."

A feature of the exercises was the singing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "Over There" by the negro soldiers with a rythm and ring that will never be forgotten by those who heard it.

It was probably the last time—as it was the first—that the regiment will be seen in New York until the war is over and the Americans some sailing home. This fact was realized by the great majority of those who cheered the men as they proceeded snappily and in perfect formation up Fifth Avenue, and it was indicated in the remarks made by Colonel Moss when, on behalf of the regiment, he accepted the colors from Governor Whitman. Colonel Moss said that the next time the regiment appeared in New York it would be to give back to colors, "sanctified by victory," to the Union League Club, to be forever held in trust as a memorial of the 367th Infantry.

The regiment paraded fifteen companies strong, and it was a business-like looking organization. There was no foolishness, and the men showed in their faces that they realized that they had a mighty serious job ahead. The regiment will not be at Camp Upton long and is already designated as one of the units of the 90th Division of negro troops which will be commanded when organized by Major Gen. Charles J. Ballau, U. S. A.

Officered by Negroes.

With the exception of the field officers the regiment is officered entirely by negroes, many of them veterans of the four famous regular army regiments of negro fighters. Colonel Moss, who is from New Orleans, a West Point graduate, and the best writer of military textbooks in this country, walked alone at the head of the regiment. For eighteen years Colonel Moss, who is still in his forties, has served as a commander of negro troops, and he maintains that better fighters do not live.

"This regiment," he said to Governor Whitman, "will live up to the best traditions of the negro soldier. It will be an honor to the 12,000,000 negroes who are a part of our citizenry, and it will come back with its colors unstained. Of that there is no shadow of doubt."

As the head of the command passed the Waldorf throngs from the windows of that hotel cheered, and others in the streets below joined in the ovation. It was the same all along the line. The windows of every store and dwelling were filled, while the people in the streets were massed six and seven deep on the sidewalks.

The reviewing stand was in front of the Union League Club at Thirty-ninth Street and Fifth Avenue, and Governor Whitman was the reviewing officer. Those on the stand with him included Major Gen. William A. Mann, commanding the Eastern Department of the Army; Brig. Gen. Evan M. Johnson, until the return of Gen. Bell acting commander at Cap Upton; Adjt. Gen. Charles H. Sherrill, Major Schuyler Colfax, and Major Gen. ~~Daniel Appleton~~, N. G., N. Y.

The head of the regiment halted just north of the clubhouse. The other platoons halted at the same time and Colonel Moss and his regimental staff officers took their places in the middle of the street facing the flag-draped reviewing stand.

Governor Whitman, General Sherrill, General Johnson, and the members of the Governor's Staff left the stand and grouped themselves in the middle of the street facing the officers of the 367th.

The colors that were to be presented to the regiment were carried by General Sherrill and Major Colfax. They took positions just behind the Governor. Silence fell over the gread crowd as the Governor began to speak in a voice that was heard for a block in each direction.

Governor Whitan's Address.

"Colonel Moss, Officers and Men of the 367th Infantry of the National Army, Geneleman of the Union League Club, and My Other Fellow-Americans:" said the Governor, "four times have colors been presented by this famed club to colored soldiers upon the very ground where you soldiers stand today. Four times have those colors come back to this historic spot, sometimes tattered and tori, it may be, but always honored and gloerified.

'On behalf of the Union League Club, I commit to your keeping the most sacred trust ever committed to man—the flag of the United States of America. I charge you by all that is sacred to defend this banner with all the strength and power that God has given you; but in doing so I feel and know already that you will never permit it to be dishonored, to shame yourselves or shame those who have given it to you today. Your country will trust you to be true to yourselves, true to the land of your birth, true to the record of those other soldiers of your race whose valorous deeds have brought glory to these Stars and Stripes.

"Go forth and fight for the cause of humanity as those other colored patriots have done, but when you return from the forts, the trenches, the camps, the march, the battle line, bring this flag back without one stripe dishonored, one star obscured.

"Bring it back victorious," cried the Governor.

"They'll do it; hurrah for the Buffaloes," was shouted from the crowd.

"May God bless you and keep you," the Governor added, "wherever your duty may call you, and bring you back to us to share with all your fellow-soldiers, white or black, who fight under this same old flag of freedom, the abundant measure of praise and pride which your country will then feel for you."

Colonel Moss's Response.

Colonel Moss advanced toward Governor Whitman and took from his hand the new colors.

"Your Excellency, gentlemen of the Union League Club, and fellow-American citizens," he said, "in accepting this stand of colors I wish to say on behalf of the 367th Regiment of Infantry, which it is my pleasure to command, that we prize this banner more than we can express. But we prize even more the spirit which actuated the givers. Not only does the presentation indicate the delicate respect these givers feel for our colored soldiers, but it also exemplifies the friendship this club has always felt for the soldier and patriot who sprang from slavery—a friendship based on the principle of a square deal for all men.

"That the colored men of this command will protect and honor this flag by night and day, throughout long marches, at play or in a clutch with death itself, is something that goes without saying, and let me say to you today that when this war is all over there is going to be another presentation of colors here beside this clubhouse. Mark you well what I say to you in this presence today, for I am an officer with eighteen years' experience with colored soldiers, having commanded them in two campaigns; these men are going to present you men in the Union League Club with colors on their return from France. The colors they will present you we want you to hang upon your walls, where they can tell with silent eloquence in all the years to come a story of valor and unutterable patriotism to which all Americans, including our 12,000,000 of black citizens, can listen with a thrill of pride and satisfaction.

"And now I take with my own hands this priceless banner and I place it in the hands of our color bearers beside our individual regimental colors which we are going to take 'over there.'"

When Colonel Moss concluded his speech of acceptance he handed the colors to the regimental color bearers and immediately the band started "The Star Spangled Banner." The regiment song leader mounted a big dry-goods box, and the whole regiment began to sing the words of the anthem, thousands of those on the sidewalks joining in. The singers were massed along six blocks in Fifth Avenue, and when the last verse was finished, the song leader signalled to the band and once again the 3,000 soldier singers lifted their voices; this time it was "Over There," sung as never before sung in New York.

Famous Fighting Regiment Continues to Cover Itself With Glory in Champagne District Where It Was Commended by General Foch in Person

With the French Army in France June 11.—The former Fifteenth Regiment from New York, now brigaded with the French and operating in the Champagne district for some weeks now has again covered itself with glory.

New York News 6-13-18

The strongest effort made by the Germans in the course of last night and this morning in their new offensive was in the direction of the railroad connecting Estrees-St. Denis and Montdidier. But they met with such resistance that they renounced for the moment their attempts in this region.

Colored troops, supported by Allied tanks, which did great execution, delivered a brilliant counter attack in this vicinity and recaptured the crest running southwest of Marqueglise.

Allies Recapture Mery.

Late last night Allied infantry reentered the village of Mery, which had formed a protective point for the German advance through the valley.

Seeing their progress blocked on his side, the Germans turned toward the other flank and nearly reached Ribecourt, to the north of which place the hottest encounters occurred in the woods of Dreslincourt.

The enemy's possession of the height of Lequvillon, below Theisscourt, enabled him to filter troops through the small valleys, making the position of the Allies occupying the small hillocks perilous and causing them to retire.

The whole countryside hereabouts is dotted with these small hills, which are called mountains, forming a kind of bastions, which, when turned from one side or the other, become absolute traps for the occupants. Most of the valleys between them run toward the banks of the River Oise.

Masses Mowed Down.

The fighting was almost unprecelented in fury yesterday. The Germans, continuing to attack in compact masses, were mowed down by the Allied gunfire. Wave succeeds wave in the attack, and when a position is finally taken by the enemy it is frequently promptly retaken by the French. In these counter attacks the French invariably found the ground littered with German dead, the bodies often lying in heaps.

GREAT OVATION FOR NEGROES ON PARADE

EVENING JOURNAL MARCH 23, 1918

Colored Regiment of Draft Army from Yaphank Makes Splendid Showing.

"Hurrah for our colored soldiers! Hurrah for the Buffaloes!" was the shout taken up by thousands at the doors of the Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory, as the negro soldiers of the Three Hundred and Sixty-seventh Regiment of Infantry, National Army, stepped briskly out to the crash of their band this afternoon on their first regimental parade by themselves in this city. Two thousand men were in the line.

"The Three Hundred and Sixty-seventh Infantry is a well-trained regiment and ready for the fray in France," declared Colonel James A. Moss, proudly, as he took his place at the head of the procession. With him were his staff officers, Captain Fred Bull, Captain Charles E. Appleton, of the Supply Department; Major Charles L. Mitchell, Major M. Burgee, Captain F. R. Norris, of the Headquarters Company, and Captain John Scott, acting major.

The colored soldiers looked worthy of the highest praise, as they lined up in platoon formation, waiting their turn to swing into line. No one could doubt that they would give a good account of themselves on the field of battle and maintain the traditions made by men of their race as members of the United States armed forces.

The line was made up of fifteen companies, including the regimental sanitary corps, and was formed into two columns. The regiment's famous brass band led the first column, while the second column marched to the tunes of the Fifteenth Infantry's musicians, also colored.

The shouting started as soon as the head of the first column swung from the armory door and the big crowds, largely composed of colored citizens, kept the applause going from the start. The troops caught the inspiration and swept forward like veterans on parade.

The marchers passed first to Union Square and then turned northward along Fifth avenue. Great crowds were waiting for them all along the line of march. Advice as to what they should do with the Kaiser greeted them on every hand and the soldiers smiled grimly at the

The old 8th Illinois has not had a chance at "big scrapping" on the same scale as the old 15th from New York, according to the New York Evening Sun correspondent, who, in writing about the colored American doughboys, says:

11/24/18

"Negro troops from America already have established themselves in Europe as being cool and reliable fighters in the front line. Both American and French commands so testify, and if the enemy ever discovered who it was that held part of the line through Argonne Forest when the Boches failed to get through some time ago, the German command has a decidedly high respect for American Negro infantry.

"Up and down the line, after the test of a year's service, you hear no doubts expressed. The darky doughboys have made good in the line as well as behind. They have proved themselves cool and brave soldiers in the trenches, and gentlemanly when back at rest in French towns. You are continually running into units of these colored chaps as you travel up and down the line from Switzerland to Flanders.

"Down in a little town some miles back of Verdun a large unit of these troops, all from Chicago or thereabouts, have been stationed. They had come back to rest, after a long period in the Argonne Forest trenches. Like their predecessors, a Negro unit from New York, they had made a hit with the French officers in high command of the sector. Unlike the New York Negroes, these Chicago boys had encountered no big fighting, and they were disappointed at being taken from the trenches before being given a real chance to show what they could do.

The French Like Them.

"The French officers explained that good soldiers can be recognized just as well when they are holding the lines as when they are fighting, but the darky doughboys were still disappointed. Finally the French general came down to review the Negro outfit. Down by the creek they went through some snappy exercises and the French general was delighted. When the review as it had been planned was finished the general turned to the American colonel.

"If I were an American general what would I do now," asked the Frenchman.

"'Most anything,' replied the colonel. 'These boys will do anything you wish.'

"'Well, suppose the Germans were across the creek,' replied the general. 'I'd like to have this nearest company attack them.'

"The captain of the nearest company was given the order, and he marched his men across the meadow, where they suddenly disappeared. Pretty soon a whistle sounded, and the company was up and running toward the creek. Only a minute, and then they dropped, waiting, then running, always skirmishing in the latest approved French fashion.

"After a bit of flank movement by a couple of platoons, the supposed German positions along the creek were stormed and taken. The French general was delighted. Finally he said, 'My oldest veterans could do it no better, even if they were warned it was on the program, and your boys did that extemporaneously.' The general remembered the review, and a few days later these colored chaps from Chicago received a fine letter from him, congratulating them on their esprit de corps and their work.

"It was interesting to see how these colored boys mixed with the French inhabitants of the village with whom the Americans were billeted. The French folk like them and felt highly pleased at the way they learned French. They are getting extremely fluent, and it fits entirely with their scheme of things to use all French forms of politeness."

OUR NEGRO SOLDIERS

America has several regiments of colored men on the firing line in France. Some of them are regulars, belonging to organizations with splendid records in all the conflicts in which the United States has been engaged since the emancipation proclamation. The question has often been asked, especially by our friends of the South, "Will the negroes fight?" The answer has been given on many a hard fought field. When properly led and given a fair chance it has been shown over and over again that the American negro has no superior as a soldier.

Everyone knows that in Washington's little army at Monmouth, at Valley Forge and Yorktown there were many negroes and the great commander more than once commended them for their bravery, devotion and patience under all conditions. In the Civil war negro regiments on many occasions showed themselves to be the bravest of the brave and although there was a tremendous prejudice against them in both the North and the South these colored men in the Union army won the respect and admiration of all who served with them for the way they carried themselves in the face of danger.

What the negro cavalry regiments have done in our Indian wars and in the war with Spain our history shows. In Cuba it was a negro cavalry regiment of the regular army which is credited with having saved the day at San Juan, for which it received scant praise, and the heroic conduct of the 24th regular infantry, another colored regiment, which volunteered to a man to guard the fever camp at Siboney, which was looked upon as an assignment of the most dangerous kind, has been commented upon over and over again by those who have written of this campaign.

Now from France comes further testimony as to the bravery of the negro soldier. Privates Henry Jones and Needham Roberts, colored members of the old 15th New York regiment of colored men, were on picket duty when they were suddenly attacked by an overwhelming force of veteran German troops. These men stood their ground, fought a hand to hand conflict, in which both of them were seriously wounded, continued to make use of such weapons as they had until they had accounted for many of the attacking force and put the others to flight. Henry Jones' wife who lives in Albany said of her husband, "Bill ain't big, nor nothin' like that, but boy, he can go some." And in this instance "Bill" proved that his wife's estimate of him was correct. These two colored soldiers have been decorated by the French commander and mentioned in the despatches of Gen. Pershing. The people of their race have good reason to be proud of them, but it is no disparagement of them to say that most American officers believe their comrades in the other colored regiments in France are made of the same stuff and if the occasion offers will show themselves equally courageous and determined.

It will be pleasing to the Southern critics, who have always had a prejudice against the negro soldiers, to read what is being said in the French and English newspapers today about Privates Jones and Roberts. The color line is not drawn in either England or France as it is in this country and both nations have employed colored troops who have won a reputation in this war for bravery unexcelled by any of their white comrades. America has many more colored troops who will be sent over there to take their place in the armies which are fighting for liberty and freedom and we haven't a doubt in the world about the record they will make for themselves when their opportunity arrives.

GENERAL PERSHING REPORTS INSTANCE OF GREAT BRAVERY OF TWO COLORED TROOPERS

PASSAIC N J NEWS
MAY 20, 1918

Washington, May 20.—General Pershing's communique today brought its best story, so far, of the valor and sacrifice of American blood on the battlefields of France. It also gave eloquent testimony to the spirit of democracy which knows no race nor color.

It told of the gallant death of Major Raoul Lufbery, premier American ace of the Flying Corps, gentleman globe trotter, and one of the first flyers of the celebrated Lafayette Escadrille. It told also of the heroic fight of two American negro soldiers, both wounded, who withstood a raiding party of twenty Germans, and saved their comrades from surprise and capture.

Notwithstanding these two incidents, General Pershing referred to yesterday as a "quiet day."

The communique follows:

Headquarters American Expeditionary Forces, May 19, 1918:

"Section A—Aside from the activity of the air forces on both sides, the day was quiet at all points occupied by our troops. Our aviators brought down two hostile machines.

"Section B—Reports in hand show a notable instance of bravery and devotion shown by two soldiers of an American colored regiment operating in a French sector. Before daylight on May 15, Private Henry Johnson and Private Roberts, while on sentry duty at some distance from one another, were attacked by a German raiding party estimated at twenty men, who advanced in two groups, attacking at once from flank and rear.

"Both men fought bravely in hand to hand encounters, one resorting to the use of his bolo knife after his rifle jammed and further fighting with bayonet and butt became impossible. There is evidence that at least one and probably a second German was severely cut. A third is known to have been shot.

"Attention is drawn to the fact that the colored sentries were first attacked and continued fighting after receiving wounds, and despite the use of granades by superior force. They should be given credit for preventing, by their bravery, the capture of any of our men. Three of our men were wounded, two by grenades. All are recovering and the wounds in two cases are slight.

"Major Lufbery was killed in flight during which he had been in combat. He was seen to fall from his machine which itself fell a short distance from him. He was possibly wounded or dead before he fell. Earlier reports stated that he was at the time engaged in a long running fight and was flying upside down at 2,000 feet.

"Last night one of our aviators engaged two German planes and brought down one in the vicinity of Apremont.

"This morning Lieutenant Douglass Campbell, flying at 4,500 metres, brought down a hostile biplane in the vicinity of Flirey. The hostile plane fell within our lines.

"On May 18 a descendant of one of the French officers who served with the American Revolutionary Forces, presented in the name of the descendants of all such officers, a stand of National and Regimental colors to two regiments of a newly arrived American division. These flags bore the inscription:

"From the sons of the French champion for American liberty to the American champion for France and humanity."

MAY 20, 1918

The Thirteenth New York Infantry (colored), led by Colonel William Haywood, the Public Service Commissioner, and including a battalion of Brooklyn men, is in the thick of the fighting in France. Cable dispatches received here today tell how members of it have upheld the proudest traditions of their race and describe the high type of bravery displayed by two of its soldiers who, though desperately wounded, beat off an attack made by more than a score of Germans on an advanced post of the American sector.

The two infantrymen have been awarded the French war cross. What they did showed such unflinching courage in the face of great odds that their deeds will live long after them. One of them was a railroad porter before he joined the Army, the other was an elevator boy in this city.

Henry Johnson was the ex-railroad porter and he hailed from Albany. Needham Roberts was the elevator boy.

Circumstances more trying than those they were called upon to face can hardly be imagined. They had to withstand a surprise attack on a dark night while they stood in the mud in the loneliness of the advanced post. Roberts, sorely wounded, sank into the mud, but still threw hand grenades, and one of these literally blew a fleeing German into bits. Johnson, wounded in three places, fought like a tiger with rifle and trench knife. When the enemy were at close quarters he threw aside his rifle, whipped out his knife, and slashed it down on the head of a German whose fingers were just twining themselves about the throat of his comrade. Then he turned and disembowled another. The desperate fight put up by the two men was too much for the Germans, who fled incontinently. Then, and only then, Roberts fainted.

After the fight Lieutenant Richardson Pratt of Brooklyn, a member of the well-known local family, had the two colored heroes removed on stretchers and they are now in process of recovery at a French hospital. In telling what they had done, Colonel Hayward's voice broke with emotion and he paid many compliments to his "brave boys," as he called them.

In the divisional order of the day the men's citations are as follows:

"Private Henry Johnson, finding himself on night sentry duty and being attacked by a group of more than a dozen Germans, put one hors de combat with rifle shots and two others with knife cuts. Although wounded thrice by revolver bullets and grenades at the start of the fight, he went to the help of his wounded comrade as the latter was about to be carried off by the enemy and continued the struggle until the Germans were forced to flee. He gave a magnificent example of courage and energy.

"Private Needham Roberts, finding himself on night sentry duty attacked and badly wounded in the leg by a group of Germans, continued to throw hand grenades, although fallen to the ground, until the enemy was forced to flee. A good and brave soldier."

WAR CROSS FOR HAYWARD AND REGIMENT

N Y C JOURNAL
NOVEMBER 29, 1918

Gallantry of New York Negro Troops Cited in French Orders.

Colonel William Hayward, commander of the Three Hundred and Sixty-fifth Infantry of the Ninety-third Division, is cited for gallantry, according to word just received here, and his entire regiment is cited in a French army order for the Croix de Guerre for "gallantry in the great offensive in Champagne in September and October, 1918."

The Three Hundred and Sixty-fifth Infantry is the old Fifteenth Infantry of the New York National Guard, the only negro unit in the old State organization.

The citation also brings the news that Colonel Hayward was wounded during the allied advance in Champagne.

The order of citation indicates that the command suffered severe casualties. Major Cobb, one of the battalion commanders, is named as among the killed, while Major Lorillard Spencer is referred to as having been severely wounded.

The citation reads:

"Under command of Colonel Hayward, who, though wounded, insisted on leading his regiment in battle; of Lieutenant-Colonel Pickering, admirably cool and brave; of Major Cobb (killed); of Major Spencer (severely wounded); of Major Little, a true leader of men, the Three Hundred and Sixty-fifth Reserve Infantry, U. S. A., engaging in an offensive for the first time in the drive of September, 1918, stormed enemy positions, energetically defended, too, after heavy fighting, the town of S——, captured prisoners and brought back six cannon and a great number of machine guns."

Colonel Hayward, who is forty-one years of age, is a former secretary of the Republican National Committee and was a Public Service Commissioner for this district when he resigned to enter the service immediately following the entry of the United States into the European war.

He was legal adviser to Governor Whitman during Mr. Whitman's first term.

Two Colored Heroes.

On the Nation's honor roll go the names of Needham Roberts and Henry Johnson, two Brooklyn colored men. They have been mentioned for bravery by Gen. Pershing and in addition have received the Croix de Guerre from France.

Probably not enough attention has been paid to what our colored troops in France have done and are doing. In the fast moving events of war these boys have been more or less overlooked, as have other divisions of Pershing's army. There are not enough chroniclers of daily happenings abroad to record all or even the greater portion of interesting things occurring at the front. Some things must pass unnoticed and many brave fellows never have their acts mentioned in the papers.

But all Americans know that the colored men are loyally doing their duty abroad just as they are here. As soldiers they are as brave as any, obedient, jealous of their good name, and determined to uphold the honor of the Nation. In the camps they have proved their adaptability and their fine military qualities. And on the battlefield they are now demonstrating their courage and stamina.

There has been no suspicion that this race is anything less than 100 per cent. American. No pro-Germanism has been found among them. None has been ridden on rails for seditious talk, none tarred and feathered by indignant citizens for disloyal utterances, none locked up. When the summons of war came they responded promptly and cheerfully and they are doing their duty in a thousand ways in a most commendable fashion.

In the history of the Nation there has been no negro judged a traitor or a negro found guilty of even near-treason. They serve only the flag they live under and fifty-fifty Americanism is unknown to them.

Because of the race's great record the whole Nation is happy to honor two of their number who, by signal bravery, have won distinction across the ocean. And Brooklyn rejoices in the fact that these two heroes are citizens of this community. Roberts and Johnson put a large party of the enemy to flight and were wounded in the action but are in a fair way to recover.

A Prophecy Fulfilled

From The North American of March 1, 1919

Nine months ago in this column we discussed the negro's chance to win enviable distinction in the great war. Nearly 100,000 negro soldiers—several hundred of them officers—then were serving or training for service in the new army. And of one negro regiment—the now famous 367th, the "Buffaloes"—Major General Bell himself had said he would lead them in battle "against any army in the world with every confidence in the outcome."

At that time we called attention to prevalent predictions that the negro was "too lazy, too emotional, too unresponsive to discipline to be counted upon as a fighting factor," and thus expressed our view of the matter:

> We believe few, if any, of these soldiers have any other feeling than that they would prefer to be on the firing line. We have no doubt that such as are sent there will account for themselves in the same fine way that negro fighters always have. We believe the American negro is going to perform a part in this war which will far outshine any previous service of his.
> It is a wonderful chance for a people to evidence appreciation of a service rendered it, and we think this chance will be eagerly and admirably used.

Before the signing of the armistice 42,000 negro troops had gone into combat. At Chateau Thierry, Soissons, on the Vesle, in Champagne and the Argonne and in the final attacks in the Metz region these singing soldiers—and how they sang—were in the thick of it.

In some of the swiftest and bloodiest battles of the entire war they were given full opportunity to prove their mettle as defenders of freedom, and the bare facts of their answer to this challenge suffice to silence forever any doubts as to their courage or effectiveness as fighters.

The four regiments of former national guard units—the first to go overseas—had not been in France three months before one of them—the 372d—was picked for the Verdun region, to occupy the famous battle-swept hill 304. On that exposed ground, where thousands of French and German soldiers had fallen as the line swayed back and forth, these American negroes, fresh from their training with the French, were placed to hold the Hun tide.

Their First Test

Their first engagement was in a drive for Montoir. Here came the real test, as one military observer has said. And, according to this authority, they were eager to get into the fight.

They cheered and sang when the announcement came that their chance had arrived. But the question was: back of their enthusiasm had they the staying qualities drilled into European troops thru centuries of training in the science of warfare?

This they answered by doing some of the heaviest and most effective fighting of the day. From June 6 to September 10 they were stationed in the bloody Argonne forest. On the night of September 25 they were summoned to take part in the Argonne offensive, and were in that terrific drive—one of the decisive engagements of the war—until October 7.

In this nine days' battle the negroes not only proved their fighting qualities in an ordeal such as men have rarely been called upon to face, but these qualities, in deadly striking power and stubborn resistance in crises, stood out with such distinction that the whole regiment was awarded the coveted croix de guerre.

In that engagement, the negro soldiers captured 600 prisoners and thirty-five guns and rounded up an enormous amount of engineering material and ammunition. They also brought down three enemy airplanes. And at a cost of some 500 men in killed, wounded and gassed.

At the same time another negro regiment, the 369th, under Colonel Hayward, was winning deathless fame in action. And there is no telling how far these fearless fighters might have pressed on had not hostilities ceased when they did, for at 11 o'clock on the morning of November 11 they were the furthest east of all the allied fighting forces—the nearest to the Rhine!

These two instances are not exceptional. All the way thru, wherever a negro regiment or division went into action, the result was the same. Three whole regiments were given the croix de guerre as units—carrying the right for each member to wear this badge of honor—and like recognition was accorded an entire battalion of the "Buffaloes." And some of the individual exploits cited are thrilling enough for any youth. One, in particular, deserves widespreading:

> Lieutenant Campbell, of the 368th infantry, and five of his men, armed only with their rifles, trench knives and hand grenades, picked up from the shell holes along the way, were moving over a road in the Chateau Thierry sector. Suddenly their course was crossed by the firing of a German machine gun. They tried to locate it by the direction of the bullets, but could not. To their right, a little ahead, lay a space covered with thick underbrush; just back of it was an open field.
> Lieutenant Campbell, who knew by the direction of the bullets that his party had not been seen by the Germans, ordered one of his men, with a rope which they happened to have, to crawl to the thick underbrush, and tie the rope to several stems of the brush; then to withdraw as far as possible and pull the rope, making the brush shake as tho men were crawling thru it. The purpose was to draw direct fire from the machine gun and, by watching it, locate its position.
> The ruse worked. Lieutenant Campbell then ordered three of his men to steal out and flank the machine on one side, while he and two others moved up and flanked it on the other side.
> The brush was shaken more violently by the secret rope. The Germans, their eyes focused on the brush, poured a hail of bullets into it. Lieutenant Campbell gave the signal. The flanking party dashed up; with their hand grenades they killed four of the Boches and captured the remaining three—also the machine gun.

It was in the Marbache sector that the negro soldiers won from the Huns the complimentary name of "Black Devils." This sector was no sooner taken over by the Ninety-second division, composed entirely of negroes, than a series of daring trench raids served notice on the Germans that something new was on the program.

Up to that time the Ninety-second never had been in battle. Only one of its regiments had seen a big engagement. The chance for united action came in the Metz drive, and at 4 o'clock in the morning, on the day before the armistice was signed, they were notified to make ready.

Ear-witnesses say a statue would have been set smiling by the way those big brown fighters echoed the "See it thru" slogan of the "Buffaloes" when the call came.

They began their advance at 7 o'clock from Point-a-Mousson. Before them was a valley commanded by the heavy guns of Metz and by nests of German machine guns. The negroes seemed to realize that here for the first time was the great opportunity to show their mettle—that for the first time they were going to battle as a division. A sense of race solidarity possessed them, uniting their purpose as no amount of drilling could, and they were literally a terrible foe as they plunged forward to Preny. So rapidly did they advance that the list of casualties, considering the rain of shells, was small. Their objective for the day was Bois Frehaut. Picked Moroccan and Senegalese troops of the French, striking for the same point—in an odd competition of negro races on this day—were the first to arrive. The Germans, seeing what was up, were pounding Bois Frehaut with a heavy fire. It became too hot for the Moroccans and the Senegalese. They were forced to retreat.

Were our negro fighters really going to "see it thru?" The fight was now getting hotter and hotter, for the Germans were bringing their full resistance to bear. The Fifty-sixth regiment was forced to withdraw, but not until after they had stood up and borne a heavy loss. The First battalion of the "Buffaloes," commanded by Major Charles L. Appleton, of New York, with negro company commanders and lieutenants, was called upon to hold the Germans at bay while the hard-hit Fifty-sixth retreated. Here, in confronting the enemy with an iron resistance, the "Buffaloes" won their croix de guerre.

A little later Bois Frehaut was taken by the Ninety-second. The Germans directed against the place a more murderous fire, but there was no driving out the negroes. The Stars and Stripes said of this fight:

> "Probably the hardest fighting done by any Americans in the final hour was that which engaged the troops of the Twenty-eighth, Ninety-second, Eighty-first and Seventh divisions of the Second American army, who launched a fire-eating attack above Vigneulles just at dawn on the 11th. It was no mild thing that last flare of the battle, and the order to cease firing did not reach the men in the front line until the last moment, when the runners sped with it from fox hole to fox hole."

Proved Their Worth

From these accounts, which provide an ample basis for definite formation of opinion, it is evident that the flag never was better or more bravely served than by the negro troops who of late have been coming back to the kind of welcome they deserve.

But for them and the rest of their race it will be well to remember that service to the flag includes quite as much in times of peace as in times of war, however different its nature.

What the negro soldier has done is proof of the ability of his race to meet an occasion when it rises.

For many years that race has faced a need for becoming more useful citizens. Constantly its own leaders have urged moral and industrial progress. The response has been less gratifying than these leaders desired and hoped.

Now, with the proud war record of their own soldiers for a spur, American negroes should determine to go forward at a faster rate than in the past.

They have had many and hard obstacles to overcome. Their handicaps have been and still are numerous. But a people that can furnish such fighters is capable of supplying good citizens—honest workers and earnest home-makers. And this duty should not be neglected.

Those Dependable 13,000,000

TO THE EDITOR—I have just read with interest your editorial, "The Prophecy Fulfilled," taken from your paper of March 1. No more timely, no more thoughtful, no more brave, courageous and impartial utterances could have been made about a set of American soldiers who fought so valiantly in the recent war for world's democracy. But, above all this, no more fitting words could have fallen from the lips or pen of an individual that are calculated to do such untold good to the negro of America.

Thirteen million loyal citizens, who know no ism except Americanism, are standing in one solid phalanx to support the Stars and Stripes and the constitution of this commonwealth of ours. Thirteen million hearts beat in unison for the principles enumerated in that most wonderful of all documents, the constitution of the United States. They want this to be the land of the free and the home of the brave, and when The North American comes out editorially, as it has done, and sponsors right treatment, we feel it will be done.

A paper that has run from 1771 down to date has not only weight, but prestige. Many will be those who will follow in your wake during the days of reconstruction, advocating just such principles if you will continue this editorial tone.

A Loyalty Always There

TO THE EDITOR—Your editorial of Saturday, March 1, under the caption "A Prophecy Fulfilled," is one of the best that I have ever read. I made this same statement last Sunday morning to not less than 1500 people and advised them all to get it and read it. Your very liberal and unselfish statement "that the flag was never better or more bravely served than by the negro troops" will not only be a home-coming inspiration to all of our colored soldiers, but will kindle within the bosom of my race a greater love of country and a renewed promise of future loyalty.

LEARNING FRENCH.

The merry jest of the war correspondents anent the consternation of the colored soldiers on discovering fellow fighters of their own complexion in the French Army who did not understand English, is losing its point. Instead of exclaiming over the fact that the other fellow had seemingly been over there so long that he had forgotten his own language, the Negro Americans are learning to speak French themselves. A correspondent with the American Army in France gives the following picture of the Negro in khaki:

> They are over here, their typical Negro selves. The standard of intelligence in the unit is extremely high, no illiteracy is noticeable. Many of the men have become fluent French talkers and I have heard animated conservations between them and the Senegalese who chanced to be passing. The American Negro lads get along famously with both white and black Frenchmen. In their dealings with the feminine population they are punctiliously polite and not a single complaint has been lodged against them in this respect. Naturally they are delighted at the complete lack of racial prejudice they have found in France and some of them have declared to me their intention of remaining here after the war. Their pride in their unit speaks well for a continuance of the high morale they have manifested so far.

The soldiers show their good sense by acquiring a speaking acquaintance with the polite language and it will no doubt facilitate their dealings with the inhabitants, as well as their brothers in arms. The natural adaptability of the race will be of great help in enabling them to make the best of their experience abroad.

That these gentler diversions will not make them lose sight of their chief mission in France was shown in General Pershing's award of credit to Private Henry Johnson and Private Needham Roberts last week, for a "notable instance of bravery and devotion."

The New York Age

Secretary Benj. F. Seldon of the Y. M. C. A., with the American Expeditionary Forces in France, writes that "our boys were right at the front when the last gun was fired. Some of our troops are still on the line doing occupation duty."

Incidentally Mr. Seldon says: "You can't beat the Negro for humor. Here is a sample from one of the runners of the 351st Machine Gun Battalion, who is in Capt. Dickey's company." It reads as follows.

NEGRO SOLDIERS ARE MAKING GOOD

CHARLOTTE N C NEWS
OCTOBER 25, 1918
(By United Press.)

With the American Armies in France, Oct. 3.—(By mail.)—Colored troops from America already have established themselves in Europe as being cool and reliable fighters in the front line. Both American and French commands say so, and if the Germans ever discovered who it was that held part of the line through Argonne Forest when the Boches failed to get through some time ago, the German command has a decidedly high respect for American colored infantry.

Up and down the line, after the test of a year's service, you hear no doubts expressed regarding the colored infantry. The darkie doughboys have made good in the line as well as behind. They have proven themselves cool and brave soldiers in the trenches, and gentlemen when back at rest in French towns. You are continually running into units of these colored chaps as you travel up and down the line from Switzerland to Flanders.

Down in a little town some miles back of Verdun the United Press correspondent encountered a large unit of these colored chaps, all from Chicago or thereabouts. They had just come back to rest, after a long period in the Argonne Forest trenches. Like their predecessors, a negro unit from New York, they had made a great hit with the French high command of the sector. Unlike the New York negroes, these Chicago boys had encountered no big fighting, and they were disappointed at being taken from the trenches before doing big fighting.

The French officers explained that good soldiers can be recognized just as well when they are holding the line as when they are fighting, but the darkie doughboys were still disappointed. Finally, the French general of the army came down to review the negro outfit. Down by the creek they went through some of the snappiest exercise ever seen, and the French general was delighted. When the review as it had been planned was finished the general turned to the American colonel.

"If I were an American general, what would I do now?" asked the Frenchman.

"Most anything," replied the colonel. "These boys will do anything you wish."

"Well, suppose the Germans were across the creek," replied the general, "I'd like to have this nearest company attack them."

The captain of the nearest company was given the order, and he marched his men across the meadow, where they suddenly disappeared. Pretty soon a whistle sounded, and the company was up and running toward the creek. Only a minute, and then they dropped, waiting, then running, always skirmishing in the latest approved French fashon. When they dropped it was with two skirmish lines in advance and and two support lines leading off to the rear, with each man dropping over the legs of the chap in front of him. Tin derbies and packs covered the upper portions of their bodies.

After a bit of flank movement by a couple of platoons, the supposed German positionos along the creek were stormed and taken. The French general was delighted beyond words for a moment. Finally he said, "My oldest veterans could do it no better, even if they were warned it was on the program, and your boys did that extemporaneously." The general remembered the review, and a few days later these colored chaps from Chiga received a fine letter from him, congratulating them on their esprit de corps and their work.

It was interesting to see how thee colored boys mixed with the French inhabitants of the village, with whom the Americans were billeted. The French folk like the colored boys, and felt highly honored at the way the latter learned French. The darkies are getting extremely fluent, and it fits entirely with their scheme of things to use all French forms of politeness.

Down the battle line a large unit of colored troops was encountered at serious business. It was going into the line, taking over a hilly and important sector formerly held by French troops. It was the first taste of the trenches, or of the front for the boys in this unit. These men were mostly from the south. They had been trained in the middle west, and some more in France, but never had been on duty under shell fire.

Yet on this dark night, while tre Germans bombarded, these thousands of darkie doughboys, chiefly under direction of colored officers, though some were white, took over a difficult and long sector without a mishap and with less noise than usual, so the French officers said. They have held that long sector for some time now, and there has been no slip, from the farthest outpost to the rear supply truck.

THE NEGRO SOLDIER.

From a recent issue of The Stars and Stripes—the official newspaper of the American Expeditionary Force in France—we read the story of the repulse and partial destruction of a German raiding party of twenty-four Germans by two negro soldiers; and their consequent decoration by the French with the Croix de Guerre, with palm. They lay upon hospital beds when they received their decorations, but their proud spirits are unquenched; and their wounds make them only more eager to get back to the firing line.

LOUISVILLE KY TIMES

As The Stars and Stripes points out, this is the first inkling even the A. E. F.—to say nothing of the people at home—has had to show that a negro unit was in charge of a part of the front line. This is especially gratifying to those who believe in the negro as a good soldier; and it should make all good negro patriots proud that men of their race have upborne the best negro military traditions in facing lightheartedly and ably the odds of twelve to one in hand to hand encounter. The story of these two negro soldiers goes on to relate that all the munitions and weapons this raiding party of Huns had with them were left in the hands of our brave negro soldiers.

The names of these men are Henry Johnson and Needham Roberts. Johnson receives the major part of the glory, because Roberts was wounded early in action by a hand grenade; and it became incumbent upon Johnson not only to save his own skin and his companion's, but also to preserve his section of trench from being blown to bits by the raiders. He fought with his rifle both as firearm and club; when it was broken to flinders he then had recourse to his trench knife, with which he did fine execution. The battle was going badly against him when he found one last grenade, with which he completed the rout of the Huns.

This negro lad, formerly a porter in a New York railroad station, displayed all the soldierly qualities we are accustomed to expect of our own. He fought briskly, beginning as soon as he became aware of the presence of the enemy. He did not forget his wounded comrade; he remembered the necessity of keeping his trench. He fought cheerily on after he had been severely wounded; and entered the hospital in high good humor. What more can be asked? Is it any wonder that the French are high in their praise of the morale and the ability of "soldats noirs de l'Amerique?"

Atop of this story of battle and blood, The Stars nad Stripes does the world the favor of describing the conduct of the negro unit in question in its French billet. Carrying the burdens of aged French women, helping in the gardens, building and reopening sewers, doing odd bits of housework, playing with the children—these are the amusements of the black soldiers during their off hours. Verily there is no element of the A. E. F. of which the people at home cannot be proud. The Times holds the example of Johnson and Roberts before the eyes of its colored friends for an everlasting example in patriotism.

Goes Into Line After Only Three Weeks' Training—World Man Gets First News of Colored Men in Action.

(Special Cable Despatch to The World.)

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, May 19.—Negro infantrymen of the old 15th New York have met the Germans and worsted them. Recent military developments enable the censor to pass the story of the achievements of the first colored American Army unit holding a sector on the French front, whose arrival at Armageddon I sought to describe in a much deleted despatch May 12.

Since writing that despatch I have paid the dusky warriors a second visit in their trenches north of Ste. Menehould, west of Verdun, and have learned of the glorious exploit of Privates Henry Johnson and Needham Roberts. The names of Johnson and Roberts will stand out forever on the roll of honor of their race.

Put 24 Germans to Flight.

Battling in the blackness of night with rifles, hand grenades and a "bolo knife," wholly deprived of the assistance of their comrades, they put to flight an enemy assaulting party at least twenty-four men strong. Roberts, wounded in three places, stretched out helplessly in the mud, hurled grenades, even while the hands of a muscular German were about his throat.

Johnson did even more. Having shot one of his foemen down and clubbed another with the butt of his rifle, he sprang to the aid of Roberts and with his bolo knife clove open the skull of one German and disembowelled another. As the enemy fell into disorderly retreat, Johnson, three times wounded, sank to the ground, seized a grenade alongside his prostrate body and literally blew one of the fleeing Germans to fragments.

In belief of their white commander, a former Public Service Commissioner of New York (Col. William Hayward), the two negroes by their valor and intelligence frustrated a well developed plan to assail one of our most important points of resistance.

The privates have been awarded the Croix de Guerre by the French General of the division under whom the unit is serving, and Johnson is scheduled to receive the much coveted gold palm of the French Army commander as well.

The Men's Citations.

The men's citations in the divisional order of the day follow:

Private Henry Johnson, finding himself on night sentry duty and being attacked by a group of more than a dozen Germans, put one hors de combat with rifle shots and two others with knife cuts. Although wounded thrice by revolver bullets and grenades at the start of the fight, he went to the help of his wounded comrade as the latter was about to be carried off by the enemy and continued the struggle until the Germans were forced to flee. He gave a magnificent example of courage and energy.

Private Needham Roberts, finding himself on night sentry duty attacked and badly wounded in the leg by a group of Germans, continued to throw hand grenades, although fallen to the ground, until the enemy was forced to flee. A good and brave soldier.

The black warriors from 53d Street, Harlem, Brooklyn and the Bronx—Henry Johnson, hailing from Albany, is one of the few up-Staters in the unit—are the first Americans of their race to fight on the battlefields of Europe for the democratic ideals that set them free. For more than a month they have played a part in the vast theatre of war, yet save for certain personages at general headquarters nobody in Gen. Pershing's command has been any wiser.

The men are the first Americans of their race to fight on the battlefields of Europe for the democratic ideals that set them free. For more than a month they have played a part in the vast theatre of war, yet save for certain personages at general headquarters nobody in Gen. Pershing's command has been any wiser.

Even the war correspondents, whose duties oblige them to keep in touch with every phase of our military activities, were quite unaware of the newcomers' presence in the line. I am still the only accredited correspondent who has visited the sector they are occupying, as a distinct unit under a higher French command. A whispered word from the upper realms of the army heirarchy set me on the trail.

So thoroughly camouflaged it was that I roamed the country over for two days before my objective was attained. Being incased in the French Army to a greater degree than any other American contingent—they are only doughboys supported by French artillery—these chocolate soldiers are temporarily in a state of splendid isolation so far as the remainder of the American expeditionary force is concerned. It is to all intents and purposes part of the French Army, under the most intensive application of the principle that all we have is at Gen. Foch's disposal during the present emergency.

Little Training in France.

Here are a few facts about them that make the story of how our negroes entered the war one of the most remarkable that I have encountered during many months with Gen. Pershing's forces:

They were recruited voluntarily a year before we declared war, yet they (deleted) go into action. They went into the trenches with less training on French soil than any of our other troops have had. They were in line more than a month without suffering a single casualty, and still the only wounds reported from enemy fire are those received by Johnson and Roberts, although the French on either side of them had losses usual in quiet sectors; they have aided the French to bring back prisoners in a raid to the enemy second line and lost naught one themselves.

There are many other interesting details about their organizations that may not be spoken of at this time because of the camouflage under which they are operating in keeping the Germans very much in the dark about the darkies. The first Croix de Guerre that fell to the lot of their units was won by one of their white officers in record time. Here is the citation:

"First Lieut. Marshall L. Johnson has participated in a raid during which he displayed great boldness in pursuing the enemy to their second line, thus contributing splendidly to the success of the operation."

"Coffee Creams."

In preparation for this raid, which was carried out by a Franco-American storming party, our railway artillery took a ponderous part in bruising the Germans. Thus our "coffee creams," as the poilus call them, heard the big calibre projectiles fired by American gunners rumbling overhead within a very few days after they began facing the enemy.

When the raiders went over the top the Frenchmen's faces were painted with the usual lampblack, a preparation employed to prevent their whiteness being seen in the dark, but it was deemed unnecessary to apply this coating to the faces of their American companions.

This affray, in which three prisoners were taken without the loss of a single man to the Franco-American group, was staged before the colored unit took over the sector. It sufficed to show the French commanders that these Gothamites were capable of holding the line on their own account.

The "chocolate front" has samples of every conceivable variety of terrain—swamps where the only defense is a breastwork of sandbags, rolling meadows with the deep trenches, woods in which communication trenches are unnecessary because the trees screen one from the enemy, and a ridge almost as strong as Vimy.

A Memory of New York.

At one point one rolls up to the firing line in a small flatcar drawn along a standard gauge railroad by a Missouri mule—the 59th Street crosstown the darkies call it.

While the only infantry contact established since the negroes came to this sector was the gallant little engagement fought by Johnson and Roberts, the German artillery has been dispensing shells on our positions with considerable liberality.

A Colonel's dugout visited is pitted with big calibre craters. This officer, who took over the command of his sector after his unit had had little more than three weeks' training under a French instructor, is delighted alike at the showing made by his "children" and the welcome accorded them by the French.

"It seems to me every French General, short of the commander himself, has been down to see us," he told me. "Some of them liked our black boys so well I thought they were going to kiss them."

NEW YORKERS AT THE FRONT

N Y C GLOBE

Jack Jackson Is Proud of His "Kid" Brother's Exploits and Hopes He'll Get a Cross.

Below are extracts from letters written by New Yorkers at the front to relatives and friends at home. The Globe will be glad to receive other letters of this kind, paying for each letter or portion of letter printed. It is highly desirable that copies be sent rather than original letters. Always give name and unit of the writer.

From Jack Jackson, Pvt., Co. C, 330th Inf., Writing About His Brother William, Pvt., Co. C, 106th Inf.

"I have got some 'dope' on Bill. He covered himself with glory and probably ought to wind up with the D. S. C. But first let me tell you, he is in good health. I suppose we can let the cat out of the bag now. He got a dose of phosgene gas at St. Souplet while helping a wounded man adjust his gas mask. He thought of himself last, and was laid up in the hospital for several weeks.

"Some of his exploits read like fiction. I sure was proud of the kid when I heard what he had done. He must have a special guardian angel watching over him, or he never could have gone through it. His regiment, the 106th Infantry, was shot to pieces. But I am running ahead of the tale. This is one of his exploits, which I think ought to get him the D. S. C.:

"Volunteered as a scout to locate machine gun nests. He found them and escaped through a hail of bullets untouched. Going over the top, they were caugt in their own barrage. He volunteered to go back through it with his lieutenant to battalion headquarters. He reached it, but the 'Loot' was shot. He was returning through the fire with a message to his company when he ran into gas. Saw a fellow with a wounded arm trying to get his mask on. He helped him on with it, and then returned to his company with the message. Volunteered again to take a message to some fellows who were lost and were in front of enemy machine gun fire. He reached them, and they all got into a shell hole and were kept there all night by the Hun shells. Got out at dusk and returned to his company.

"That's only one of the stories I heard about him. Doesn't it thrill you and make you proud of him? He has been doing those things since he has been at the front. He is a lucky boy, I'll tell you. That kid is a man if ever there was one. I really envy him his experience. Wish I could have been in the same company with him. I know where he was about a month ago, but he may not be there any longer. It is rather far for me to attempt to reach him on my slim capital, nevertheless I shall make the attempt."

From Julius Gottlieb, Pvt., Co. B, 325th Inf.

"Your last letter I received from you on Oct. 3. We were then in the wild woods, where the Germans were driven out. We stayed there about five days and as our time was up we started for the Argonne front. On Oct. 9, early in the morning, we started 'over the top' on Hill 181. As we rushed down the hill a short time after, we had captured many German prisoners. They sure were glad to have been captured. One German offered me a little whiskey, another asked me if I wanted a piece of black bread that was almost two weeks old, but I refused to take it. They were as good as you can make them.

"Shortly after we moved toward the Verdun front. We drove on for two weeks continuously and we were very successful everywhere. The Germans were retreating so rapidly that it almost tired us out to keep up with them. On Oct. 23 my feet were rather sore from the continuous drive and running around wet. I was then compelled to leave my company and go to the hospital. I wasn't really sick, but I felt somewhat exhausted. As soon as I got to the hospital I received a hot bath, which was the first wash I got in two months; and I got shaved. It was the first shave I had in eighteen days. I got in a nice, clean bed and a clean suit of pajamas. I felt like in Paradise.

"It only took a few days and I was well again. I am now feeling fine and am in the best of health. I have already had a physical examination and the doctor placed me in Class A1, which means fit to go back to duty again. I am now still hanging around the hospital, waiting to be sent to my company again, or the chances may be that I will be sent home with Class C or D."

From George Brokaw Compton, Capt., 349th F. A., Which, With the 350th and 351st Regiments, Forms the 167th Brigade, First Colored Field Artillery Ever Organized in the United States Army.

"As I expect to see you some time in December or January, my regiment having received orders to prepare for embarkation, I am writing only a few of the high lights in my experiences with the colored artillery. Many professional army men regarded it as impossible or at best experimental because of the stiff requirements along the lines of technical training, but the regiment has had flattering compliments on its artillery work from disinterested observers.

"Naturally, the difficulties of discipline and training have been greater with these troops than with many white regiments, particularly the difficulty of training non-commissioned officers to take the greatest responsibilities—and such must be assumed in artillery work, as you will readily realize when you contemplate the crime that artillery men are guilty of if they shoot short, or, depending upon the conformation of the infantry line ahead of them, to the right or left.

"The regiment sailed for France June 12 and formed, with the 350th and 351st Regiments, the 167th Brigade, which is the artillery, all colored, of the Ninety-second Division. We held a sector in Pont-a-Mousson, directly in front of Metz, during the American offensive against that stronghold, which was ended by the signing of the armistice. I was in command of Battery D, and since I took command the battery has never had a member tried by court-martial. It has won squad drill competitions and field meets, and has an esprit de corps which is unexcelled in the brigade.

"In the drive against Metz, having taken up an unprotected position in the open, Battery D's No. 2 gun was destroyed by a direct hit. The battery was equipped with the famous French 75. Two of its enlisted personnel have been recommended for Distinguished Service Crosses for gallantry under shell fire. I am now in command of the Second Battalion of the regiment.

"You may meet the Ninety-second Division parading up Fifth avenue not long after you receive this letter. I am eager to get back and resume the practice of law, now that the job is done."

Both the Heroes Are Old-Timers So Far as Service in Unit Goes

The commander's voice broke with emotion as he told me about Privates Johnson and Roberts. Into the narrative he slipped little affectionate anecdotes about his boys.

Johnson and Roberts are both old timers as enlistment in the unit goes.

The former, whose age is twenty-nine and residence No. 23 Monroe Street, Albany, had been a porter at the Albany Station before he was enrolled by Major Spencer, former Military Secretary to Gov. Whitman.

Roberts is Manhattanite, having been an elevator boy like many of his comrades. His father, Rev. Norman J. Roberts, lives at Trenton, N. J.

Toward 3 o'clock on the morning of May 15, when no man's land was still black, the two "coffee creams" were standing shoulder to shoulder in an advanced post fifty yards nearer the enemy than the main line of resistance. Johnson heard some slight sound behind him in the direction opposite that in which the Germans ought to have been. "Needham," he whispered, "what's that?"

Needham harkened. "Rats, I guess," he replied.

But the strange sounds as of something moving through the long, marshy grass behind the two listeners increased. Finally, Johnson caught sight of a loglike mass on the edge of the barbed wire, with which the post is hedged in. It was crawling slowly, almost imperceptibly forward.

The "Bush Germans."

"That's the bush Germans," Johnson shouted—the enemy is always "bush Germans" to the negroes.

His cry was heard back in the main combat post fifty yards in the rear, and a star shell flared aloft. In its grayish light what seemed to the startled sentries to be a host of Germans was revealed. Simultaneously a volley of German grenades woke the silence of the night. Roberts muttered, "I'm hit," and collapsed on the duckboards undertoot. The grenade splinters had caught him on both elbows and on his right forearm. With his left hand he groped for the basket of grenades, found one and let fly.

Meanwhile, Johnson, stooping low beneath the breastwork—there are no trenches at that point—grabbed a rifle and fired at point blank range at the nearest adversary, a big fellow who had just finished severing the last strands of wire with his wire-cutters.

The German dropped, but another took his place and leaped toward Johnson. He wasn't ten yards away, so the colored boy seized his rifle by the barrel, swung it and landed full on the other's head. Thus freed from his second assailant, Johnson turned to find Roberts feebly fighting off three Germans, one of whom was choking him, while the others sought to lift him up with the evident intention of making him prisoner.

Johnson Is Wounded.

At the same moment one of the other Germans, of whom fully a dozen had penetrated the wire in these few seconds, fired three revolver shots. Johnson felt blood spurt from wounds in his left leg, his right hip and his right forearm.

"But just then," he complains, "I remembered my bolo knife." This is a sinister instrument about a foot long with a blade tapering to a point from a width of about three inches. It was originally modelled after the Filipino's favorite weapon. Wrenching it from its sheath, Johnson sliced it down upon the head of the man whose hands were at Roberts's throat and then swung around and drove it right through the stomach of another German. Then a strange thing happened. The stabbed German shrieked in perfectly good American: "Wow! the blank of a blank's got me!" as he fell dead.

What happened after that is a bit hazy, for Roberts had fainted and Johnson was weak from loss of blood.

A Panic-Stricken Retreat.

The dead and wounded Germans were loaded indiscriminately on two stretchers the raiding party had brought with them and a panic-stricken retreat began. They left behind them six wire cutters—which indicates that the strength of the party must have been at least 24, because one such tool goes with every four men—three automatic pistols, a couple of dozen grenades and a round cap. This was worn by the man whose skull was slashed open by Johnson's bolo and had a thick lock of hair glued to it with blood.

summoned up all his remaining strength and hurled one last grenade.

Visiting the spot two days later I found bits of gray green cloth, buttons and bloodstains scattered about a radius of ten feet from the point at which the missile had made contact with the fugitives.

"I imagine they'll carry that hound back to his folks wrapped up in a newspaper," Johnson observed grimly when told about it in the hospital afterward.

Lasted Only Three Minutes.

The whole fight had lasted scarcely three minutes. Immediately it was over, Lieut. Richardson Pratt of the Brooklyn millionaire family advanced from the point of resistance, which was certainly the German objective, and had the two wounded negroes toted to the rear. They are now in process of recovery in a French hospital, and, as both have told their commanding officer, "craving another go at 'em."

The Germans, it was found, had crept in through a swamp where there is a break in our lines and crawled upon the outpost from behind, expecting to kill or capture two sentries there and then tackle the main combat post fifty yards further south. The men in this post were under orders not to advance to the succor of sentries, but to await any onslaught in their own trenches, so that it was impossible to help Johnson and Roberts.

Throughout the whole show not a single shot was fired by the artillery as neither side dared to call for a barrage for fear it would fall on their own men.

French General's Praise.

In indicating to his superior that the two dusky New Yorkers had driven off ten times their number of Germans the French General observed:

"The American officer's report of this affair is too modest, for from verbal information it appears that the negroes were exceedingly brave. This little combat does honor to the Americans, and I have begged their commander to indicate the men meriting recognition."

Besides the platoon commander, both the company commander and the battalion commander under whom Johnson and Roberts serve are well known in the social and business world of New York.

When I roamed through the sector two days ago, the news that their two comrades had received the Croix de Guerre just - becoming generally known, I heard many comments on the occurrence and not one of them indicated any sentiment other than pride in the honor the pair had brought to the unit and a resolve to emulate their gallant conduct.

An Unconscious Tribute.

The air was thick with the praise of Johnson and Roberts, but the finest tribute of all, I thought, was a mute and unconscious one I chanced to behold.

A little chap, his ebony skin beaded with sweat, sat on the ground with his legs hooked around a chunk of granite that once had been a tombstone. Oblivious to all that went on around him, he was sharpening his bolo knife on the stone, pausing from time to time to test its edge against his finger or his tongue. As he rubbed the blade against the granite surface he crooned a low-pitched chant couched in a language all his own. Only once could I catch an intelligent phrase: "Bush Germans, we're going to get you yet!" He kept mumbling it at intervals again and again.

Negroes Doing Part Valiantly

SPRINGFIELD MASS EVENING
NOVEMBER 4, 1918

Springfield Colored Soldier Says His Company Has Prayer Before Battle.

"Before we go into battle our company always has a word of prayer," writes John S. Plummer of M Co., 372d Regiment, which hint of Christian training in the opinion of Rev. W. N. De Berry and Rev. G. R. Waller, pastors of St. John's Congregational and the Third Baptist Church respectively, accounts for the valor Springfield Negroes are displaying overseas, for as Wheaton A. Yates, also of the 372d writes, "Uncle Sam's brown-faced boys are doing their best at the front."

From the two named colored churches alone, not counting the A. M. E. Church and Bethany Church, more than 50 colored youth have gone into the service. The following are from St. John's: Ralph Freeman, Harold and Donald Foster, Willie Stewart, Henry Pervoe, John Wooten, John Plummer, Everett Harris, Herbert Faggs, Wheaton Yates, Frank Samples, Leonard Fowler, Keith Meyers, Cyril Jacobs, Caleb Gladden, Arthur Whitfield, Charles Evans, William Jackson, Samuel Jones, Grady D. Kirkland, Robert Wright, William Davis, Arnott McCleod, Norman Richardson, Charles Hicks, Charles Field, William Kindle, Myron Nichols, Walter G. Scott, Arthur Jones and Thomas Womble.

Of this number, Gladden, Stewart, Wooten and Nichols are in the navy, the others are in the army overseas, except a few in this country training in camps.

The list from the Third Baptist is as follows: Archie Paige, Douglass Johnson, Allen Webster, George Frazier (who is in the navy), Cyril Underwood, Rufus Burnett, Robert Branch, Firnie Hall, Miles Skinner, Frank Harris, William Cook, Wheaton Yates, Joseph Smith, Arthur Mishaux, Talmadge Goldson, Ernest Dilworth, Norman Johnson, William Saunders, James Gale. Three or four names appear in both lists as several are identified with both churches.

Interesting letters have been received from a number of the mentioned Negro soldiers from Springfield. John Plummer in a letter says: "The boys of the 372d are so anxious to go over the top that the officers have to restrain them. We are having only one meal a day at present but with more victories which are surely coming will fare better."

Edward Binks, also of the 372d, writes that the boys are "making good." Cyril S. Jacobs of the medical detachment with the 807th Pioneers, is philosophical and writes of the fighting: "I have made up my mind that all that happens is simply a part of our lives and the easiest way is simply to make the best of it."

Ralph S. Freeman is with the Second Canadian Construction Regiment and is rather proud of the fact that his battalion is the only colored outfit that has left Canada. The regiment was organized for railway construction work at the front, but reaching France was attached to the forestry corps and young Freeman with others is engaged in lumbering in Southwestern France. Twenty planes or more are to be seen every day where they are and Freeman adds that he dreads moonlight nights now, though he used to like them when he was in Springfield.

Three colored boys in a white Canadian battalion have won the Victoria Cross. Freeman urges the folks at home to write letters, as he says he notices that the boys who get these encouraging letters fight better. He speaks of the devastation all around, with places the size of Pittsfield where every house is a ruin with holes in the walls 10 and 20 feet in diameter and not a single pane of glass left.

Gray D. Kirkland, writing from the headquarters of the 92d Division, tells of the fine effect produced by rows of sightly trees along the roads in France. The masonry is excellent and walls in ancient buildings observed have been standing for centuries. But America, with its modernized methods, is superior to France even from the standpoint of the architect. The writer has a good word to say for the Y. M. C. A., Knights of Columbus and other organizations.

Allen D. Webster of L Co., 372d Regiment, says that Christianity certainly helps the soldier, even if life over there is nothing but fighting, shelling and observing. David D. Johnson, he sees by clippings, is giving a good account of himself with the Negro troops.

Arthur R. Jones, with C Co., 367th Regiment, says they have been facing the Huns right along. Wheaton A. Yates of the 372d says that his regiment has been holding two positions and twice has quelled the attack of the Boches. The regiment has done much of the front line work, but there have been few casualties. The last week 500 from Georgia joined the 372d. In the last drives the regiment has carried off high honors.

PERSHING CALLS RUMORS FALSE

JUNE 24, 1918

WASHINGTON, June 24.—General Pershing has flatly contradicted reports, believed to be of German origin, that Negro troops in France are given tasks of greater peril than are white soldiers. In a dispatch received by the war department the commander-in-chief of the expeditionary forces reports the only complaint voiced by the colored men in khaki is that they did not get more active service.

General Pershing said that he could not "commend too highly the spirit shown among the colored troops, who exhibit fine capacity for quick training and eagerness for the most dangerous work."

The general's cablegram, which was sent in reply to one of inquiry sent by Secretary Baker, said:

"Th[illegible]tories, probably invented by Germa[illegible]nts, that colored soldiers in France are always placed in most dangerous positions and sacrificed to save white soldie[illegible] when wounded they are le[illegible]ound to die and without me[illegible]tention are absolutely false.

"The following are the [illegible] reported up to June 18 in th[illegible]olored combat regiment[illegible] France:

369th Infantry—Died of woun[illegible] 3; died of disease, 8; severe[illegible] wounded, 2.

370th Infantry—Died of wounds, none; died of disease, 3; severely wounded, none.

371st Infantry—Died of wounds, none; died of disease, 8; severaly wounded, none.

372d Infantry—Died of wounds, none; died of disease, 8; severely wounded, none.

"These figures show conclusively that Negro troops have not thus far occupied positions as dangerous as those occupied by white troops and that their physical condition is excellent.

"A tour of inspection just completed among American Negro troops by officers of the training section of these headquarters show the comparatively high degree of training and efficiency among these troops. Their training is identical with that of other Amercan troops serving with the French army, the effort being to lead all American troops gradually to heavy combat duty by a preliminary service in trenches in quiet sectors. Colored troops in trenches have been particularly fortunate, as one regiment was there a month before any losses were suffered. This was almost unheard of heretofore on the Western front.

HUNS IN WILD RUSH TO SURRENDER TO LIEUT. CADORE

BROOKLYN N. Y. STANDARD UNION
DECEMBER 22. 1918

Lieut. Leon J. Cadore, star twirler on the Brooklyn team, now stationed on the Rhine with the 369th Infantry, composed of the old Fifteenth Colored New York Infantry, under command of Col. Hayward of Manhattan, sends the following interesting letter, written on Thanksgiving Day:

"On the Rhine,
"Thanksgiving, Nov. 28, 1918.

"William A. Rafter, Sporting Editor Standard Union, Brooklyn, N. Y.:

"Dear Friend Bill—Well, this has been a little different game, this one I have been playing for the past four months, one that, I might say, is parallel with our dear old pastime in someways, such dusting you off with a machine gun or ducking the fast babies, only these send kind of a chill down your spine, and you imagine the Germans have every gun in their command trained right on the end of your nose. Well, these you have hitting the dirt, and you have no idea how welcome Mother Earth feels and how uncomfortably high a cigarette paper, between you and the ground, makes you feel. You might class the whole German army as a pitcher, one with a lot of stuff to start off with. But he finally weakened, in the eleventh month, on the 11th of November, and at the eleventh hour. I never will forget those three numbers as long as I live, as I was in the front line at the time and had a hard time trying to keep the Huns out of our position at 10 minutes past 11, as they started rushing over to our lines with white flags with the old kamerad stuff. They were just like Johnny Evers after a game, but while it's going on—well, you know Johnnie. The German used a sort of spitter that he got away with pretty good (gas shells), and he went along fine until he got a little careless and got the bases drunk, also the Americans, with plenty of fighting blood. And then Manager Foch thought it a pretty good time to stick in a pinch hitter, which he did, and then it was a different story. But he dusted old Uncle Sammie off a few times and had a couple of strikes on him, when he connected with a fast one and sent the Germans away back into their dugouts on the other side of the Rhine. And that's where I am now. And, by the way, we were the first regiment of the allied armies to reach the Rhine. Some distinction, I think. The regiment I am with, 369th Infantry, colored, is composed of the old Fifteenth Colored N. Y. Infantry, under command of Col. Hayward of New York.

"My only wish now is to get back before the season opens, so I can get in the game again, as I expect a very good season this year, after a hard month's training; although don't think that you get fat over here; that is, in the front line. Oh, no; I am shy quite a few meals and plenty of sleep; but now we are managing to catch up on everything. Getting rid of the cooties, etc., is our favorite sport at present.

"Have you seen Dick Breen lately? When you do, give him my regards. Well, old boy, must cut into a couple of chickens I bought here for officers of our company. You know we officers must have our chickens.

"Be good, Bill. Wish you merry Christmas and happy new year. Regards to the boys. Sincerely yours,
"FIRST LIEUT. LEON J. CADORE.
"Address 369th Infantry, with the French, S. P. 107, A. E. F.

"Enclosed find small citation. I cannot give name of town at present."

The citation reads:

"Under command of Col. Hayward, who, though injured, insisted on leading his regiment in the battle; of Lieut.-Col. Pickering, admirably cool and brave; of Major Cobb (killed), of Major Spencer (grievously wounded), of Major Little, a true leader of men, the 369th R. I. U. S., engaging in an offensive for the first time in the drive of September, 1918, stormed powerful enemy positions energetically defended, took, after heavy fighting, the town of S———, captured prisoners and brought back six cannons and a great number of machine guns."

TELLS OF YANK GAMES IN PARK

American Games Amuse Londoners Who Are Initiated to "Down in Front;" Play Base Ball.

OMAHA NEB BEE
OCTOBER 20. 1918

The ronowing account of an American athletic meet in Hyde park, London, was printed in the London Times on September 23:

"Several thousands of people gathered on Saturday afternoon round that part of Hyde park which has been devoted to American baseball. But other American games and not base ball were the chief attraction. They were those which have been adopted, adapted, or invented for the amusement of the men in rest and other camps. A hundred selected American soldiers, including 20 negroes, came to demonstrate them to a British audience.

"When base ball was first played in the park it was considered an innovation worthy of emphatic remark. It was a mere nothing, however, compared with the sight of big Americans (some of them very big indeed) behaving more like school boys than school boys themselves. Most human boys assume with long trousers an air of dignity and decorum for which they keep some regard even in their play; whereas the United States soldier possesses a beautiful faculty for letting his full defy his years. The negroes, toted with their wide grins, delighted chuckles, and gurgling incantation helped manfully to make the whole assembly, performers and spectators alike, realize that, after all, folks are only as old as they feel.

Negroes Box Blindfolded.

"The negroes passed from boxing blindfolded to chasing toy balloons; and it would be hard to say, which was the more diverting to look on.

"Perhaps the boxing, since that had a comical climax. After the boxers had been thinned out and the ring was held by one huge fellow alone, his white comrades baited him as bullfighters the bull. They tapped him on the shoulder, trailed their greatcoats against his knees and elbows; anything to make him suppose his rivals were still before or behind his blinded eyes. Finally one ingenious tormentor placed a boxing glove on the end of a long stick and gently tapped the pugilist in the face with it. But the glove must have left empty, for the black man at last realized that, like Don Quixote, he was sparring at fictitious foes. But he may not have read "Don Quixote."

"The white Americans played a larger variety of games than can be easily remembered. They ran races entwined with one another much less comfortably than the Siamese twins. They gave capital imitations of the classic military tortoise, only, instead of bearing shields on their shoulders, they pushed a foot ball down the long line of their extended legs They reminded one of the fate of the two blackguards in "Huckleberry Finn" by riding on a rail. They ran relay races with mutually clasped hands. They played a composite leapfrog by piling more on the frog's back than he could bear, and laughed with delight as both came to the ground together. And they did other intricate feats, rollicking and un-Parklike.

The U. S. Officer's Way.

"The sole trouble of the spectators was to persuade men inside the square to sit or crouch down, in order that the view might not be obstructed. This led to another demonstration—of the American way with such people. It was an American officer, on a seat, who appealed to an English officer, standing up, to "have a heart" for those behind him, and, who, when his cry was unheeded or unheard, shouted, "Eh, King George, sit down!" which, of course, there was no resisting.

"The games over, the game began. Two teams met in an exhibition match at base ball; and, to everybody's surprise, these teams were not American, but English; soldiers from Knightsbridge Barracks, who had been instructed in the art and science of base ball by a member of the American Y. M. C. A. In blue and red, they looked the parts they were playing: and they played admirably, considering that they never even saw base ball before last July. Their batting seemed especially good; the fielding not so good; and the pitching, though adequate, as critics say, was possibly undeserving of more than $10,000 a year. No man on the ground was better pleased than the American instructor, who considers that his pupils have made wonderful progress in a short time. An American sailor umpired; and another American sailor, with two wounded Canadian soldiers in the highest spirits, did all that was necessary in the way of advice and "rooting" for both sides impartially.

"An unrehearsed incident of the day, which might have had serious results, was the behaviour of a pony during an exhibition of roughriding. The animal got out of control, and dashed at the onlookers seated round the enclosure. Jumping right over the chairs, it got among the people standing behind and scattered them in all directions. A soldier was knocked down and badly bruised, and a boy was slightly injured."

We Have Bled, But Not in Vain, Says Sergeant McClendon.

After a voyage of 14 days on the U. S. S. Grant, arrived at a Western port in France. The following named boys, Sergeant John McClendon (writer), Corporal Edw. Carson, Corporal Alfred Bolden, Corporal Wesley Hill, Corporal Edw. Lee, Corporal James Hutchinson, Corporal Walter E. Lewis, Corporal Charles Henderson, Corporal Harold Robinson and Private First Class Albert Champion, Private John Grier, Private First Class Pomie Avington, Slyvester Woods and L. C. Seward, representing St. Louis, Missouri, in Company "B" 317 Supply Train placed their feet on the beautiful soil of France. Our mission was of no small importance, much was ahead of us; much we intended to do, leaving loved ones behind we answered our country's call willingly to face the many hardships that lay in the path of a soldier's life. Willing to face even death with a cheerful heart. The following day of our disembarkation, we arrived at a camp designated as a place to rest after our strenuous trip overseas, where once Napoleon Bonaparte trained his brilliant army. After a brief rest we started on our mission to help make the world safe for Democracy. After five (5) days' journey by rail, placed us in the Eastern war sector. After some experience we all agreed with General Sherman who said "War is Hell." Yet we were determined to carry out the many deeds that have been achieved on the battle fields by our comrades' blood, who came from the jungles and swamps of our motherland, "Africa." We have seen service on the Eastern and Western fronts, and the Negroes' blood has stained the ground in every sector occupied by the A. E. F.

We have outwitted the dangerous Hun aviators who had put forth much effort to drop his deadly bombs among us. He has been brought defeated and helpless to the ground. We have withstood the incessant bombardment of the hostile artillery fire, which had lasted for hours and hours. Many times we have barely escaped the jaws of death withstanding superior numbers and many great handicaps. Our army hurriedly raised and hastily trained, met a veteran enemy, and by courage and discipline as well as skilled, always defeated him. We have faced the enemy and have never gone down in defeat. On that eventful morning of November 11, 1918, at 11 a. m., when the armistice was signed, we were confronting the Prussian Guards, known as the Kaiser's picked troops, in the Argonne Forest. We have bled, but not in vain, and every Negro who has fallen has justly earned the six (6) feet of ground that he lies in. And just credit should not only be given but shown to the Negroes of the A. E. F.

The world will little note nor long remember what we say, but never can it forget the deeds that we have done. A traitor, spy or coward has never been found among us. We, the Negro soldiers, knowing that we have come from a stock that has done glorious deeds on the field of warfare, could not shrink from the duty that we were expected to do.

To the people of St. Louis we offer our heartiest thanks, knowing that all of you have made many sacrifices and have given your full support, and have done more than your bit without a flinch. Words are not sufficient to thank you, but let the deeds that have been done on the battlefield of Europe be your reward. At all times we have met troops who have been trained warfare from the cradle, and who were well trained in the many sciences of warfare. The deeds done by us was nothing, it was your support that helped us to make the world safe for "Democracy." Now that the war is over, we are all very anxious to be in your midst.

With sincere regards, we, the boys of St. Louis, wish you one and all a Merry Christmas and a Prosperous New Year.

rive. The Germans, seeing what was up, were pounding Bois Frehaut with a heavy fire. It became too hot for the Moroccans and the Senegalese. They were forced to retreat.

Were our colored fighters really going to "see it through"? The fight was now getting hotter and hotter, for the Germans were bringing their full resistance to bear. Ralph W. Tyler Tells How Colored Boys Held Hill 304 With the Courage of the Famous Light Brigade

BY RALPH W. TYLER.

SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE. — A successful raid, planned by one of the majors of the old 8th Illinois Regiment, whose home is at Metropolis Ill., was made in the Voucharn sector and with great daring. The motor battery of the regiment first took part in laying down a barrage fire. The barrage fire began at 4 o'clock in the morning—just as the first rays of the sun shone sluggishly, and but dimly, behind the horizon. At the hour named, every gunner was at his gun. The major flashed an electric signal, and within a minute or two thereafter every gun fired simultaneously, as if connected with and controlled by an electric battery. For fifteen minutes the Colored gunners kept up their barrage fire, and then a French company was sent out behind the barrage to make the raid. So surprising was the raid, and so quickly made, that but three of the Colored soldiers were wounded, and they but slightly, and but eight of the French, with whom they were fighting, while the German's casualty toll was eleven killed, three wounded, while the remainder were captured.

Stories of the fight in the Argonne Forest, and the splendid endurance and valiant fighting of the Colored soldiers continue to come in. It is reported that a company of the old 9th Ohio Battalion, under command of its Colored captain from Dayton, Ohio held in an open field all night, awaiting orders to go into action, while all the time the Germans were dumping 210 shells and 88 machine gun fire in to them. But even in the face of such a murderous fire, the Colored line stood as firm as if the huge shells and murderous machine gun fire was but the discharge of toy blow guns.

Among their casualty was Anderson Lee and William Chenault, of Dayton who were killed. The firmness of the line these khaki-garbed black soldiers maintained in the face of a withering fire—a veritable hell—constitutes one more reason why the folks—the race—back home should be proud of these, their Colored soldiers over here, whose unyielding spirit and bravery is making history for the race.

I have learned that Hill 304, which the French so valiantly held, and which suffered such a fierce bombardment from the Germans that there is not a single foot of it but what is plowed up by shells, and whose sides, even today, are literally covered with the corpses of French soldiers who still lie where they fell, was later as valiantly held by the Colored soldiers from the United States, who fought with all the heroism and endurance the best traditions of the army has chronicled. The Colored soldiers, under their own captain from Dayton, Ohio, who so splendidly maintained their line in the Argonne Forests, and those who held that bloody and forever historical Hill 304, had the odds against them, but, like Tennyson's immortalized "Six Hundred," they fought bravely and well, "firmed in the belief" it was not theirs to reason why. It was theirs "to do and die," and, like the patriots they were, they did DO and this war's history will so record.

NEGRO SOLDIERS AFRAID OF NOTHING EXCEPT DARKNESS

Daring During Day, Weaken When They Begin to "See Things" at Night.

N Y C HERALD
SEPTEMBER 30, 1918

WITH THE AMERICAN TROOPS IN FRANCE (Correspondence of the Associated Press).—American negro troopers are regarded by their officers as exceptionally good at patrol work, as raiders and scouts. They seem to have some quality lacking in the white man which enables them to slink and crawl across No Man's Land in a way that defies detection.

But the negroes never lose their latent superstition and fear of the dark. Without white officers to support them morally their value is said to deteriorate quickly. They "see things" with ease.

The negro trooper's timidity at night is best illustrated by the experience of a captain, who found one of his men at work after dark. The negro was talking violently to himself:—

"Niggah, pick up that wheelbarrow and push it over there!" "Now put that barrow down!" "Tip it over and empty it!" "Now wheel it back and fill it up again!"

To all of which the negro answered "Yes, sah!" and suited the action to the word. He explained to the astonished captain that he felt less lonely and scared in the dark if he pretended a white officer was there to give him orders.

Let the average negro soldier halt and be forced to lie down for a time, and he goes to sleep almost immediately, unless he is forcibly kept awake. The leaders of at least one regiment have had to adopt a plan whereby all the members of a patrol when they lie down join hands, with the white officer at one end. He keeps the squad awake then by pressing the hand of the man next to him, who repeats the pressure to his right or left and receives an answering pressure as evidence that his companions are awaked.

Nevertheless, the negroes are always ready for a fight. One regiment had begged its way into a portion of the line where action was assured in the last German offensive, and that action suddenly began. Five of the officers of that regiment alone were in hospital, but heard a few hours in advance of what was coming.

The colonel left the hospital on crutches, two other officers were carried to the trenches on litters and two more hobbled in—so as to be with their men and be assured they gave a good account of themselves. They did.

The negro troops are deeply attached to their white officers, and will go through fire and flood for them—or with them. In the main also the officers are attached to the men, take pride in them and father them no end. The negroes are punctilious in such details as saluting and deference to officers and superiors, though lax in other matters of discipline which they do not understand.

According to press dispatches when fighting ceased the most advanced section of the Western front was held by the American troops who were brigaded with the Seventh French Army The unit formerly was the 16th New York Infantry, the famous Negro regiment. With the French and Senegalese troops they held the town of Thann.

This regiment has won many laurels since being sent to France. Frequent dispatches have told of the glorious and valorous deeds of its members. The unit first came into distinction by the bravery of Roberts and Johnson who whipped twenty-four Germans. Praises came fast after this, and the boys were in the thick of the fight in the Argonne Forest and were at the front in the fall of Saint Michiel Soissons, Chauteau Thierry and Thia Court.

Stories of Human Interest
By Ralph W. Tyler,
Accredited Representative of the Committee on Public Information.

Somewhere in France.—With a gasoline can as a rostrum, Secretary of War Baker, in the course of his inspection tour over here, addressed an audience of more than 2,000 Colored stevedore troops during their lunch hour. The speech, as well as the entire stage setting, was highly informal. Part of the Secretary's audience lay sprawled upon the roof of a half finished warehouse overlooking the local gasoline can, and nearly all of them went on munching the contents of their mess kits, as it was intended they should do. The Secretary told the men how proud the people—all the people—home were of them, and especially how proud their own race was of them. He told them a couple of short, comical stories that quickly surrounded him with an amphitheatre of white teeth all set in a broad smile. When he wound up by telling them that when he got back to America he was going to tell their people how well they had been doing, and the big shove they were giving to the army supplies which made it possible for the men at the front to win battles, he got such a "hand" as only strong and honestly calloused palms can give a speaker. Both before and after his talk to them, Secretary Baker mingled among the men, asking them questions right and left, and thus getting much first-hand information from these Colored stevedores.

Battalion of Medal Winners

Perhaps the most impressive feature of the Secretary's trip among the Colored men over here was at Blois. Here there is a battalion of Class B and C men, all of whom had been wounded in action, and many of whom proudly wore the Croix de Guerre or the D. S. C. They were lined up for inspection, together with their splendid band, also composed of B and C men. The Secretary would not consent to their being introduced to him, but, as he put it, "It is an honor to be introduced to you." From the middle of the boxing ring and banstand combined, which is the pride of the Blois camp, Mr. Baker told them how much their efforts had been appreciated by the nation; how greatly the nation was indebted to them, and how they—all of them—would be marked men in their communities throughout their entire lives for the service they had rendered their country in time of urgent need. "In after years," he said, "men will come home to their families and tell with pride, and with a glow upon their faces, how they had met and fought with valian. fighting Colored men at Belleau Wood, at Chauteau Thierry, at Soissons, on the Vesle and at Champagne." Concluding, Secretary Baker said to these Colored troopers: "The history of America is in your hands, for you have enlarged it and helped to make it what it is today—a thing to fill every American with pride."

Feats of Fearless Colored Troopers on the Firing Line

COLORED TROOPS WIN HIGH PRAISE

Pershing Denies Canards Sent Out by Germans and Tells of Exploits by Negroes.

N Y C AMERICAN
JUNE 22, 1918

WASHINGTON, June 21.—Formal denial of reports circulated in this country, presumably by German agents, that negro soldiers with the American Expeditionary Forces are assigned to more dangerous work than white troops was cabled to the War Department by General Pershing.

The message said the negroes were in high spirits, and that their only only complaint was that they did not get more active service.

General Pershing said he could not "commend too highly the spirit shown among the colored troops, who exhibit fine capacity for quick training and eagerness for the most dangerous work."

The General's cablegram, which was sent in reply to one of inquiry sent by Secretary Baker, said:

"The stories, probably invented by German agents, that colored soldiers in France are always placed in most dangerous positions and sacrificed to save white soldiers; that when wounded they are left on ground to die and without medical attention are absolutely false.

"The following are the losses as reported up to June 18 in the four colored combat regiments now in France. Three Hundred and Sixty-ninth Infantry—Died of wounds, 3 died of disease, 8; severely wounded, 2. Three Hundred and Seventieth Infantry—Died of wounds, none; died of disease, 3; severely wounded, none. Three Hundred and Seventy-first Infantry—Died of wounds, none; died of disease, 8; severely wounded, none. Three Hundred and Seventy-second Infantry.—Died of wounds, none; died of disease, 3; severely wounded, none.

"The exploits of two colored infantrymen some weeks ago in repelling a much larger German patrol, killing and wounding several Germans and winning the Croix de Guerre by their gallantry has aroused a fine spirit of emulation throughout the colored troops, all of whom are looking forward to more active service.

"The only regret expressed by colored troops is that they are not given more dangerous work to do. They are especially amused at the most dangerous positions, and are desirous of having more active service than has been permitted them thus far. I cannot commend too highly the spirit shown among the colored combat troops, who exhibit fine capacity for quick training and eagerness for the most dangerous work."

GREAT COURAGE UNDER HEAVY FIRE NEAR FAMOUS VERDUN—SAY DIXIE LUCK WORKED.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, July 1.—American Negro troops proved their value as fighting men in the line east of Verdun on June 12 when the Germans attempted a raid but were completely repulsed.

The boches began a terrific bombardment at one minute after midnight, throwing over between 3,000 and 4,000 shells from guns ranging in size from sixty-seven to 340 millimeters. The bombardment was concentrated on small areas. Many of the shells made holes from ten to fifteen feet across.

Keep Up Steady Barrage.

The Negroes, however, stuck to their posts, operating machine guns and automatic rifles, and keeping up such a steady barrage that the German infantry failed to penetrate the American lines.

The Americans suffered only two wounded. "Dixie luck was a-workin' with us," explained one. "We all got knocked down lots o'times, but every man got right up.

During the attack the crew of a machine gun was bowled over by a projectile, which made a fifteen foot hole ten feet from them. They all got up, remounted the gun and continued shooting until it jammed. Then, despite the terrible bombardment, they fixed it and again turned it on the Germans. This incident was repeated twice.

Perform Like Veterans.

Both French and American officers reported that the Negroes performed like veterans. They obeyed orders promptly, took risky duties voluntarily, and compared well with the best troops on the west front.

The German raid on St. Die, in Alsace, was repulsed by American machine gun and rifle fire Saturday, the enemy suffering heavy losses. An American lieutenant and eighty men successfully raided German positions in Fontaine wood, near Montdidier Saturday morning, capturing an officer and thirty-five men, and inflicting heavy casualties. In Lorraine, American airplanes are conducting reconnaissance flights.

Supported by Tanks, They Carried Out Brilliant Counter Attack.

LONDON, June 12.—Among the notable feats of arms during Monday night, says Reuter's correspondent at French headquarters, was the magnificent counter attack of native African troops, supported by tanks, which enabled the French to retake La Porte farm on a crest 370 feet high just west of the Compiegne road, together with the high ground north of it.

Discussing the situation Tuesday, the correspondent adds:

"Checked on their right and center, the Germans have thrown fresh masses of troops in the battle on their left wing with a view of reaching the Oise. The country here is a mass of little hills separated by deep ravines, running mainly south or east and lends itself readily to the enemy's favorite tactics of infiltration in small detachments.

"The allied troops are operating in a narrow belt on the left between the enemy's advancing line and the Oise. With no bridges in the rear, they run the risk of being cut off by the enemy, should he reach the river bank south of them, and accordingly they are being withdrawn gradually to the river whence the enemy is pursuing them. The Germans soon will find themselves without cover in an open valley under the fire of the allied artillery and machine guns.

"Ribecourt is now in the enemy's front line. This village is about a mile and a half from the bank of the Oise and as the enemy line now passes around it the French retirement to the river valley was inevitable.

"The mass of forests including D'Oarscamp wood, Carlepont forest and Montagne wood, which we now hold on the east bank is enclosed by the Oise on the north and the west and by the German lines which skirt the edge of the wood on the east.

"Before the battle the Germans held the right bank of the Oise, from Pontoise to Pont L'Eveque. If they now succeed in establishing themselves along the river valley as far as Ribecourt, the allied troops in the forests on the left banks will be between three fires."

They receive the same substantial fare the white soldier receives, and the white soldier travels from point to point in the same box freight cars as affords means of passage for Colored soldiers. In short, when it comes to maintenance and equipment, and consideration for the comfort of the American soldier, to use a trite saying, "the folks are as good as the people." There is absolutely no discrimination, and the cheerfulness of these one thousand boys whose freight cars became, in imagination, Pullman palace cars, was the proof to me that the colored boys in the ranks are getting a fifty-fifty break.

SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE.—When this war is over and peace, lasting peace, declared, and the necessitious censorship has been lifted so one may mention the names of army units cities and towns, the colored historian who records the history of the colored soldier in this war will need no imaginative power to tell of the service, the daring deeds of valor, and the incomparable fighting colored men did over here in France. Verdun, No-Man's-Land, Belleau Woods, Chateau Thierry, Soissons, the Vesle, Argonne, Champagne, et al, are vast urns which contain the story of how America's black soldiers fought; how they dared, bled and died "to make the world safe for democracy." Bordeaux, Brest, St. Nasair, Montoir, et al, will forever tell a story of the big achievements of the colored stevedores who helped to make possible the victories of the fighting men at the front. The Y. M. C. A. huts scattered here and there, and in which now labor so splendidly and self-sacrificingly colored Y. M. C. A. workers, will bear testimony, years after they have been deserted of the part these non-combatants took in helping and buoying up our boys. The story of how Crispus Attucks fell at Lexington in 1776 will be but a juvenile—a "Mother Goose" bed-time story beside the story of how our boys fought, and fell, at Champagne. Fort Pillow and Milliken's Bend of the Civil War will pale beside Chateau Thierry and Argonne. The story of the Spartans at Thermopylea, and Tennyson's "Charge of the Light Brigade," as a recitation by the amateur elocutionists, will give place to the charge of the colored troops from America at Champagne. The story of our colored troops, combatants and non-combatants, in this war will make every colored man, woman and child of today and tomorrow, proud of their race, and proud they were such one hundred per cent Americans as to do their bit cheerfully in this war. View it from any angle you may; locate yourself in any section of the United States you may, you will find, after this war, that the "New Day and New Duty" our friends have been prophesying for us will be present, and because of the record of valor made by the colored soldiers here in France while pushing the Hun back from Chateau Thierry into Wilhelmstrasse. These colored soldiers over here, now quite 200,000, are proud they are here. They would not exchange the opportunity they have had for rendering service to their country for all the fabled riches of Golconda. When German militarism has been crushed beyond restoration, and glorious peace shall have been achieved by the Allies, these colored soldiers, such as survive, will be eager to return to the United States, glad that they had and accepted the opportunity to serve well their country and civilization. Such as may fall on the field of battle—and many will have—will beam a smile of satisfaction before entering into eternity that they had the glorious privilege of dying in, and for, a righteous cause to advance their race back in the states and everywhere. Contact with the men over here confirms this statement. Knowledge of things over here makes it possible for me to declare that the pages in the history of this war will transmit to posterity no records of stoical endurance and valor more lasting than the record made by colored troops from Bordeaux to the Rhine.

WASHINGTON D C STAR
OCTOBER 28 1918

Our Colored Troops.

Had it occurred to you, the universal loyalty of our colored citizens? Have you ever met a colored man in this country who was pro-German? Do you even know any one who thinks he has actually seen one? I have personally made inquiry in the South, in New England, on the Pacific Coast and here at home in the Central West, and have arrived at the firm conviction "There ain't no such animal" as a pro-German American colored man.

When the big war started and Bernstorff let loose his long and carefully prepared plans of arson, bombs, strikes, and general confusion in this country, one of the most dastardly schemes on which his boss depended was an uprising of 9,000,000 colored people in the South. The effort was well organized, bountifully supplied with money, was operated with great secrecy, and at first was carried on outside the larger Southern cities. All sorts of impossible rewards were promised; the blacks were to own and rule the South; every sort of poison lie was used to tempt the colored people into a revolt against the whites. It was expected and hoped this revolution would keep this country busy for the duration of the war. Of all this, people in the North heard very little.

To the everlasting credit of the colored people they refused to be led into the trap, and like the proposed revolution in India and Egypt and some other countries, the plot miserably failed.

At last we entered the war. What then of the colored man? When voluntary enlistment was offered, he responded promptly and in large numbers. During the civil war, it was no infrequent part of a Northern general's report of a battle that "the colored troops fought bravely." The reports which are reaching us of the colored troops in France include more than "fought bravely"—they fought magnificently.

A letter from an officer describing such a regiment going "over the top" is a picture worth painting. Bareheaded, shirts unbuttoned or no shirts at all, with the most unearthly yells, as demons let loose, they went at the enemy like a cage of wild lions released. These boys from the cotton and cane fields like best to fight with the bayonet, which Fritz enjoys least of all, but in hand-to-hand combat they fall back on their trusty razor or knife, in the use of which they are more proficient. The stanchest Hun is said to quail and run before one of these dusky giants bent on carving a map of Florida on a fat German face or a delta of the Mississippi on his throat.

Yes, the colored troops are still "fighting bravely."—By H. H. Windsor, in the Popular Mechanics Magazine.

NEGRO TROOPS PROVE THEY ARE IMMUNE TO FEAR ON BATTLEFIELD

Trained With the French One Unit Longs for Chance for Real Fight

With the American Army at the Front, Sept. 12.—If Emperor William had been on his historic observation post at Montfaucon in recent weeks where he saw the fighting before Verdun in 1916, he would have seen colored Americans holding a portion of the trenches in the Foret de Hesse. The unit has been a part of six different divisions since landing in France and has always been progressings towards the hotter spot in the line until now it is believed to be ready for the supreme test of a real fight equal to those in which the lighter skinned Americans have written pages of valor. They have already shown that they are able to withstand big shells bursting on all sides—an ordeal which in the first year of the war shook the nerves of the earliest negro units put in the front lines.

"I have as much confidence in the negro soldiers as in any other body of troops with the same amount of fighting experience," says the colonel, a seasoned regular army officer, who is the only white person in the command. "All we want is a chance to get at the Boches," declare the men, pronouncing the word "Bushes."

The story of how Corporal Isaac Valley of Gerald, Kan., won the distinguished service cross is an inspiration to every man in the unit. Valley is one of the few negro soldiers winning the honor. He served three years in the 24th Infantry before he was transferred to this outfit. A private in attempting to throw a grenade dropped it in the trench in the midst of the others. Valley had not time to pick it up and throw it out. He therefore put his foot on it and shoved it into the mud. The grenade exploded and tore off a part of his foot. His only comment as he was carired back was: "I saved the others even if it did get me."

When General Pershing heard of the incident he awarded a ribbon which it is the ambition of every fighting man to possess. "That man will be back in a few days," said the colonel.

One night a big German raiding party came over and penetrated behind the first lines before the Americans opened up and drove them back without the loss of a single man. Sergeant Robert Taylor, Corporal Fred Carrington, Privates Fletcher Phillips, Edward Dobbins, Leroy Owens, Corporal Robert Breckenridge and Private Horace Jordan, all of Chicago, were at an advanced listening post, when the raiders passed overhead, leaving a guard which the men drove away. The men then joined in the attack and repelled the raiding party. The raid was in revenge for a successful attack made by the Americans on the previous night.

These are small affairs compared with the fighting which is coming. The men are equipped with American helmets in place of the French equipment which was formerly furnished. They hope to have complete American outfits except as to rifles and gas masks. The general commanding the second army suddenly appeared and ordered an inspection as he had not seen the unit before. After the formal review the colonel suggested a problem.

"Tell the company to capture that hill just as if the Germans were there," said the general. The drill was executed and the next day the colonel read a formal order from the general, reading:

"I want to felicitate you. The regiment acquitted itself in remarkable fashion. The maneuver which I had executed by one company taken at random was carried out with vigor. I appreciate the particular skill with which advantage was taken of terrain affording protection. Convey to the regiment the expression of my satisfaction."

When the unit left another general's division an order was issued expressing regret at losing it. "That union of hearts," read the order, "and that community of life work and effort only lacks the consecration of battle to seal firmer the ties so quickly formed."

Jerseymen with Colored Troops Cited for Bravery

NEWARK N J NEWS
DECEMBER 3, 1918

The whole 369th Infantry cited for the French war cross, the exploits of these colored troops during the latter days of the war is told succinctly in a letter to a Newark friend by Captain John Holly Clark, in command of one of the battalions. With the Fifteenth New York National Guard Regiment as a nucleus, this body of soldiers had on its roster men from this city and Montclair and other communities of the state. Under the command of white and colored officers, they performed such valiant service that early mention of their bravery and fighting qualities was made in dispatches.

Brigaded with the French army of General Gouraud, Captain Clark recounts two eventful battles in which his battalion suffered heavy losses. He writes that the men and officers behaved splendidly and were highly congratulated on the advance, their French adviser characterizing it as "splendid, splendid." At the time of the signing of the armistice they were in Thann, the southernmost of the American troops.

How his men stood up under the violent fire of machine guns and Austrian 88s is chronicled by the captain in a fight for the possession of a bowl which had been evacuated by the Germans. Along the rims were machine gun nests, and until they reached the summit of the gully they were sheltered from this rapid fire. They made the ascent in the dark, not realizing the proximity of the quick firers, but with the dawn they could see from where they lay in the grass the Germans coolly walking from gun to gun, sending out death and destruction by the minute.

"I myself was on the right in the first line," writes Captain Clark, "with about twenty of my men strung out to the right of me. We had not been there five minutes when the Germans turned their guns on us and I saw the position was untenable. My first sergeant was hit right next to me, the next man to him gave a gasp and groan and one after another the whole line was hit."

Crawling back to a shell hole with the few survivors, the captain declares that his men fought with great coolness for about fifteen minutes, but that the odds of machine guns against rifles was too great, as a man could not show a shoulder to shoot without being hit. As the Germans were making an enfilading movement, he ordered his men to retire with the supporting French.

In another narrow gully down the hillside they were greeted with another hail of bullets, to the dismay of the captain. Making a tour of the battlefield, he collected remnants of his command and led them to a shell hole, where they passed the night waiting for the Germans to be flanked out of their strong position. At 8 o'clock the next morning they went over and into the valley beyond, where they waited under heavy shell fire all morning. Returning to the bowl, they were ordered to support the First Battalion in the assault on the village of Sechault.

A knob about 200 feet high gave protection from the German artillery in proximity of the village, but after an hour they were ordered by Captain Cobb to go around the hill and take positions for advance on either side of the road leading to Sechault. The position exposed and his men suffering casualties, the captain returned to Captain Cobb to get orders either to advance or take shelter, and was just in time to see the latter killed by the bursting of a shell. Rushing out of the cut, he then ordered the battalion forward.

"The German artillery had been increasing steadily during our delay," recites the captain, "and I saw that there was no time to be lost if any of us were to be saved. I rushed forward in the road in the center and in front of the battalion, urging them on over the mile of open field, which by now was a perfect hell of bursting shells. I have never seen so terrifying a barrage and I wonder now how any of us got through."

In Sechault, which he describes as a weird and eerie town, they spent the night, momentarily expecting a counter-attack because of their advanced position. Sent back the next day to the original bowl to reorganize, Captain Clark mentions the heavy losses sustained, saying that his command was reduced to less than 100 men and three officers. Of the officers killed he speaks of Lieutenant Dean of Morristown.

Daredevil Deeds of Black Troops With French Army Thrill Allies

Chicago Daily News 2-24-21

BY PAUL AYRES ROCKWELL

With the French Armies, June 18.—More than once I have related the daring exploits of "Les Joyeux" (the "Happy Ones"), those French lads who are put together in a special corps called officially "battalions d'Afrique." The "Joyeux" are still doing marvelous fighting on the French front. Their motto is, "To the last man if necessary."

They electrified the entire sector when on May 27 the Germans attempted to storm their defenses. Although the enemy attacked in vastly superior numbers, the "Joyeux," fighting desperately, with entire disregard to numbers, held their ground and every yard of the line of barbed wire entanglement fronting the French trenches was ornamented with dead Germans.

Some of the enemy elements which succeeded in penetrating the trenches were slaughtered with bayonets and grenades. Supreme abnegation was shown by the war-hardened "Joyeux," who checked the powerful German assaults. The line of trenches was firmly held and communication was kept open between the various defending elements.

In Heroic Night March

On the night of May 28 the First battalion of the Chasseurs d'Afrique fell back in an orderly manner, having fulfilled the mission intrusted to it and picking up the equally weary elements of the Third battalion, which had struggled no less gloriously. After an all-night march of twenty kilometers (twelve miles) they arrived at their destination without abandoning any material, the machine gunners carrying their pieces on their backs. Several of the "Joyeux" spoke to me of this moving night march with heroic simplicity.

"We were counted and reconstituted," said one of them. "About midnight of May 29, without taking time for repose, we again went to the front. On June 1 we launched an attack, making a formidable charge, which caused the boches to renounce their attempt to advance."

Multiplied acts of heroism were performed by these men. One of the battalions taking part in the action was composed of very young chaps who had arrived on the French battle fields as late as Jan. 3 last, after distinguishing itself in Morocco by its ardor and endurance. The esprit animating from this battalion is very chivalrous.

Recover Body of Commander

Four "Joyeux" in the night of May 28, saw their company commander, Lieutenant Marechal, fall in a boyaux pierced by enemy bullets. Not wishing to lose the body of their chief, the valiant four resisted the Germans with grenades, holding them at bay. After they had recovered the body the same four "Joyeux" carried it all the way during the terrible back-breaking twenty kilometer retreat. On the morning of May 29, although harassed by fatigue and lack of sleep, they organized a short funeral service, glorifying the officer who had fallen at their head.

On June 1 the same battalion, supported by two companies of other battalions, after being almost submerged by the German waves, threw itself, the officers leading with drawn revolvers, into a hand-to-hand encounter with the Germans, who fell back in disorder, abandoning their field and machine guns.

"Frenchmen From Africa"

The Germans have applied the common name of "Frenchmen from Africa" for the soldiers of all the French regiments which in time of peace served in Africa, including legionnaires, zouaves, "Joyeux," colonials, mitrailleurs—Arab and black sharpshooters recruited in northern Africa—Spahis and African chasseurs. These corps are especially feared by the enemy and form one of the firmest bulwarks of the allied defense.—Chicago Daily News.

AMERICANS DROVE POCKET INTO FOE

His Only Step to Retire From Argonne Forest, and Our Men Are Nearing Railway, Says Gen. March.

GERMANY IS ONLY NATION THAT IS STILL FIGHTING.

Chief of Staff Tells Where American Soldiers Are in Thick of Battle.

N Y C WORLD
NOVEMBER 3, 1918

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2.—The debacle of Germany's allies is being pressed to completion, Gen. March said to-day, and the events of the last week in the world war have resulted in the concentration of enemy resistance in one nation.

The new Franco-American attack on both sides of the Argonne, the Chief of Staff explained, has progressed already to such an extent that a decided pocket has been formed in the German lines, indicating that the enemy must make an early withdrawal from the northern portion of the Argonne Forest. This would bring the American forces with their heaviest artillery nearer the main German railway line through Stenay.

The resistance of the Germans on the west front has continued, and the greatest Allied advance has been registered on the Italian front, where the maximum progress of thirty-seven miles has been made. The General said the object of the Allies on this front was the cutting of the Austrian line of withdrawal, and he added, "this has been accomplished." He identified the American forces in Italy as the 332d Infantry Regiment, with Ambulance Battalions 5, 6, 11, 12 and 13, Field Hospital 102. In addition there are some air service training units.

He said the 114th Engineers was with the First Army west of the Meuse and the 52 Pioneer Infantry with the 5th Army Corps in the same territory. These are not part of any division.

The 89th Division of troops from Kansas, Missouri, South Dakota, Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona) was last reported in action on Oct. 29 between the Argonne and the Meuse. The 35th division (Missouri and Kansas) has not been on the front line since September, although it is attached to the 1st American Army. The 92d (negroes from Camp Dodge) is on the line east of the Moselle. The 37th (Ohio) had been on line in the Vosges, but more recently its headquarters was reported in the Woevre. The 88th (North Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa and Western Illinois), commanded by Major Gen. William Weigel, is on line in the Belfort sector in Alsace near the Swiss border; the 26th (New England) has been in action east of the Meuse.

The 80th Division (Virginia, West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania) has not yet been reported in action. The 83d (Ohio and Western Pennsylvania) has headquarters at Lemans. The 90th (Texas and Oklahoma) was reported in action with the 1st Army west of the Meuse on Oct. 23d. The 30th Division (Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina and District of Columbia) is with the British in Picardy. The 4th Division (regulars) is west of the Meuse. The 76th (New England and New York) still is acting as a depot division. The 27th (New York) is with the British in Picardy.

Gen. March announced that influenza conditions among the troops arriving in France have improved so materially that deaths from the disease practically have stopped. A recent transport convoy carrying 25,000 men arrived at the American port of debarkation, he said, with only seventy-eight cases of influenza.

JAZZ MUSIC MAKES HIT WITH FRENCH

TTLEBORO MASS SUN
NOVEMBER 13 1918

By R. J. Kirk

Somewhere in France 'by mail'—American music greatly interests the French population and every night there is a concert by one of the army bands the natives turn out en masse. They listen with undisguised approbation to the latest "hits" from the States and stay until the final notes of the "Star Spangled Banner" close the programme.

The French fairly go wild over the American "jazz" tunes. They call that sort "chic" And when the band plays one of those rollicking one-steps they keep time with the music and vociferously applaud for more.

In one of the larger American base cities these military concerts are given about three times a week. The plaza nearly a quarter of a mile long, is always crowded with the inhabitants as well as American soldiers. The bands alternate from the various surrounding army camps As the "off the streets at 9 o'clock" order is strictly enforced on both men and officers by the military police, it is necessary that the concerts begin by 7 o'clock This is a convenient hour enough for the Americans, but it seriously interferes with the dinner hour of the French. They are just beginning to "manger" about that time. And as a consequence, many thousands of them go without supper one of two nights a week in order that they may attend the "musique Americaine"

With the overtures the iron chairs in the plaza begin to fill with humanity, and by the time the strains of the second number have reached the waterfront hundreds of working girls hurrying home from the shops, are arrested by the music and decide to substitute the hour and half's entertainment for the usual meal at the "pension"

Vocal solo numbers by some Yankee private soldier are enjoyed as much as the band numbers, although of course, there is not one in hundred in the audience that understands what he may be singing.

French band music in the district "behind the lines," at least, is rather a rarity these war days, so the American concerts add an appreciable morale to the civilian population.

One of the most popular and best known American bands in the "Service of Supplies" in France is composed of the negro stevedores. The men are in a draft outfit and come principally from Western Pennsylvania and Tennessee. They are all natural musicians, and when they are not trucking guns, food and other supplies from American ships and loading them on waiting freight cars they are practising for their next concert.

The negroes scraped up their instruments wherever they could. Some brought their horns and flutes along with them from the States. By saving their payday francs and having good luck at crap shooting they managed to get enough ahead to finish their complement from the French shops.

But then they lacked music. So their leader turned on the phonograph in the Y. M. C. A. hut and jotted down the music for each of his men They play for retreat each night, take part in the infrequent parades and celebrations in their district, and each Sunday entertain huge crowds of visitors to their camp.

The War Unites Americans.

To the Editor of The World:

The main objective which America has set out to accomplish in this war is crushing for all time the military spirit of Germany, but there is another mission which this war is fulfilling, and that is the unification of different races and nationalities. A more rapid advancement has been made in that direction in the short time we have been at war than in a hundred years of ordinary times.

I work in a Government plant. This being Red Cross week, a Catholic priest clad in the uniform of a United States officer made a speech in behalf of that famous organization. Among other things he said: "Recently the privilege was given to me to tour the New England States in the interest of the Third Liberty Loan. Let me tell you, ladies and gentlemen, that the response of our Jewish fellow-citizens was gratifying. Why, I have in my regiment Jewish soldiers and they are my stanchest friends. Anybody from now on that is going to write or speak anything offensive to the Jews will be my enemy." And he concluded by saying that "these are words spoken by a Roman Catholic priest."

Some time ago I read a statement made by some one in France who has watched the heroism of our colored soldiers. This morning I saw a headline in your paper, "Two Negro Soldiers Foil a German Raid."

If not for the war, no Liberty bonds would have been issued and there would have been no opportunity for this Catholic clergyman to come in contact with our Americans of the Hebrew faith.

If not for the war, there would still have existed in the heart of millions animosity and ill-feeing toward other races. This war has pushed the world a hundred years ahead. The menace of militarism and imperialism will be abolished and their place will be taken by democracy, tolerance and brotherly love. The Biblical golden rule of "Love thy neighbor as thyself" will be a reality.

To the Editor of The World:

I wish to take this individual opportunity to express my personal appreciation of the manner in which your paper has so very amiably spoken out in behalf of the "Fighting Fifteenth" boys over there.

Your publications concerning the two heroes, Henry Johnson and Needham Roberts, in Monday and Tuesday morning editions, and the editorial of Tuesday morning, making the comparison of bravery among our people and the attitude toward lynching of them, were masterpieces.

I feel particularly proud of the stand that you have taken. It is not far off when the people shall awake to these facts that you so grandly bring out. Again I thank you, and with such cooperation from the press I feel that something ultimately will be accomplished.

To the Editor of The World:

History seems to be repeating itself after a fashion. Our mothers, if sentimentally inclined, used to sing:

Fly away to my native land, sweet dove,
Fly away to my native land,
And bear these lines to my lady love,
That were writ with a trembling hand.

How imprisoned warriors in foreign countries came to be provided with carrier pigeons was not made clear to listening children, and the aeroplane mail car of to-day, though regarded in panicky poultry yards as a hawk of gigantic size, bears no resemblance to the feathered letter-bearer of romance, but in a remotely analogical sense it suggests the text, "There is nothing new under the sun."

NEGRO TROOPS GET NICKNAME

Soldiers of 814th Pioneer Infantry Will Call Themselves "Black Devils."

NEWS OF LOCAL CAMP
LOUISVILLE KY COURIER JOURNAL
SEPTEMBER 21, 1918

A systematic course of training has been drawn up for the negro soldiers in the 814th Pioneer Infantry by their commanding officer, Col. Cyrus A. Dolph. The system calls for play as well as work.

The 814th Pioneer Infantry is the second of its kind to be organized at Camp Zachary Taylor. The 801st, the first, is now on the battlefields of France.

Each negro is studied individually. Col. Dolph spends much of his time on the field with his men and reviews the regiment at retreat every night. Packey MacFarland, camp boxing instructor, has organized several classes among the officers and enlisted men.

The regiment has been named the "Black Devils," and the men have adopted a standard with a "black devil" charging with a bayonet and the words "Do it right now" written around the figure. This standard was accepted by the men, who cheered and asked that the "black devil" be made blacker. It released for publication until a later date.

Many students who attended the artillery training school and have dependents, failed to meet the requirements of the instructors, but were placed in the army as enlisted men. Officers at the headquarters have received no instructions whether these men will be discharged under the recent regulations because of their dependents. The general opinion is that students who entered under the condition that they would remain in the army in case they failed and have failed will be retained in the service.

Twenty-five members of medical detachments have been transferred to the school infirmary and will aid in caring for the sick students. Plans are under way to increase the medical staff.

OUR WAR CORRESPONDENT EXPERIENCES IN PARIS

By Wm. Stevenson, Overseas Correspondent of National Negro Press Association.

At the ship we were met by several Y. M. C. A. men with a truck and taken immediately to the Hotel the "Y" runs for the accommodation of its workers.

After visiting several places of interest and having dinner at the excellent Y. M. C. A. cafe, we retired for the evening.

At the depot the next morning the leader of our party took a group of pictures of the workers. Shortly after all of us boarded a train for Paris.

All along the road we saw unmistakable signs of war. Women were working in the fields, acting as porters at the depots, pushing immense trucks of luggage and on the trains serving as conductors and waiters.

At every station Red Cross nurses came through the train collecting funds, and at one place we saw a train-load of wounded French soldiers, a vivid reminder of war.

A little after eight o'clock we arrived in Paris, the great city of which we had heard so much, and knew so little about. It was dark except for a few street lights. The stillness which existed was almost uncanny. Crowds of people stood about the depot, including many Y. M. C. A. workers. Immediately an autobus was filled with members of our party and driven hurriedly across the River Seine to our hotel on the Rue de Rivoli. After we had unloaded our baggage, which consisted of almost every kind of luggage, and which we had packed under and over us, we entered the hotel and immediately sat down to dinner. There we were met by some of the officials of the Y. M. C. A., who made us welcome, and wished us good luck in our new and perilous field of labor.

At eleven o'clock we retired, worn out, having traveled almost continuously for twelve days. The next morning we reported to headquarters, and, incidentally, saw some of the city of Paris.

At seven o'clock in the evening, accompanied by three other "Y" men I had dinner at the restaurant of the Y. M. C. A.

We had just left the dining room and were congratulating ourselves upon our safe arrival in France when, suddenly, we heard a shrill noise. Chills ran through my body. What could this thing be?

We stopped. At each other we looked in amazement. We could do nothing else. People were running hither and thither. We heard voices but could see no one. Finally, looking down, we saw in the cellars the people we had heard. Then we knew, we were positive an air raid was on, for we had read in the newspapers, as all the world has, that when the Germans attack London and Paris from the air the people flee to their cellars, the safest place to go at such a time. The noise we had heard was the siren whistle, and was mounted on one of the many automobiles which run swiftly through the city notifying the populace when the Germans are about to make a raid. It was the signal to "take to cover." Every Frenchman knows what it means, and obeys, and now every American knows and has learned to obey the warning.

In a few moments we heard the booming of guns, hundreds of them, it seemed. These constituted the barrage which the French put up around the city to prevent the enemy from coming in with his Gothas.

Most of the few lights we had seen were now extinguished. Every now and then we heard reports, different in sound than all the others. These were made by German airmen.

The streets now presented an even more dreary scene than before. Except for Red Cross ambulances and Y. M. C. A. conveyances, without lights, and running speedily, all traffic had ceased; every one had obeyed the warning to "take to cover."

As I stood at the door of the hotel looking up, an automobile stopped at the curb. Out of it stepped a Y. M. C. A. man with a metal hat on, the first of its kind I had seen. He had just returned from the front. I talked with him a few minutes and he told me of how the shells had dropped all around his dugout while he was serving soldiers within. The half can never be told of the great service the men and women of the Red Triangle are rendering voluntarily.

I have mentioned the fact that I stood at the door of the hotel and looked up. I would not do it now during a raid, for I have learned better. All I saw that night was two or three flares, said to have been signals dropped by French aviators. One day I saw three French machines, but in each instance I could barely make out a small spot as large as my hand, which glistened in the sunlight as it darted here and there in search of the enemy.

In about an hour we heard the signal announcing the end of the raid. The Germans had been driven from the city by the master airmen of Paris. Immediately the people came from cellars and other places of comparative safety and retired. Once more they were safe.

As I passed the hotel clerk's desk, on the way to my room, he requested that I "put out the lights as soon as possible." As the elevator ascended I kept thinking of his request—"put out the lights as soon as possible."

While I knew that the Y. M. C. A. had cabled my family that I had arrived safely, still I was anxious to write them a letter. However, I promptly obeyed the request, retired and was soon asleep.

One does not lie awake long in a French bed. They are provided with plenty of covers, including a small curious feather comfort, and are high and large, resembling very much the kind your grandparents slept it. I had been asleep about half and hour when, suddenly, I was awakened by the same shrill noise. For a few moments I lay there trying to decide whether or not I should get up. However, it did not take me long to reach a decision, for not only did I hear the people upstairs hurrying down to the cellars, but I also heard again the barrage. At once I dressed myself and went to the street below, there again to look for that which I could not see. I was really not frightened, but bewildered and anxious, not knowing when or where a bomb might fall.

I could not appreciate, as the French people do, what an air raid means, for many of them have lost their loved ones. Therefore, I could not feel as they do. Nevertheless, I thought it best to go downstairs, for I had been told that when a shell strikes a building fairly it goes through several floors. I was pretty close to the top of the building and did not like the idea of being killed in bed.

Every morning and evening afterward, for three days, the city was the target of air raids. Toward the end of the week I had become accustomed to getting up, dressing myself and going downstairs, and there remaining in the darkened lobby of the hotel until it was declared off.

On the fifth day the people were very much puzzled at the discharge of shells every twenty minutes. They were puzzled because the French aviators were unable to locate any German machines.

That day, accompanied by two friends, I visited the great Luxembourg Gardens. It was, there we learned that the despicable Huns were attacking the city from the front—about seventy miles away—with a long-range gun. I know these shells fell every twenty minutes, for, like many other persons, I timed them.

However, the people continued to go about attending to their business and enjoying themselves. Their spirit is not broken, and it will not be, for they are fighting for the ideals they have so long cherished.

At one place I saw an amusing piece of verse, printed in English, which ran as follows:

"Here's to the Kaiser, the Limberger cheese,
May the swell in his head go down to his knees;
May he break his d—n neck on the Hindenberg line,
And go to h—l croaking the 'Watch on the Rhine!' "

The Kaiser's effort, by way of air raids, to spread terrorism has only resulted in strengthening the French peoples' determination to win.

Strange to say that on the day the Germans began to bombard the city I saw more of Paris than on any other day. This was not my fault, however. My time was growing short, and I wanted to see as much of the city as possible.

Among other things I saw was the wonderful Column Vendome, which was erected to the memory of Napoleon. It is said to have been constructed out of the cannon captured by Napoleon, and on it are many figures, depicting the wars of the world.

I also visited the beautiful Tuileries Gardens, the site upon which, I was told, one of the kings of France lived. These gardens are located across the street from the hotel where I stopped. One of the shells from the big gun fell there. No one was hurt, but there was a large hole in the ground, and a wall which it struck was partly de-

French Girls and U. S. Soldier Sweethearts

The Combination Is Not So Dangerous As Has Been Supposed—and the Reason Is Comforting, if Unromantic.

Miss Neysa McMein, the brilliant American girl artist, who has been entertaining our soldier boys in France.

By Karl K. Kitchen.

GATHER 'round me, girls. This will interest you, especially if you have a soldier sweetheart in France. Have you been afraid your doughboy might "fall" for one of those fascinating French females?—to drop from Cardinal Newman English to the vernacular of Manhattan-on-the-Dual-Subways.

Don't worry. The particular object of your devotion may be quite fickle—but there is little danger that he will fall in love with Yvonne, Simone, Gabrielle or any other more or less fair daughter of France. He may arrive minus an arm or even a leg, but his heart will probably be intact, not merely as his cardiac pumping station, but for YOU.

MISS NEYSA McMEIN, who has just returned from France where she spent six months with our doughboys, is the bearer of these glad tidings. As the only American girl artist at the front, not to mention her activities as a Y. M. C. A. entertainer, Miss McMein had unusual opportunities to observe the attitude of our soldiers toward the dear unfair sex of more or less sunny France. And she reports "nothing doing."

"Even if it were leap year, our doughboys would be in little danger," said Miss McMein to the writer. "Our soldiers—I am speaking of the enlisted men—have the greatest respect for the women of France—both old and young, but love is something else again, isn't it? There will be a few marriages in exclusive circles. But the great majority of our troops have not seen, and never will see, Paris. The France they know is the France of the provinces. And without any intent to be 'catty' I must say that even the marriageable girls in these parts are not likely to be the ideals of our boys. As dozens of them put it to me—the girls of the French provinces seem to lack the winsomeness of the average American girl. There are several reasons. Here is one:

"I come from out Chicago way—where girls have been accused of finding baby grand pianos in the toes of their stockings on Christmas morning. When one is at a susceptible age a pair of provincial French feet is an even more terrible blow to romance.

"Our boys are crazy about the French children—there is nothing that interests them more than a kiddie of six or seven. But the women over there from seventeen to fifty have no dangerous fascinations for them.

"IN the first place," Miss McMein went on, "very few of the enlisted men speak any French. Their vocabulary is limited to "Bonjour, mademoiselle." "Merci, beaucoup," and "Vive la France." So, except with little children, their conversation is not every illuminating, for the French girls in the

NEGRO SOLDIERS GOOD FIGHTERS

(The Censor, May 29)

St. Louis Dispatch—6-31-18

In an editorial, the Censor publishes an article concerning the Negro and his position in this country as a soldier and citizen.

After a brief review of the fighting qualities of the Negro from Crispus Attucks to Needham and Johnson, The Censor continues:

"Yet it is a fact, beyond dispute, that the blacks have been denied the full rights of American citizenship in many parts of the country, more particularly in the South. There is food for thought in contrasting the reports from France about the splendid fighting ability and courage of these people with the current reports from several Southern States of the lynching of black civilians and black soldiers, and even black women, usually on the mere suspicion of infraction of the law, and not infrequently in response to mere clamor and to glut the appetite of the mob spirit.

These brutal lynchings, several of which have very recently been reported, are but part of the great injustice inflicted on the black race in the South. Court trials are denied them, and practically all the rights of citizenship inherent under the constitution of nation and states. Black men are not to exercise the right of franchise, and have practically no voice in the administration of the affairs of the country or in the election of public officials. Yet they are made a valuable asset in the census as basis for unjust over representation in congress and in the electoral college.

This grave injustice is not confined to the far South or the former Slave States. Right here, in St. Louis, Negro voters are made the victims of the same kind of political injustice. In the recent presidential election, Democrats in control of the election machinery, disfranchished Negroes by wholesale, on one pretext or another. Almost any pretext served. This was so notorious that the attention of fairminded and prominent men, like Paul Bakewell and others with a sense of justice, was attracted, and a movement inaugurated towards righting or at least exposing the wrong and the men who perpetrated it. These fairminded and patriotic gentlemen investigated and found full verification of the

Dad's Xmas Letter From France

CHAPLAIN NOAH W. WILLIAMS WRITES FROM OVER THERE TO THE FATHERS OVER HERE—SYMPATHY FOR INFLUENZA STRICKEN PASTORS.

France, Nov. 24, 1918.

Doubtless all in America know that this day has been designated as Dad's Letter Day for the A. E. F., when every soldier is expected to write a letter to his father or some one's else. Since my father has departed to the realms of eternal bliss and peace, I am addressing a letter through the papers of the race to the fathers of the soldiers generally and the fathers in the African Methodist Episcopal Church in particular. The former because of my interest in all the troops and because I know that their fathers are anxious concerning their sons. The latter because I owe a debt of gratitude to the A. M. E. Church that I shall never be able to discharge.

Not that the cessation of hostilities has taken place no more do you hear booming cannnon, bursting shells and shrieking shrapnel, all of which constantly occupy your mind with uneasy thoughts concerning the welfare of your comrades-in-arms whom a good chaplain comes to love as his own dear children. I have read in the press dispatches how universal was the rejoicing in the United States when active hostilities stopped, but you should have been in France, bleeding, beloved France, on the night the news was received if you desired to witness a sure enough celebration. I happened to be in Dejon, a city of about one hundred thousand inhabitants, in the advance section, whether I had gone in company with Chaplain H. M. Collins to visit some colored troops who had no chaplain, being on detached duty. The streets were crowded with men, women and children, and from the very oldest to infants in their mother's arms. Soldiers representing nearly all the Allies also mingle freely with the civilian population in the grand fete. Widows in black, with their careworn faces lighted up with the joy of victory purchased by the sacrifices made by husbands, fathers and sons who died not in vain; orphan children in scant clothing, forgetful of their constant occupation of asking alms of American soldiers especially, whom all thought to have an abundance of money; old men bent with the awful sorrows piled on their many years; all, all rejoiced with an unrestrained joy. And as I beheld the throng and mixed with them, as I made mental notation of the awful world struggle now about to end in a conquered peace, based potentially on the principle of universal equality and brotherhood and knew that in this conflict the blood of all the races and nations of the earth mingled on the field of battle as freely as the different races and nations commingled in France on that night of rejoicing, I thought of that day, sure to come, when the Christ Life will have won a complete victory in the heart of every man and all mankind, in the whole universe.

Could you have been with us on that glorious night and then the next day visit the hospitals where are the sick and wounded for the cause of humanity, and from there have gone to the cemeteries and looked at the crosses that mark the resting places of your victorious dead, I am sure that your sorrow would have had in it a feeling of pride and thanksgiving. I do not know how soon we will be on our way home. Home—How dear that name to us, but I do know that I could never forgive myself if I even entertained the thought of asking to be relieved and return to my home, leaving others behind to finish the work that still of necessity must be done before the American forces are withdrawn.

And, too, I would not have you understand that it is all work and no play or recreation. Every four months the men and officers alike have a week off to visit, at the expense of the nation, some place of interest and delight. The time it takes to go and return is not counted in the seven days' leave. I am very reliably informed that the time is to be extended. My associate chaplain, Lt. H. M. Collins, leaves tomorrow for Nice, Marseilles and other points on the Mediterranean Sea. When he returns I expect to

RALPH W. TYLER OFF TO FRONT FOR NEWS OF OUR GALLANT SOLDIER BOYS AND TO TELL OF THEIR VALIANT FIGHT FOR WORLD DEMOCRACY.

11/9/18

Some Striking Incidents of the Voyage Over—Fraternizing With Press and Humanitarian Forces Aboard Ship—Diversions by Colored Battalion of 10 Per cent Americans.

(By Ralph W. Tyler, Accredited Representative of the Committee on Public Information.)

PARIS, France, Sept. 28.—I have just reached this city, after a ten days' voyage, which was, for the most part, uneventful. We experienced delightful weather from the time we steamed out of New York's harbor until we cast anchor in a port over here. Had it not been for the democratic spirit prevailing aboard the big liner, and which gave me a most satisfactory taste of this "world democracy" for which the Allies are fighting, I might have considered the voyage monotonous. Aboard the ship was quite a galaxy of notable writers for the big dailies and magazines; feature and fiction writers who were taking a respite from that occupation to write "straight stuff" for dailies they are to represent. Among them were celebrities like Will Irwin, Robert W. Ritchie, Damon Runyon, H. J. Foreman, erstwhile managing editor of Collier's, and Applegarth, usually known as "Appy" by the pencil pushers and readers, of the Pittsburgh Post. Each and everyone of these notable writers—former newspaper reporters, seemed to have made ar especial effort to make me forget, —which I did,—that my skin was several shades darker than theirs, and by so doing to convince me that this "world democracy" for which the Allies are fighting is neither a barren ideality nor a rainbow vision, but an actual probability whose advance courier is discernible with the naked eye. The treatment accorded me by the newspaper men aboard was but typical of the treatment accorded me by all the other passengers. Among the nearly two thousand souls making up the ship's passenger list were many Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., Knights of Columbus and Salvation Army workers. These all displayed a most notable evidence of a healthy spirit of democracy by their fraternizing as if they were all members of the same organization. Among the Y. M. C. A. workers aboard were five colored secretaries: Fritz P. Cansler, of Knoxville, Tenn.; Thomas M. Clayton of Piqua, O.; F. L. Clark, of Leavenworth, Kas.; D. D. Mattocks, of Philadelphia, and G. W. Jackson, of Louisville, Ky. The Y. M. C. A. certainly made no mistake in selecting these five men for overseas duty, for they represent the highest type in the race, and by their bearing won the respect, and even admiration of all on board the ship.

Diversion By Serv[illegible] on Aboard

Aboard the ship, also, was Colored service battalion, belonging to an Engineer regiment. They were stout husky fellows whose good humor was effervescent, even contagious, and their rollicking songs and plantation melodies cheered all, making them, those whose thoughts had involuntarily turned to submarines—Germany's acme of kultur, forget them, and banish all fear from their minds. One of the songs which they frequently sang, and with a gusto which gave further evidence of their 100 per cent Americanism, and which never failed to elicit rapturous applause from the white passengers, was "Three Months From Now We Will Be in Germany."

I had heard it said that the big waters frightened Colored soldiers, but these Colored soldiers aboard the ship I sailed appeared as contented, self-centered, and care-bereft on the big ship at night, when lights were out, as they were down in Alabama, Virginia, Mississippi, and other southern states from whence most of them came.

Their contentment at sea, and when in the submarine zone, constituted another disillusion. Among these troopers were some clever boxers, and the monotony of "just sky and water" was frequently broken by some rattling boxing matches between these troopers for pretty substantial purses which the white passengers contributed merely out of admiration and respect for these big, brave black boys, who did not fear to come over here to fight for world democracy.

An amusing incident took place, the second day out. Forty or fifty of the Colored soldiers had formed a circle and were singing to their hearts' delight, and the delight of the passengers. One of them, seemingly, changed his voice with each song or hymn. "What do you sing?" called down, from the upper deck, a good natured son of the Emerald Isle. Quick as a flash came the answer, "Sometimes I dreds of persons without credentials of any kind were allowed to pass the police lines and to swarm into the most desirable seats.

N. Y. C. OUTLOOK

When they were ousted later Fifth avenue, between Thirty-ninth and Forty-second streets, became so congested through laxness at the police lines that the head of the procession was halted above Forty-second street almost fifteen minutes while belated efforts were made to clear the thoroughfare.

In that task the police were aided valiantly by a detail of infantrymen from the newly recruited Seventy-first regiment, N. Y. G., under the command of Captain George Morris. These men had been assigned as an escort and guard of honor at the reviewing stand for Secretary Daniels, the reviewing officer. In the emergency Captain Morris had them port their rifles and press back the obtruding crowd toward Forty-second street, where it was forced out of the way. As is usual in this city, however, it was a good natured holiday crowd and no serious damage was done.

Secretary Daniels Cheered.

Secretary Daniels arrived at the stand well ahead of the procession. He and his aid and escorting members of the Mayor's Committee on National Defence rode up in a limousine which carried the blue flag of the Secretary of the Navy, a catted anchor in the field and four stars at the corners.

There was a mild demonstration as Mr. Daniels mounted the snow covered platform. It was not so conspicuously cordial as that which, a few minutes later, greeted the advent of Alfred E. Smith, President of the Board of Aldermen and Acting Mayor. He was attended by Grover Whalen, Mayor's secretary; by Lieutenant Kennel, police aid, and a platoon of mounted policemen. From his automobile flew the municipal flag.

Brigaier General Evan M. Johnson, acting commander of the Seventy-seventh division, with his staff and many other high military officers, already occupied the places immediately surrounding the reviewing officer.

Many Officers in Reviewing Stand.

Some of these were:—

Brigadier General William H. Hay, Brigadier General Thomas H. Rees, Brigadier General J. M. McDonald, Lieutenant Colonel J. C. Rhea, Major Lloyd C. Griscom, Adjutant of Division; Captain P. L. Thomas, First Lieutenant George A McCook, Lieutenant Hill, Brigadier General William A. Mann, Captain John B. Coulter, Rear Admiral N. R. Usher, Lieutenant Frost, of the New York Navy Yard; Lieutenant Governor Schoeneck, Adjutant General Charles H. Sherrill, Lieutenant Colonel Crall; Lieutenant Colonel George W. Burleigh, Lieutenant Commander Josephthal, Major Howard C. Smith, Major M. Friedsam, Major Howard Kingsbury, George McDonald, acting chairman of the Mayor's Committee; Major Connolly, Major W. E. Moore, Chaplain General to the Right Rev. Patrick J. Hayes; his aid, the Rev. Captain Dineen; Edward Riegelmann, Borough President of Brooklyn; Eric Palmer, his secretary, and Louis G. Kaufman, treasurer of the Mayor's Committee.

At its rear the reviewing stand was about six feet above the pavement. Between there and the front of the Public Library the crowd, in its persistent effort to find a vantage point, scaled the rear of the fragile structure, and tore down the protecting pine rails surrounding it. That part of the stand was a wreck before the police cleared the space, and posted a guard to bar intruders.

Heads Bared to Storm.

As Mr. Daniels took his place the Police Department Band, stationed across the avenue from the stand, played the national anthem. So far as could be observed, every civilian stood with hat in hand, despite the fact that cold, wet and extensive snowflakes were beating a tattoo upon the hair of those who had some, and upon the chilled pates of those who boasted little or none.

The platoon of mounted policemen heading the line passed the reviewing officer at precisely fifteen minutes past two o'clock. Then the crowd began to beat time with its numbed feet as it heard the stirring strains of "Pack Up Your Troubles in Your Old Kit Bag and Smile, Smile, Smile!" A rattling crescendo of applause ran along the pine stand and through the sidewalk crowds as Brigadier General E. Fitzenmyer, commanding the division, was seen stalking along with soldierly pride, followed by his staff. The brilliant pennants of the staff officers were fringed with the white of the falling snowflakes.

In the place of honor in line marched the men of 302d Engineers, Colonel C. O. C. Sherrill. They are a fine loking body of troops.

All In Service Uniforms.

Like the infantry regiments which followed them, all marched in service uniforms, their long olive drab overcoats girded in by their cartridge belts, with rifle at shoulder, short pack between the shoulder blades containing blanket, poncho, one-half of shelter tent and one extra pair of socks. On their heads all the soldiers wore the raksh winter caps reversed, with peak and earflaps tucked in at the back. Officers wore belts, and revolvers or automatic pistols slung in holsters, the latter of such new and spotless leather as to indicate a recent emergence from the quartermaster's stores.

Leading the 153d infantry brigade, which followed the Engineers, came the 305th infantry, Colonel William R. Smedberg, Jr., the 306th infantry, Colonel George Vidmer and the 305th Machine Gun battalion, Major Charles C. Winnia commanding. Each infantry regiment, following closely the present scheme of regimental organization, had at the front its headquarters company, with its quota of orderlies, while at the rear of the column came the machine gun company and the sanitary and hospital detachment, with its ambulance and stretcher bearers—grim suggestion of the sorry work awaiting them "over there."

Change in Men Remarkable.

Already the swirling snow had topped those rakish hats with white crests, while the tops of the packs carried at the shoulders bore an added white burden—winter's seal upon the hardiness and fit sturdiness of those men, many of whom barely five months ago had been weaklings, anaemic of skin, rounded of shoulder and lacking in self-reliance and initiative. It was an almost startling contrast to compare the ruddy and rugged countenances of these lads, after five months of military work out of doors, with the faces of the average young men civilians who lined the curbs to see them pass, and yet only a few weeks ago spectators and marchers had been much after the same pattern.

Commenting upon the splendid bearing of the soldiers, a French officer in the reviewing stand said:—"If that is not a living argument to the people of your country for the utility of compulsory military training, then nothing could be."

At the head of the 154th infantry brigade, which comprised the major part of the parade's second section, marched the acting brigade commander, Colonel Isaac Irwin, and staff. Like its predecessors, all the regimental units in this brigade had their own brass bands of enlisted men and also field music of fifes, drums and bugles, which kept a merry rhythm ringing up and down the avenue, while the falling snowflakes danced a rigadoon in harmony with the swinging step of the soldiers.

308th Marches Proudly.

Colonel Irwin's command comprised the 307th infantry, Lieutenant Colonel Reuben Smith commanding; the 308th infantry, Colonel Averill, and the 306th machine gun battalion, Captain George Gaston. These regiments easily maintained the high standard of marching set by the preceding brigade. The 308th seemed to march with an outstanding precision and pride of bearing, perhaps because it was the superb exhibition given over the same route by that regiment a few weeks ago which was largely responsible for the clamor for more of the same kind on the national holiday.

The 308th upheld the laurels it already had won. For its rivals in the column it is high compliment enough to say that they suffered nothing in the comparison. New York learned that, excellent as is the 308th, "there are others."

And now came the one battalion of negro infantrymen from the 367th infantry. It is attached not to the Seventy-seventh division, but to the Ninety-second. Its white commander was Colonel James A. Moss. He looked proud of his command, and well he might be. There was no unit in the splendid line that won a greater meed of applause as its tawny skinned athletes stepped out to the music of their own band, under the leadership of their own black drum major.

Negro Band Plays "Dixie."

"Dixie" was the appropriate air to which they were marching as they obeyed the order, "Eyes right!" at the reviewing stand, and Secretary Daniels swung off his snow covered silk tile with particular gusto in acknowledgment of their salute.

At the right of line, where the tallest men always march in the platoon front formation, in which alignment all the troops came down the avenue, it seemed that many of these black troopers were veritable giants in stature and strength. Their shoulders, hips and caps were crested with snow. The sticky flakes had adhered to their kinky hair and even to the heavy eyebrows of scores of them. Punctiliously as the colors of each regiment were borne past. Making, as one spectator remarked, "a virtue of necessity," many, after uncovering, shook out half a bushel of snow from the tops and brims of their headgear before replacing it upon their heads. The dignitaries in the reviewing stand by this time all wore snow epaulettes upon their shoulders and little white pyramids upon their hat crowns.

Battery A, 305th field artillery, with its big guns and caissons, evoked plenty of applause as it swept past. Here were the only mounted men in the procession. The task of the saddle riders in holding up their mounts on the slippery asphalt was no sinecure, but those statuesque fellows riding on the caissons, with little to keep the blood circulating save an occasional setting of a brakebeam, probably had the coldest job in the parade. Their faces and bodies were masked and crusted with snow, but not one of them made a motion not prescribed in the regulations.

One ambulance company, with thirteen ambulances and the requisite detail of surgeons and stretcher bearers from the Medical Corps, brought up the rear of the division.

But now there came booming down the avenue the sharp bark which men who have been under fire recognize as the voice of the rapid fire gun. Spectators wondered what it was that uttered such warlike sounds, until presently they saw lumbering along the middle of the flag decked vista of the avenue the "Britannia," the doughty tank sent over from Flanders to stimulate American recruiting some months ago. It was completely manned and its bow gun was spitting out from its hooded turret spurts of flame, each with a boom that echoed back and forth against the tall façades of the skyscrapers. At the stern of the huge land battle ship, the Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack, side by side, were whipping out in the blast of air shot from the leviathan's exhaust.

War Stamps Are Sold.

Behind the last of the parade proper followed a battalion with placards and an army truck inscribed in the interest of the selling campaign for the war saving stamps. Fifth avenue 'buses also were stationed at convenient corners along the line of march manned by volunteers from patriotic organizations, who were selling stamps to the throng as it broke away and started for home.

No unit of the division received a more demonstrative welcome than did the negroes of the First battalion, 367th infantry, on their way to the mustering point. They had arrived from Camp Upton only yesterday morning and had been fed generously at luncheon as guests of the Hotel Men's Association, at the New Amsterdam Opera House, in West Forty-fourth street. From that point their line of march took them up Eighth avenue to Fifty-seventh street, directly through a neighborhood populated largely by the people of their race. Flags bristled from hundreds of windows—service flags from many of them—and negro men and women, keeping step to the battalion's band, trooped along beside their friends block after block, lavishing compliments upon them.

so that their serried ranks were literally a virile study in black and white. After their own band had passed out of hearing the Police Department Band took up the rollicking lilt of "Dixie" and played the favorite air of the Southland until the last of the sturdy blacks had gone by.

Johnson and Roberts, Tho Wounded, Hold Huns at Bay and Save Important Sector From Capture by the Enemy

By THOMAS M. JOHNSON
Staff Correspondent of The Evening Sun

With the American Army in France, May 20.—The fine heroism of two Negro soldiers who, although wounded, beat off a raiding party of twenty-five Germans, killing and wounding five of them in a fierce hand to hand fight, offers an auspicious opportunity for announcing that the American Negro troops, many of whom are New Yorkers, are holding the front line trenches in the region of Ste. Menehould, west of Verdun.

They've been there more than a month and they have acquitted themselves splendidly. Every one, white or black, in New York or anywhere else in the United States can justly be proud of them.

The Negro troops have many unique accomplishments to their credit. They've already been over the top in company with the French, entering German trenches under barrage and bringing back three German prisoners, and No Man's Land has no mystery for them or their patrols. They've been all over it and have gone as far as the Boche wire entanglements almost every night.

"Why, we are the best patrollers in the whole army," was the way one of them put it to the correspondent of The Evening Sun. "Dem Bush Germans can't see us at night, and we don't need nothing to black up our faces with."

COMMANDED BY NEW YORKER

Since entering the trenches a month ago they've taken over from the French a long sector which they are now holding. Their commander is a well known former New York official (probably William Hayward, former Public Service Commissioner) and have been visited by at least a dozen French Generals. Petain himself has sent his aide to convey his good wishes.

These troops are acting in closest association with the French and practically are a part of the French army. They have been so detailed as part of our contribution in the present crisis.

In appearance they are almost indistiuguishable from the French Colonials. The difference only becomes apparent when they open their mouths, and then it is quickly seen that they are the same troops as the two The Evening Sun correspondent told of meeting a few days ago.

WHAT THE CENSOR DELETED

That meeting took place in the rest billets right behind the trenches, but the fact that it was not certain at that time whether the Germans knew they were there necessitated sending only fragmentary information.

But the heroism of the two Negro soldiers in the fight that occurred on last Thursday night now makes it possible to reveal what the censor then deleted.

It should be remarker at the outset that the deeds of these two soldiers were a fine and gallant as any achieved by any American soldiers since they came to France. Their heroism recalls some of the old tales of devotion of Negro troops in the Civil War.

The two men are Harry Johnson, 23 years old, of Monroe street, Albany, and Needham Roberts, son of Rev. Norman J. Roberts of Trenton, N. J. Both have spent much time in New York city.

They have been cited for the Croix de Guerre before the French army, which means they will receive the cross with the palm.

TEXT OF CITATIONS

The citations say that "Johnson, finding himself on sentinel duty at night and being attacked by a group of a dozen Germans, put one hors de combat with a shot from his rifle, seriously wounded two others with a knife and although wounded by revolver bullets and grenades at the beginning of the fight went to the assistance of his wounded comrade, whom the enemy was about to drag away, and continued fighting until the Germans were put to flight. He gave a magnificent example of courage and energy.

"Roberts, attacked and seriously wounded in the leg by a group of Germans, continued to fight with grenades, although he had fallen to the ground, and until the enemy had been put to flight. A good and brave soldier."

STATIONED IN MARSH GRASS

Here is the full story of what happened: Johnson and Roberts, with three others, were on duty at 3 o'clock Thursday morning at a small advanced post. The post was on marshy land and in the midst of heavy, rank grass. The two men were on patrol while the three others were getting a little sleep in one of the dugouts.

About 2 o'clock in the morning, as the investigation later undertaken showed, the party of twenty-five Boches crawled into a bit of abandoned trench to the right of the post and then started to work their way toward the sentries.

Johnson heard them as they cut through the barbed wire encircling the post, but Roberts insisted that the noise was made by rats which infest the trenches.

But hearing the noise repeated Johnson became convinced that the Boches were approaching and shouted at the top of his voice: "Her they come."

Fifty yards back of that held by the two Negroes was a larger post, and at Johnson's cry a flare was sent up from there, which disclosed the dark forms of the Germans breaking through the wire.

BOTH WOUNDED BY GRENADES

They were scarcely fifteen yards away, and as the flare went up the Germans instantly threw hand grenades, which exploded with a crash, wounding both Negroes. Roberts was struck by fragments on the right elbow, forearm and left leg, and Johnson on the right hip and left leg.

Both were knocked down by the concussion and Roberts was not able to get up again.

But despite the suddenness of the attack and their wounded condition both of them struggled toward their own grenade supply, and although both were on the ground at that time, threw several of the grenades just as the first Boche entered the post.

Johnson managed to get on his feet and shot the Boche through the chest with a rifle. A second German leaped over the body of his fallen comrade, and Johnson, using his rifle as a club, brought it down with a crash on his head. He dropped with a groan, but there were more coming, his eye one big German throttling the helpless Roberts. Two other Germans were helping him, and the three were trying to take him prioner and carry him off.

DROPS HIS USELESS RIFLE

The infuriated Johnson cast about for another weapon, his rifle having jammed just befor he felled the second German, but found that the small supply of grenades at the post had been exhausted. He suddenly bethough himself of his "bolo knife" which he had at his belt, and drawing this brought it down with all his strength, driving the razor-edged blade into the German's head.

It must have cleft his skull, for the blade later showed blood to the hilt, and the German's cap, when picked up, was found to have been cut almost in half.

This ended that German. Another flung himself at Johnson almost before he had time to recover himself after delivering the first blow, but he succeeded in turning his "bolo" against him, also.

As he plunged the knife into the German's body the latter gave a cry of anguish and—Johnson and Roberts agree as to this—screamed out in good English, "The son of a —— got me!"

By this time Johnson was weak from the loss of blood, and when another German shot him in the right arm with a revolver he fell to the ground. He was vaguely conscious that the little post was filled with rushing figures, all jumbled together in the darkness, and then his hand fell upon a single grenade that happened to be lying on the ground. He threw this in the direction of the Germans, heard it explode, and then everything became blank so far as he was concerned.

But that grenade literally blew another German to pieces, and there is a big stain on the duckboards outside of the dugout with bits of gray cloth strewn about, to prove itc effectiveness. It was Johnson's last effort, but it was enough to put the Germans to flight.

They went so fast they barely had time enough to carry off their dead and wounded in the stretchers which, as is their custom in making riads, they brought with them.

But they did not have time to take with them two stretchers, six wire cutters, twenty-four grenades and three revolvers which they left behind as mute evidence of the fact that the two Negroes had been too much for them.

The other three Americans at the post were just emerging from their dugout when the fight commenced and were knocked down by the force of the exploding grenades. They got to their feet barely in time to see the last of the Boches disappearing. They gave chase but could not catch up with the fleet footed foe.

A few minutes later Lieut. Richard Pratt of Brooklyn and Arthur W. Little of New York came up leading a strong patrol, which also was unable to find any trace of the enemy.

When Johnson recovered consciousness the first thing he said was: "Corporal London, turn out the guard," this being what he had been shouting during the whole, breathless fight.

Both Johnson and Roberts are in the hospital and will recover. They told the commander who visited them that as soon as they recovered they wanted to go back to the trenches. In the meantime the story of their exploit has passed from mouth to mouth, and when they do return to the trenches it will be a sort of triumphal return something after the manner of the victorious Roman emperors.

Here is what the French General in command wrote to his superior about the fight:

"The American report is too modest. As a result of verbal information furnishd me it appears that the blacks were extremely brave and this little combat does honor to the Americans."

This story of the fight will make a splendid paragraph when the time comes for writing the history of the war. It will show that when it comes to a question of heroism there is no color-line.

THE NEGRO IN THE WAR.

(Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.)

Just what percentage of the American army over there is composed of Negro troops is conjectural. Probably the proportion is modest as yet, but already has it been established that "the colored troops fight nobly." In addition to general mention made at times by General Pershing, he has singled out for particular commendation the heroic exploit of two Negro soldiers who, though wounded, gallantly withstood a raiding party of twenty Germans, saving their comrades from capture.

107

This the Louisville Courier-Journal declares has no element of surprise for any one who knows the American Negro as a fighter, adding: "There is no color line in the war against the black flag of the Prussian skull-and-bones. By the way, it was noticed that no participants in Louisville's great Red Cross parade received from the spectators more applause than the Negroes."

Along this same line of thought this Southron of Southern journals, speaking to the query as to why not supplement the shortage of war nurses from among Negro women, has this to say: "Most of the nursing of white people in the South before the war was done by faithful Negro slaves. Much of the nursing of both the ill and the infants in the South has been done since the war by Negro women, a few of them "practical" nurses. That Negro women have a peculiar natural aptitude for nursing is undoubted. That they get remarkably good results without much training shows that with training they would be valuable anywhere."

Another tribute to the Negro in this war is paid by the Memphis Commercial Appeal, also ultra Southern, which says: "Not long ago one of the most spectacular scenes ever enacted in Memphis was when a delegation of our black brothers left for camp. There was no tightening of the purse strings among their friends and relatives. The day was one of celebration. A dollar spent in making the departure eventful was a dollar well worth while. The boys of dark skins, just as true and loyal to the Stars and Stripes as we of white skins, left home happy and proud. They had been escorted to the train by thousands. A band of their race played the songs of inspiration and the ragtime that is part of their harmonious existence. They may be black, but they can fight, and they are Americans and they are loyal, and the men and women of their race did not seek assistance from the white man. They arranged the details of a big day and it was an epoch-making day in the history of Memphis."

It is a bit significant that the major part of complimentary comment on the chivalry of the Negro in the war has been made by the Southern press. It evidences not alone a spirit of fairness in just appreciation, but also a spirit of friendliness not unmixed with pridefulness in the prowess and the patriotism of the brother in black.

Beat Back Force of 25 Germans, Winning French War Cross

Chicago Defender 5-25-18

BY JUNIUS B. WOOD

Special Cable to the Daily News

(Copyright, 1918, The Chicago Daily News Co.)

(This story is published in the Chicago Defender with special permission of the Chicago Daily News, as we have no correspondent at the front.)

With the American Army on the French Front, May 20.—This story of the gallantry of two American Negro soldiers who attacked a party of 25 Germans early last Thursday morning and completely routed and beat off the enemy, killing or wounding five men, although themselves wounded, carries with it the announcement that Negro troops for about a month have been holding a part of the front line trenches in the St. Menehould region west of Verdun. These troops, acting in close association with the French, have discharged their duties in the most excellent fashion, the Thursday night fight being typical of their conduct. It is described by military observers as worthy of the best traditions of the American army.

Names of the Two Heroes

Early Thursday morning five Negroes occupied an advance post jutting out into "No Man's Land." Three were asleep in a dugout and the two others were on guard. These two men, whose names should always be remembered, were Henry Johnson of 38 Monroe street, Albany, N. Y., and Needham Roberts of Trenton, N. J. About 3 o'clock, when it was still dark, Johnson thought he heard a voice and called out, "Here they come!" A sergeant back of the post shot off a flare, disclosing the figures of a squad of Germans trying out the barbed wire surrounding the post. Later it was ascertained that they had entered an abandoned trench to the right of the post about 2 o'clock with the intention of gobbling up the occupants.

Just as soon as the flare lighted up the surroundings the Germans threw grenades, which wounded Johnson and Roberts, felling both. But the two men while lying on the ground threw hand grenades at the Germans who were now forcing an entrance. As the first German came in Johnson regained his feet and shot the man through the chest, but his rifle jammed and so he used it as a club, knocking down a second German with a blow on the head.

Bolo Knife Effective Weapon

Three other Germans had slipped by and one was trying to choke the prostrate Roberts, while two others tried to carry him off. His rifle was broken, but Johnson drew a long trench knife, which the Colored men call a "bolo knife," and brought it down upon the skull of one of the Germans. Later it was found that the knife was stained with blood, as was a German cap picked up near by. Another German leaped at Roberts, who lunged forward with his knife, almost disemboweling the man. Both Johnson and Roberts swear that the German cried out in English: "The son of a —— got me."

Johnson all this time was shouting, "Turn out the guard," but another German fired at him with a revolver, the bullet striking him in the arm. As the intrepid Negro fell he managed to hurl a single grenade, which from the signs found in the morning blew the German to pieces. Then Johnson fainted.

But the Germans had had enough and they scuttled off in the darkness, bearing away their killed and wounded and leaving behind stretchers, wire cutters, grenades and revolvers. Strong patrols searched for them, but they were unable to find them.

Both Get French War Cross

Both the Colored men were awarded the French croix de guerre with palms, accompanied by army order citations reciting their deed. The Johnson citation read: "Johnson gave a magnificent example of courage and energy, repulsing with grenades by a superior force. They should be given credit for preventing, by their bravery, the capture of any of our men. Three of our men were wounded, two by grenades. All are recovering and the wounds in two cases are slight."

Roberts was described as a "good and brave soldier."

Negroes previously took part in a raid in which they entered the German trenches and brought back three prisoners after finding slight resistance. This operation was executed with the French. They go out patrolling "No Man's Land" every night and have been shelled frequently. Their sector is a veritable snipers' nest and German bullets whistle about constantly, but they are full of enthusiasm in their new surroundings. They had not had a casualty until Thursday's fight. Both Johnson and Roberts will recover, though wounded in many places by grenade splinters.

Most of these troops are from New York and their commander is a former New York official. After several months spent in construction work at the ports the Negroes were given a fairly brief period of training in consideration of the work they had already done in the United States. They entered the trenches on a small scale at first, but their line was rapidly extended. They have adapted themselves to life in the trenches so well that they are making jokes about it, one Colored soldier asking permission to be sent on a "dangerous" mission. They are cheered up by the music of their famous jazz band, which has won many prizes.

PERSHING'S REPORT TO THE WAR DEPT.

Washington, May 24.—Gen. Pershing in his communique of Monday says:

"Headquarters American Expeditionary forces, May 19, 1918. —Reports in hand show a notable instance of bravery and devotion shown by two soldiers of an American Colored regiment operating in a French sector. Before daylight on May 15 Private Henry Johnson and Private Roberts, while on sentry duty at some distance from one another, were attacked by a German raiding party, estimated at twenty men, who advanced in two groups, attacking at once from flank and rear.

"Both men fought bravely in hand-to-hand encounters, one resorting to the use of a bolo knife after his rifle jammed and further fighting with bayonet and butt became impossible. There is evidence that at least one and probably a second German was severely cut. A third is known to have been shot.

"Attention is drawn to the fact that the two Colored sentries were first attacked and continued fighting after receiving wounds and despite the use of

DENY ANY NEGRO DISCRIMINATION

N Y C GLOBE
JUNE 25, 1918

Kearny Shipbuilding Plant Employs Many of Them—But Few Had Complaint to Make.

In reply to charges of discrimination against Negroes at the Foundation Company's shipbuilding plant on the Passaic River at Kearny, N. J., the superintendent of the plant, Hewitt Crosby, invited a reporter of The Globe to come out, talk to as many men as he liked, and ask as many questions about the matter as were necessary to clear up the charges.

"It is unfortunate that the question came up in this way," said Mr. Crosby to The Globe reporter, "because our plant has been known among the men and the labor unions to be one of the fairest. Let me say that on my part and on the part of the Foundation Company there is no discrimination against Negroes. Frequently individuals make their own shortcomings, for which they are penalized, the ground for charges of race discrimination which does not exist. In point of fact we employ more Negroes here than in any shipyard on the Atlantic coast.

Many Negroes Employed.

"We employ about 400 skilled Negro ship carpenters out of 1,600, with four colored foremen, and we have at least 200 Negroes working as laborers. However, you are free to walk about the plant, talk to the men, and find out for yourself."

Throughout the plant there were numbers of Negroes driving teams that were hauling logs and doing other labor. There were also a number of Negro ship carpenters working side by side with white men.

Two of these Negro ship carpenters had a grievance which they were instantly ready to urge.

"Yes, there is discrimination against the Negro," they said in reply to a question. "Why is it that so many Negroes are laid off and so few whites? Last week more than a hundred Negroes were discharged, some of them on mere pretexts. They were discharged because of their color. Any reason will do to get rid of the colored man."

Keep Only Skilled Carpenters.

When this statement was subsequently brought to the attention of Mr. Crosby, he replied:

"Yes, it is quite true that a hundred or so Negroes were laid off last week, but so were more than a hundred white men. We are discharging as many as twenty-five men a day. We have at present all the ship carpenters that we need, and only those men who are personally known to the foremen as expert men are being taken on. It so happens that not many of the Negroes who apply are thus personally known, but there is no race discrimination against them. As to the laying off of men—they are discharged, whatever their race or color, only if they are not as good workmen as other men we can get."

Two other Negroes chosen at random by The Globe reporter said they had nothing to complain of.

Two Colored Soldiers.

"The Colored troops fought nobly," was a Civil War catch phrase that persisted to our own times. The performances on the fire-swept slope of San Juan, when the Twenty-fourth Infantry, steady and strong, helped the Regulars to save the day and win the all-important crest, gave it a new meaning. When, in Mexico more recently, a handful of negro cavalry died under our flag in an ambush fight, we recognized again the fine soldierly qualities in trained Americans of the dark skin. Col. Hayward when he organized the old Fifteenth Regiment of the Guard, understood what he was doing. "I am very proud of them," he says now, with reason for his pride, "for they are clean brave men, fearing nothing." They are the 369th Infantry, and two of their number have been selected for signal honor by the French Government, on whose territory they are sustaining the old tradition. Private Henry Johnson and Private Needham Roberts are the heroes. On sentry duty they sustained a charge of twenty-four Germans. Both were wounded in the first rush, but both fought like wounded lions. Hand grenades, pistols, bayonets, and notably the "bolo knife" of Johnson, did such execution that the ground around them was full of dead and wounded when at last they went down under the heap. Re-enforcements drove off the foe and stretcher bearers carried in the two indomitable and indestructible American soldiers. Once more "the colored troops had fought nobly." In the words of the official order conferring upon Johnson the Croix de Guerre with the rich Golden Palm, that soldier "gave a magnificent exhibition of courage and energy," while Needham, in the same order, is characterized as "a good, brave soldier." Thus, they take their place on the roll of the illustrious, representing worthily one of the elements of this wonderful American amalgam that is the best national material in all the wide world.

New Yorkers in Alsace When Peace Was Declared

The Cleveland Advertiser-Herald

London Times Cable to the Chicago

THANN, Alsace, Nov. 12.—When the fighting ceased the most advanced section of the western front was held by the American troops, who were brigaded with the Seventh French army.

They formerly were the Fifteenth New York Infantry, the famous Negro regiment.

The whole valley was bedecked with British, French and American flags and filled with the joyous clanging of bells, which for four years had been rung only for the dead.

The first to cross the line were Alsatian peasants carrying food and warm clothing to relatives across the line, but at 11 o'clock German troops began to come over unarmed, pleading for tobacco.

The men passed over No Man's Land without hindrance other than deep belts of barbed wire and an elaborate system of pitfalls which made a frontal attack impossible on this sector. It took fully an hour of strenuous effort to cross the eighty yards which separated the lines.

The Germans were either very old or very young troops and seemed well fed and warmly clothed, which was in marked contrast to the plight of the civilian people in Alsace.

The morale of the German troops was utterly bad and they acted as men without honor or sense of shame and openly rejoiced that they had been beaten.

Nothing mattered in their eyes so long as they had to fight no more.

Refuse to Go Back.

At night star shells and rockets were sent up, and the scene was like a fireworks display on a gigantic scale. Back of the American lines we heard that some of the Germans had refused to return to their own lines, and were sent to the rear under guard.

All through reconquered Alsace the joy of the people was contagious and profoundly impressive. French officers said the people's faith had never wavered. French was spoken everywhere, all traces of Teutonic occupation had vanished, and one looked in vain for even a tradesman's sign in German.

If Alsace had not been truly French no such transformation would have been humanly possible.

The Supply Company Of The 808th Pioneer Infantry In France

The Aegis

Sergeant-Major Clifford Sends Herald Interesting Story Of The Boys Of The 808th

12-13

"Hail¶ Hail¶ the Gang's all Here, Going to get the Kaiser, Going to get the Kaiser¶ Three thousand stalwart members of the Dashing 808th Pioneer Infantry so sang as they stepped into a Supply Depot at an American port for the purpose of being equipped just prior to their departure. These boys, although having had previous dealing with a Regimental Supply Company had never before seen a regiment supplied in such a wholesome manner and the effect of clothes stacked to the ceiling of a warehouse which could accommodate thousands of men rather excited their vanity, for they realized that by a little patience they could get a real stylish fit. The Supply Company realizing this advantage at the outset followed the lead of the Regimental Supply Sergeant, Sherman G. King, and proceeded to try on. The staff, consisting of Sherman King, Lincoln Weaver, Littleton Gamby, Roye Marshall, John Easterly and Joseph Watson and General Frank Curtis were most successful in getting perfect fits for Lincoln, he got a nice looking thirty-four coat and although the sleeves were about three inches too short yet it was such a swell fit about the chest; then Roye he got a pair of seven shoes which slipped on perfectly—with the aid of powder, in fact, all of the boys were "dolled up to a Queen's taste.

When the old ship pulled out the Supply Company was one of the nattiest looking of all. The song mentioned above again broke out and was considered very appropriate for one could almost feel the dash and spirit of such a nifty set and no one doubted their ability to get the "old bird."

We are now three miles out at sea and strange to say quite a different atmosphere exists. No song si heard, no cheering, very little joy making. In fact the nineteen thousand soldiers seem to have almost melted away and for what reason? I will tell you of my conversation with Doc Weaver which will throw light on the subject: "Say fellow, take my shoes off, please I am afraid to bend over and see if you can get me a lemon I feel so funny in my stomach". So I was made to realize that the sea was the real cause for the cesession of all joy. From that time on things really picked up for gradually the boys 'took the count' and the natty Supply Company in their form fitting clothes began to realize that there are other advantages of clothes thon style. Easterly's collar got too tight and wouldn' hook, while the beautiful pair of sevens that Marshall had forced on a nine foot tried to equal fire in its burning ppropensities. Gamby soon realized that he couldn't put any confidence in his trousers so even though his strange feeling was coming over him yet he hesitated about sitting down and was thus left on deck between the 'Devil and the Sea.'

These are just a few of the amusing incidents that happened duling the first seven hours. The fun however, has just begun. Night and the danger zone are yet a head and almost everybody is sick. When a fellow feels badly and then is given one thousand different rules to follow in case of a night attack it is bound to add to his uncomfortable feeling and so when I made a general tour of the boat I saw sights I shall never forget. In the quarters where Marshall. Mays and Weaver were sleeping was quite a sight. There they were with eyes as big as saucers crouched on a bunk. The first with life preservers on that came about half way around those fifty-six waist while the latter had on one that looked like an overcoat. Reid, Easterly and several others had completely taken the count and had absolutely given up—most of them to die. Now we will go down to the fellows themselves, the thousands about one mile below the sea and to be assured that we will get there alright we get a map and begin our journey, which is completed in about one hour. There we see Sergeant Quigley pleading with a guard for just a moment on deck and following him comes Frank Curtis of whom I will tell you more later, with both hands on his stomach in the background—well it is too much for me to describe for the 'dash" had almost been completely left the 808, being replaced by the 'Splash."

This same condition of affairs continued for several days until one day an incident happened which resulted in a wonderful discovery in the science of medicine. Something suspicious on the water was met with a volley of guns and as if by magic seasickness vanished into nothing. Corporal Waters who had been recommended for the hospital was completely restored to very active service and until today has had no relapse. So it was with most all of the rest and we arrived in port in fairly good shape with the exception of several days loss of sleep, cramped limbs and one million wrinkles in our clothes.

Fortune did not smile upon us tho for the clouds were dense and it was raining, chill and penetrating. The tinght shoes and coats began to fit more snugly and buttons began to pop as the heavy pack took on more weight with the increase in the distance we had to march. At the command "Pitch Tents" I was of the opinion that an error had been made for to me the command should have been "Lower Boats," for it was a veritable sea of mud.

As my story is mainly of the Supply Company I will give you some idea of the operation which now began. The "Old Top Kick", as the fellows call John Easterly, the first Sergeant, began giving orders and blowing his whistle for all kinds of details such as wood, water, food ect., and although miles from home they seemed to realize their importance and the absolute [illegible]ity of getting these things qu[illegible] before long everything was 'p[illegible]es.' This preparation though ga[illegible]e the Commanding Officer of the Supply Company opportunity to thoroughly educate his command in the new art of "Salvaging." Now friends the art of salvaging is explained in these few words, "Now you see it, now you don't" and it is certainly being carried out by all the members of this famous company. In the course of our 'visit' over here they have salvaged everything from Chinese cigarettes to a Packard truck. By no means put your cap, coat, shirt, automobile, shoes or anything down for even a minute because when you return or look around it will be "Salvaged."

We are now at another place; it is early morning and a strange atmosphere surrounds for when we started on our journey experienced sardine packers supervised our entraining. The train consisted of about fifty real "French" box cars and what I mean is that these cars are an exact imitation of one of Watson's moving vans. Fifty of us to a car made standing room a valuable asset much less a place to sit down. The three days ride made these small respective masses of humanity sort of melt and go into one mass so that when we were told to get out the action was painful. One hardly knew where his own legs, arms or feet were so intermingled was the mass. Early morning found the fellows limping, aching and shivering. Have you ever seen "Doc" come down Druid Hill avenue on a cold day? —well the picture he presented then was nothing compared to him this morning—humped all up, hands deep in his pockets of the outer layer of numerous coats, blouses and shirts. There was however camp to pitch and break fast to get.

Hardly had all the fellows rolled out before the boys of the Supply Co. were put to their usual task of distributing supplies when a shrill whistle and the clatter of horses feet attracted everyone's attention. A guard came dashing up the road shouting "Under Cover." The way that crowd dispersed was wonderful. Henry Larkins, Ed Hill, Croxton, Harrison Fisher and William Green led the way followed by Fred Brown, Sherlock Wallace, Eugene Staten, Eugene Shippley, Charles F. Lewis, Robert Hill and any number of others. They must have thought that they would find the "Kaiser" in one of the numerous dugouts that dotted the hillside judging from their desire to get to them. No foot race ever pulled off in Baltimore could equal this one. Roye Marshall finished about third but he and John Mays, coming from an opposite direction, got to that two by four door at just about the same time and wedged. Consternation followed by finally the force behind broke the blockade and sent this six hundred pounds clear to the back of the little room where it landed on Frank Curtis, the personal representative of Sergeant King, both of whom were seated already awaiting the end. John Johnson said he didn't mean to run but the draft caused by the other fellows was so strong that it just picked him up and carried him in.

The Dashing part of the title adopted by the 808th is indeed well upheld by the Supply Company for for the first two or three days they "dashed" so often to the dug-outs that they became real adepts at the art of finding shelter. The fellows soon got accustomed to this dangerous sector and would get much fun out of every incident. For instance, one night the air raiders made it necessary for all of us to hunt holes and John Johnson, our third Battalion Sergeant Major and Lincoln Weaver, Regimental Supply Sergeant happened to be in the same dug-out. Well "Doc" in his fright seemed to be blocking the exit and thereby hangs a tale. I can't tell you for it takes Gamby to tell those things for Gamby is the President of the Baltimore Club of the Supply Company and nightly conducts arguments in the office. The fellows say he "DOOMS" is necessary.

Many unbelievable things have happened under the influence of bullets, for instance, Lincoln has gotten real GOOD; Marshall succeeded in getting into two left shoes sized six; Sergt. Watson tried to use a mess kit for a gas mask; and Frank Curtis succeeded in taking the entire supply staff out on detail.

In conclusion, I must say though, that the entire 808th Pioneer Infantry is proud of Supply Company under the wonderful leadership of Captain Reid, commonly called "Pop" by his fellow officers. An officer of the old school which has taught him the art of looking out for his men and as Regimental Supply Officer he has seen that the regiment wanted for nothing. Supply Sergeant King and First Sergeant Easterly are non-coms that make his work a success together with the others whom I have mentioned above. Three cheers then boys for the Supply Company.

M. C. CLIFFORD,

Regimental Sergeant Major,

808th Pioneer Infantry.

NEGRO TROOPS ARE NOT AFFLICTED WITH BLUES

Colored troops in France are not afflicted with the "homesickness blues," at least this cannot be said of the 372d Regiment, according to Harry Wilson Reid, a member of the medical department of the regiment, who writes THE AGE as follows:

"The European war is the greatest war the world has ever witnessed, and today you will find all true American citizens of the U. S. A., especially those who have husbands, sons, brothers and sweethearts in France, eagerly watching the newspapers morning and night, in hopes of finding some good news concerning their loved ones in France, who are so near the front. The majority of the people think that we are homesick and blue; but they are mistaken for there is no sign of the "homesickness blues" among the colored troops in Europe, especially among the 372nd boys.

"From the time they started to pack their clothes for the oversea journey to the present date, there has been a continuation of joy and pleasantness among our boys; and I have not the slightest doubt that this feeling will follow us throughout this great struggle and until we reach the soil of the dear old U.S.A. again.

"Each day you will find every officer and enlisted man busily engaged trying to learn every secret of modern warfare that will be of an advantage to America in helping to win this great war. It has not only been said, but thought among many of the people that we would never have an opportunity to help our loyal white citizens of America to win this great struggle for democracy; but as time is the only true fortune teller, it has proven their words and thoughts to be wrong. Because we are actually serving our country now.

"Each day the boys go about their daily duties, not only willingly, but cheerfully singing and whistling their old American melodies. Old Kentucky Home seems to relieve the boys from Kentucky of the idea that they are away from home, while Home Again In Indiana lifts us from our feet. Take Me Back To Old Virginia is a stimulant to all our Virginia boys. It is useless for me to mention the popular song, Old Black Joe, because it is known as one of our favorite songs.

"The boys receive so much pleasure out of their daily work they seem to forget all about the surrounding excitement. I must not forget to mention the attitude of the French people to all American soldiers. They do all in their power to make it pleasant for us; and it is highly appreciated by all of the soldiers.

"There is one thing which I wish to impress upon all of our people, and that is they should write to their soldier boy as often as they can. A letter is highly appreciated by all soldiers. These few lines are sufficient to let the people know that we are all O. K.

(Signed)

Negro Artilleryman Gus Evans' Relative Writes From France

Almost all of the adult population of Austin know Gus Evans, one of the oldest men in the negro population of the city. He was born here and always lived here. He has a grandson named Joseph G. Browne, who lived in San Antonio and worked there as a newsboy before he entered the army, becoming a private in the artillery—the only brigade of artillery ever organized for the army of the United States. The young man went to France with the expeditionary forces and in the course of time saw active service there. Evans exhibits with pride one of the letters written by the young artilleryman to his mother in San Antonio, dated Oct. 20, which is given herewith:

Dear Mother: Your letters of Sept. 11 and 14 and Betty's received with joy. We soldiers would rather see mail day come than pay day. It is hard to find words when one writes so often. I will endeavor to give you some facts of my organization. The 167th Field Artillery Brigade is the first and only colored artillery in the history of the United States. It consists of two light artillery regiments, the 349th and 350th, and one heavy artillery regiment, the 351st. The light artillery was formed at Camp Dix, New Jersey, and the heavy at Camp Meade, Maryland. The decision of the administration to have an artillery brigade composed of the colored race is a just acknowledgement of the negro's rapid advancement and progress since 1865. Of his fitness and aptitude for the technical and higher branch of military work the officers have nothing but praise. We have gone through the grilling schooling with an interest and vim which no doubt was surprising to all concerned, and now the crucial test is to come, but we will face it with coolness and sternness, which is characteristic of the race in battle. We have no fears of the outcome, but expect to put the battle-scarred records of the Ninth and Tenth Cavalry and the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Infantry far in the shade.

"I was very much pleased and interested in the action taken by The Express Publishing Company in offering a reward for the conviction and punishment of lynchers. Such actions give the dusky boys of the A. E. F. renewed courage and assurance.

"It brought me back to the days when I used to sell The Express, appreciative of the opportunity, being conscious of the fact that the privilege of selling papers was not granted to colored lads in all the cities of the State. Long live The Express.

"Hoping that you are all well and wishing you a hearty Thanksgiving, I am, lovingly, your son, JOSEPH

FRENCH GIRLS LIKE OUR NEGRO SOLDIER

SAN ANTONIO TEX. EXPRESS DECEMBER 9, 1918

C. C. LEEL WRITES FROM FRANCE OF LIFE IN THE WAR ZONE.

That American negro soldiers are getting their full share of glances from the French girls is evidenced in a letter received from Charles C. Leel, a former San Antonian now in France with the Young Men's Christian Association. Speaking of the negro soldiers, Mr. Leel writes:

"The French girls like our negro troops. They say that they are such a 'beautiful black color.' The negroes impress (?) the French lassies by telling them that they are the original American Indians and that the bunch of white men in France are mere interlopers."

In telling of the work that has been done by the association for the men returning from the trenches Mr. Leel says that the men come in bespattered with mud and grime but that they are the most optimistic men imaginable. Some have colds and coughs and can hardly speak, he says, but all come proudly back with Boche helmets, guns, and everything but the actual German scalp.

"The women in France are doing wonderful work," he writes. "I 'take off my hat to them.' The men coming from the trenches, in many instances, have not seen an American woman for months. Many have said that the greatest pleasure they have experienced since arriving back from battle was to have a talk with one of these women. The soldiers do not talk of the Germans they have killed, they delight in telling of what they did and say with the exception of going into detail regarding killing. They all are anxious to come back home now. We all long for the Texas sun as I know I have not been really comfortably warm since leaving Texas."

Mr. Leel writes that he has taken part in most every kind of duty since arriving in France. Enumerating, he says, that his line of occupations runs all the way from assisting Red Cross people in carrying wounded to bossing gangs of French soldiers as they unload coal from trains.

COLORED YANKS HAD STRANGE EXPERIENCE

The American 12-21-18

PARIS, France, Dec.—An incident that will linger long in the memory of those who took part in the gallant advance of the 92d division in Champagne came when, as will happen sometimes in all battles in all armies, the artillery was falling short.

The advance had been so swift that there were no wires by which the warning could be sent back. The need for action was so immediate that there was no time to send a runner back and no certainty that a runner could get back.

Then, abruptly and on his own initiative, a signal corps sergeant started to shinny up a telegraph pole. Under the crossing fire from the two artilleries, in full sight and within wickedly easy range of German snipers and German machine gunners, he went up that pole, and, from that high and conspicuous place, signaled the message back.

When he came down an officer congratulated him warmly and asked for his name and outfit. The sergeant grinned and started to fade away.

"But you dont' understand," the officer explained. "I want to recommend you for a D. S. C."

'Yes," said the sergeant, just before he faded away entirely, "thats just what I thought."

THE LEDGER MAKES A GOOD SUGGESTION.

The Indianapolis Ledges suggests "the appointment of a Colored American whose duty it shall be to go to the center of warlike operations and gather all available facts regarding the deportment, the deeds and doings of all Colored soldiers fighting democracy's cause, whether they be under the flag of France, of Great Britain, of the the United States."

That is a valuable suggestion and The News will give it whatever support we can to make it a practicability.

Students of history have been shocked and disgusted at the writers of history who have ignored, in all modern histories, the contributions made to the world by the darker races.

History is supposed to be the Truth—unvarnished, unprejudiced facts. But the historian of today, is rare indeed who does not carry his predilections and prejudices into his writings.

We want to know not only what the darker races are doing in this fight for democracy, but particularly are we interested in the "needs and deportment" of Colored Americans.

We are sure we will not get all the facts unless a Colored American is sent to gather them. For despite the fact that white representatives of the great dailies do make mention of the Colored soldiers there is almost always apparent a feeling not wholly free from bias.

The Ledger further says such a representative could be sent from funds raised in a campaign for such a purpose. That is all right, too. Name the man and start the campaign and The News will do its best to make the proposal go.

"FAST BLACK—WON'T RUN," THE VERY LATEST SLOGAN.

FORT PIERCE FLA TRIBUNE AUGUST 8, 1918

This story comes from France: "To one encampment where there were 5,000 negroes, Gen. Pershing sent word that he wanted 1,500 men for a particularly dangerous feat. So they lined up the 5,000 and asked every man who was willing to volunteer to take one step forward. The whole 5,000 stepped one step forward—and they had to select the 1,500. Then the men shouted the slogan: 'Fast black—won't run!'"

Tells Of Arrival Of Baltimore Boys Who Came Too Late To Take Part In The "Mix Up"

Co. B 325th Field Sig. Bu.

Annex Forces, Nov. 20th '18.

Dear Mr. Andrews:—

We can hardly believe the Great World War has ended. We seem to miss the never-ending roar of our artillery, putting over their most effective barrage, and the constant hum of the allied planes. All France gave great demonstrations over the wonderful triumph, yet paying great honor to those who have made the Supreme Sacrifice.

Our boys were advancing close on the heels of the enemy at the very moment hostilities ceased. Great credit is due our boys for the wonderful progress they were making over difficult country, which afforded the enemy many natural positions for defense. Had it not been for the sudden ending of the great war, some day not far off, we would have taken part, in what would have been a great battle for Metz. Many of our boys received honorable mention for the heroic deeds displayed in the last two days of battle. Of course some of them fell on the last two days and we, as well as all the people of uor race, fell proud of our gallant heroes, who paid the supreme sacrifice.

Droves of prisoners from many allied countries are filing through our village, which is on a direct road from Metz. British, French, Serbs, Italians and Roumanians are among the line of marchers. Some seem pale and to have lost weight, others as robust as the ordinary soldier. I talked with some French and British and all said they were fed very little, and these had been prisoners for four years. They were dressed in anything that could be gotten in the camps, some had on old German uniforms and women's clothing. anything that would keep them warm. Quite a few had souvenirs, one which impressed me most, was the small piece of Black German bread, given them, for a day's rations. The great joy on going home overshadowed all their tales of pity.

Now that the war is over, the foremost question on the lips of all the fellows is, when do we go home? Much speculation is being made, and the various opinions are amusing. One of the fellows told me this morning, our barrack bags were in Paris, that we are due there Dec. 2nd for a parade, from there to a seaport and then to Hoboken. That sounds fine doesn't it? I think it will be Spring before we can commence to think seriously. Naturally the suspense is uncomfortable, but it's great to know we are going home——sometime.

General Ballou Takes Higher Command.

Great credit is due General Ballou in trying to make the 92nd one of the foremost in the U. S. Army. Surely it ranks high, for every unit of the famous "Buffaloe" Division, as it is known, has been complimented highly, for the part it played in various stages of the war.

General Ballou's services were in demand, hence he takes leave of his troops to go to a higher command. Before going General Ballou issued the following memorandum, on Nov. 18th, 1918.

"Five months ago today the 92nd Division landed in France. After seven weeks of training it took over a sector in the front line, and since that time some portion of the Division has been practically continually under fire.

"It participated in the battle of the war with creditable success, continually pressing the attack against highly organized defensive works. It advanced sucessfully on the first day of the battle, attaining its objectives and capturing prisoners. This in the face of determined opposition by an alert enemy, and against rifle, machine gun and artillery fire. The issue of the second day's battle was rendered indecisive by the order to cease firing at eleven A. M.—when the armistice became effective.

"The Division Commander, in taking leave of what he considers himself justly entitled to regard as HIS Division, feels that he has accomplished his mission. His work is done and will endure. The results have not always been brilliant, and many times were discouraging, yet a well organized, well disciplined, and welltrainedc olored Division has been created and commanded by him to include the last shot of the great world war.

"May the future conduct of every officer and man be such as to reflect credit upon the Division and upon the colored race."

The Division was an experiment. General Ballou was commander of the experimental division. He acknowledges its success, hence it has proved that we measure up to the same standard in war as in peace.

Some Baltimore boys came in two days ago as Signal Corps replacement. All were eager for Baltimore news, none having received mail since being on French soil. All were sorry they did not reach us before the war ended, hence they did not have a chance to hear the boom of a gun fired in the world's greatest war. They wished to be remembered to the folks back home. Their names are as follows: William Brooks, Bernard Barney, Cleon Bullock, James Gardner, Peyton D. Goodloe, John A. Groomes, Leo Harrison, Charles Hopwell, William House, Arthur Jenkins, Carl Lane, James King, James Lewis, Joseph Lyle, Howard Mason, Lloyd Sample, Isiah Scott, Hawthrone Smith, Wm. A. Smith, Frank J. Sorrell, Henry L. Taylor, Marcellus Walker, Wm. Wansel, John Yancey, Robert Young and Clarence Yates.

I would like to get some occasional copies of the Herald, hoping you are meeting with much success, I am,

Respectfully yours,

AMERICAN NEGRO TROOPS SINGING WAY TO FAVOR

PITTSBURG PA PRESS
MAY 15, 1918

By Thomas M. Johnson.

Staff Correspondent, THE PRESS.

Copyright, 1918. All Rights Reserved.

With the American Army in France, May 14.—In the half light of the setting sun two soldiers sauntered down the battered streets of a ruined village Somewhere in France. They were clad in khaki and walked jauntily, with their hands in their pockets. As they came a little closer it was disclosed that they were gentlemen of color. "French colonials," we remarked, for at first glance they were the spit and image of Senegalese or Moroccans. They approached still closer, and suddenly we seemed to detect something homelike in their shining faces and in the cut of their hair.

Increduously we tried an experiment.

"Where do you come from?" we asked and back came the answer with a broad grin and a flash of white teeth, "We're both from New York." So the lost are found. New York's negro troops are in France. At one place in the village where they are is a dove cote containing carrier pigeons and one negro trooper after watching his officer labor seriously writing out a message to be tied to the legs of one of the birds said:

"Say Cap-n why could'nt we cross this 'yere' pigeons with parrots, and then they could speak the messages?" 109

They're always good natured. Perhaps this is because they are always singing of an evening, and when we passed through the village we found one company of them drawn up, and raising their full, rich, melodious voices in a famous negro song, under the leadership of a former aid to Governor Whitman.

The song was "Little David Play on Your Harp" and they sang it with a will. The performance is repeated every evening while they are resting in billets greatly to the delight of the villagers, one of the striking features of their new life being the harmony existing between them and the French soldiers. This harmony prevails despite the difficulties of different languages, and the soldiers of the two nations can always be seen gathered in little knots engaged in conversation. Occasionally some of them will break out into laughter belying the old saying about the difficulty one nation has in understanding the jokes of another. They're fine upstanding men, these negro soldiers, and the praises of their officers are confirmed and borne out by the ocular evidence of their earnestness and courage.

It has been said "The lost are found." This needs explaining as does also their chaplain's biblical message that these troops have had a checkered career. After no less than four false starts from Atlantic ports in the United States due to accidents to transports they finally landed in France a tthe beginning of the new year. From hten uniti sometime in March they were at one of the ports of entry where they did everything under the sun. They unloaded ships, loaded trains, laid rails and built docks until they despaired of ever seeing the trenches.

Finally, however, early in March, they got the welcome orders to move elsewhere. One of their sources of greatest pride is their band which has a jazz accompaniment and which has played at Aix-les-Bains for the American soldiers on leave, winning several cups. The band was trained by James Europe, the famous negro bandmaster. The instruments were the gift of a well known New Yorker. The only source of worry to the troops has been that the home mail went astray, but now some of this is beginning to trickle through. The reason the mail failed to reach them at first was that their movements from the time they left the port of entry for the interior were shrouded in mystery.

My dear Principal:

I am sure you have read with interest of the effective work in the present drive. Our Tuskegee men were a part of it all. They have helped to reclaim French soil from the Germans. I saw Ammons, C. C. Smith, Drye, Fearing, and a number of other Tuskegee fellows yesterday. They are well. Kelley is very near me. The young man you mentioned in your speech in Des Moines wishes to be remembered to you. I only wish I could tell you in detail what we are doing. Yesterday, a Tuskegee boy was among a number of our men getting the Croix DeGuerre. Today I have travelled over much of the land occupied by Boches five or six day ago. You can tell from the maps and piles of stones that there were towns at some of these places. I was working today on a hill where one of the most famous battles was fought, and among the men making maps of this memorable spot, for engineering purposes, were Gaillard and Carroll of Virginia, our boys. The fellows are very happy to know that their interests at home are not suffering. The "grape vine telephone," to which Mr. Washington would so often refer, brings the news over here. While I write you, I hear the noise of the cannons. Regards to Mrs. Moton and all of the Tuskegee people. We think of them often. Send us publications of the school; several STUDENTS each week.

Yours very truly,
EDWARD L. SNYDER,

Negro Boy Honored

PHILA PA NORTH AMERICA
MARCH 23, 1918

IN HONOR of a negro elevator boy formerly employed at the Union League, and recently killed in an explosion on a United States naval vessel, an extra gold star with a border of black was yesterday added to the Union League service flag. Ersel Martin, the former employe of the club, was among those numbered on the service flag and is the first to meet death in the service of his country. The black-bordered golden star was added just below the big star on the flag which gives the total number of those gone from the club to war.

OTHER POINTS OF VIEW

Privates Bill and Needham.

Mrs. Henry Johnson—she knows him only as Bill—had faith in the prowess of her husband, if nobody else thought that he was of much account. "Bill ain't big, nor nothing like that," she said, on being informed that he had won the French war cross on the American front, "but, boy," she went on to the reporter, "he can go some." That must be the conviction of survivors of the German raiding party that tried to wipe out Private Henry Johnson and Private Needham Roberts of the old Fifteenth regiment of the New York National Guard—it seems but the other day that the proposal to organize the negro regiment was received with tepid enthusiasm.

The Germans were in force; the two colored privates on sentry duty did not appear formidable, or much of an obstacle. It is true that in the rush they were desperately wounded, but the supply of hand grenades happily held out—Bill, as his wife calls him, also brought a bolo knife into play, handier than a razor; and, shot, clubbed, cut, and grenaded, the Germans soon had enough of Bill and Needham, leaving some dead men and fragments of others on the ground. Twenty-four to two, and the two at last in possession of the field, with three wounds apiece and the glorious feeling of victory.

According to the divisional order of the day, Bill of Albany, "gave a magnificent exhibition of courage and energy," and Needham of Little Old New York, "continued to throw hand grenades, although fallen to the ground, until the enemy was forced to flee—a good and brave soldier." The French Croix de Guerre for both, and for Bill, who slashed in such a timely way with his bolo knife, the "gold palm," a much-coveted distinction. It is said that the whole regiment is now clamoring for bolo knives. Private Johnson's particular personal weapon having proved so handy. The Germans will have to find as apt a name for the American negro fighters as they have given to the kilted Scots, whom they call "the ladies from hell." Something demoniac there certainly was about Bill and Needham.

It was an excellent thing, after all, to organize the Fifteenth National Guard regiment of New York. A merger has effaced the name, but the negro soldiers, whom Gen. Foch speaks of as "very strong and stout-hearted and very rash," fight well under any numerical designation. It is now the 369th regiment. France regards them, no doubt, as the American Chasseurs d'Afrique. "I am very proud of them," says Col. William Hayward, "they are clean, brave men, fearing nothing."—New York Times.

Buried With Every Honor a General Could Have Had

BUFFALO N Y COMMERCIAL
MARCH 11, 1918

A day or two ago we had our first funeral. It was not one of ourboys, but a colored boy from Alabama, who had been brought into our hospital. For some days it was known that he could not live, and I had visited him several times. No coffins had come, so the boys made a pine box. We gave him a soldier's funeral; as good as a general would have. We wrapped him in the United States flag, half-filled the grave with holly, then taps were sounded. How shrill it sounded over the chilly French fields and how white the boys' faces looked in the fading light. So that is the end of the colored boy from Alabama. Aye, not the end, but the beginning. He must have had a spark of idealism or he would not have been here. Somehow it got hold of the boys and me. —From letter of Rev. Henry Wilds Smith in the Lee Gleaner.

SENDS COPY OF "THE STARS AND STRIPES"

Sergeant Wynn D. McCullough Writes Interesting Letter Telling of 92d Division's Splendid Services.

U. S. Army Post Office,
A. P. O. [illegible] M. E.
Nov. 20, 1918.

My Dear Father Williams:

I have contemplated writing you for some time, but the censor regulations and other strenuous duties have prevented me from doing so. Now that it is all over and peace is near I feel at liberty to write you. I am enclosing you a copy of the "Stars and Stripes," the official organ of the A. E. F. I would especially invite your attention to the several marked paragraphs. You will note that reference is made to several picked units of the A. E. F., among which you will find the 92d division.

Here couched in one or two brief statements is the epic of the American Negroes' contribution to the winning of the great war for democracy. Where the battle was the hardest there he was, and not only was he there, but when the armistice stayed his progress, he was of all America's troops nearest to the Rhine.

Time and space will not permit me to write you of individual deeds of heroism, although I would like to do so, but suffice it that I quote a few paragraphs from a memorandum recently issued by the commander of the 92d division, General C. C. Ballou, before being transferred. Here is what he says:

"Five months ago today the 92d division landed in France. After seven weeks of training it took over a sector in the front line, and since that time some portion of the division has been practically continuously under fire.

"It participated in the last battle of the war with creditable success, continually pressing the attack against highly organized defensive works. It advanced successfully on the first day of the battle, attaining its objectives and capturing prisoners. This in the face of determined opposition by an alert enemy, and against rifle, machine gun and artillery fire. The issue of the second day's battle was rendered indecisive by the order to cease firing at 11 a. m.—when the armistice became effective.

"The division commander, in taking leave of what he considers himself justly entitled to regard as his division, feels that he has accomplished his mission. His work is done and will endure. The results have not always been brilliant, and many times were discouraging, yet a well organized, well disciplined, and well trained Colored division has been created and commanded by him to include the last shot of the world war. May the future conduct of every officer and man be such as to relfect credit upon the division and upon the Colored race."

I also invite your attention to the poem I have marked in the paper enclosed, it is the work of one of my comrades in the army postoffice. It was very favorably commented on by the A. E. F.

The Monitor comes to me regularly for which I thank you. It is very interesting and newsy and all the boys like it.

With best wishes to you and your family and inquiring friends, I am yours very truly,

WYNN D. M'CULLOCH,
Sgt. A. P. O. 766.

The writer of the above interesting letter was No. 1 in the first selective draft. He felt proud of this fact and was eager to go. While anxious to be on the firing line he with three or four other Omaha boys were selected for the army postal service.—Editor.

RAY PARKER'S FIRST LETTER HOME

November 18, 1918.

Dear Little Mother and Folks:

Well, little Mawhy, we did our stuff and the kaiser's dream ended with an abrupt bump. We did not get into action, as things went a little too swift. On Sunday, November 10, we were snoozing in the hay when, about four o'clock, our commanding officer awoke us and said: "Boys, make up light, pack, fill your canteens, oil up your guns, and get ready for the line. We are going in to stop things now."

We lit out at six a. m. and by noon we could hear the roar of the big guns just over the hills. But a dispatch rider rode up and stopped us. He said that the boches were hauling it so fast that we couldn't catch up with them. Every road to the front was so choked with khaki that we simply had to look on. On Monday the armistice was signed, and that is the nearest thing to fighting I have done.

But, mawsy, I shall never be the least bit sorry for the time I have spent in the army. I have found many things out that I never realized before, and most of all I have had a chance to see provincial France, beautiful France. We are now close to German soil and in a country which the Germans held for four years. This chain of hills was used by the Huns for a recreation ground and they certainly tried to make it a little paradise for the soldier. Of course soldiers do not look for flowry beds of ease and chicken a la king served by nymphs of perennial beauty, but these dudes came as near to it as possible. There are several ruined towns around here as business was rushing hereabouts. Yesterday was Sunday and I took a long hike exploring this place. There is an amusement park about three blocks from our barracks that must have taken a year or two to build. Leading to it are six stairways, each about a mile long, leading up to the different barracks. These stairs are made of trees about an inch in diameter and cut about a foot and a half long, and laid side by side. When you get down to the valley you enter a beautiful park built entirely of trees. The drives and walks are all of concrete. They had theaters, cafes and dance halls, and the officers had palaces strewn around that make things look as you dream Greece must have looked. They burned most of it when they had to make a hurry-up getaway, but there is still enough left to give you an idea of what the whole had been. It is too bad that Uncle Sam had to interfere with Bill's plans and make him mess everything up so, but it had to be did.

Well, folks, I am writing under difficulties. I never did shine as a penman and when I have to do the writing stunt under difficulties, it's some job. We will soon be making tracks toward the Big Muddy, but don't look for me until about spring. Adios, for this time. I mean, au revoir. The other is Spanish and just now I am trying to be French. Love to all,

RAY.

MUSTERED OUT IN HOME STATE

Camp Dix, N. J.—Instead of releasing at Camp Dix the thousands of Negro soldiers awaiting demobilization new orders of the war department received here direct that the troops here be returned by detachments to their home states, where at central points they will receive their discharge papers and final army pay.

It is evident the new scheme will provide against the Southern Negroes becoming stranded in northern cities and insure a normal distribution of the Negroes to meet labor conditions in Southern states.

COLORED SOLDIERS AGAIN ON FRONT PAGE OF WAR NEWS

Color Sergeant Under Fire From Enemy Planes Refuses to Lie Down and let the American Flag Touch the Ground.

Negro soldiers "Somewhere in France" have again moved up to the first page in the war news. This time the distinction goes to the color sergeant of a regiment. The report tells of the Colored men being shelled by enemy planes while they were on the march over shell-marked roads in France.

The Colonel sensed the situation, and ordered that the men should get off the road and lie flat on the ground.

"Fall out! Take cover!" went down the line. The well trained soldiers scattered like a covey of quail, and a minute later there was no target left for the swooping hawks, for the road was clear and the men were scattered khaki dots against the gray earth.

The road was clear for all but one man. Erect in his place, calmly holding the flag high and steady against the breeze, was the color bearer.

"Did you hear the order to lie down?" a lieutenant asked.

"Yes, sir," quite respectfully, "but while I can stand up, I don't never mean to let this flag touch the dirt."

The Colonel heard and he did not need to stop and ponder.

"Let him stay where he is," he said.

So the circus flew past and disappeared and the flag flapped high and clear, unharmed. Then the regiment reformed, and plodded on down the muddy road to meet their new comrades in arms, and to do their work.

NEGRO REGIMENT IN ACTION.

N Y C TIMES MAY 20 1918

Hayward's Command Now on the Battlefront.

A dispatch from France yesterday, stating that two negro soldiers, members of an American infantry regiment, had beaten twenty-four Germans, killing half of them, was the first intimation that the 15th New York Infantry, now the 369th United States, had got into action. The 15th, a New York City regiment composed exclusively of negroes, is commanded by Colonel William D. Hayward, formerly Public Service Commissioner, and was the second unit from this city to reach France.

The regiment was organized two years ago, and for a time had hard work getting recognition by the State. It was the first of the New York National Guard regiments to reach war strength of 2,002, and later when the Government decreed 3,605 as the mimimum regimental personnel, the negro outfit was first to reach those figures.

France,
November 4, 1918

Dear Mother:

Just a line to let you know I am well but still thinking about the States. I would like very much to have you know exactly where I am, but this is forbidden by the censorship. However, suffice it to say that I am well and trust that you are not worrying about me because the war is almost over and if our boys keep up this drive why I may be home sooner than you think. Whenever I return I will have some history to tell the family. Ask Mr. Clarence did he get the razor I sent him by parcel post. I hope to be back home in about six months, judging from the way things are going with our boys now. In case you would like to send me something let it be cigarettes and not any money. I have some very considerate officers in my company and you need not worry about the way I am faring. I don't get worried about home except at times. We have plenty of rain here but is is not so as cold as it is at home. I guess the government has sent you your money by this time. Hoping to see you shortly and that you are well and happy,

Your devoted son,

Frank.

TO SERVE AS CANTEEN HELPERS IN FRANCE

Mrs. F. Louis Slade, chairman of the War Service Committee of the New York City Woman Suffrage Party, who was asked some time ago by the War Council of the Young Men's Christian Association to help select the women who are sent to France to do canteen work, has announced that the Council will choose four colored women to serve as canteen helpers at the canteens for colored troops.

This ruling has been made to show recognition of the war service of colored women which has been fine in every way. Candidates for canteen service must fulfill many requirements. They must be in a position to volunteer their services, women of good education and character, of mature age, strong physique, have a knowledge of French and a talent for social service work.

They must be willing to do menial work if required and yet must be fitted to advise young men wisely and give motherly comfort. Two colored women have already been engaged for the service and two others are under consideration and will probably be selected in the next few days.

EMMET J. SCOTT ISSUES STATEMENT

The Advocate Cleveland Ohio

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Emmett J. Scott, special assistant to the secretary of war on matters relating to Colored soldiers, has given out a statement pronouncing "untrue and ridiculous" reports of ill treatment of Colored troops. The statement follows:

"The Colored people of New York city, particularly those in the Harlem district where a large Negro colony is located, have been agitated recently because of rumors of mistreatment of Colored troops. The rumors have been to the effect:

"1. That in the American Expeditionary Forces only Negroes will be used as 'shock' troops.

"2. That Negro troops abroad are severely abused by their officers.

"3. That the Germans have threatened to torture to death any Negro soldiers captured in battle.

"4. That there are now at Columbia hospital (Base No. 1, New York city) 200 Negro soldiers with their eyes gouged out and arms cut off by Germans, the idea being that after the Germans got through with them they were sent back to the American lines and have been shipped here.

"These rumors are, of course, untrue and ridiculous. Negro soldiers, as well as white soldiers, are being utilized in every branch of military service. There are now more than 1,000 Negro commissioned line officers in the United States army, nearly 300 of whom have received commissions in the medical reserve corps. An entire regiment of Negro engineers is being formed at Camp Sherman, Ohio. Thousands of Negroes are being admitted and trained in the United States signal corps, field artillery, ambulance corps, infantry division, etc. Two regiments of Colored cavalry are performing active duty in the service of their country. There are white stevedore and service battalions as well as Colored stevedore and service battalions, and likewise white American soldiers will fight and die by the side of black American soldiers in the trenches overseas.

"To deal with isolated cases of alleged mistreatment of Colored soldiers by white officers in the various camps and cantonments Secretary Baker ordered a special investigation on Nov. 30, 1917, and has continued to order such reports investigated whenever they have come to the war department. Wherever there has been ground for the charge of mistreatment and official responsibility therefor has been fixed the guilty officers or others responsible have been discharged from the service or adequate punishment inflicted.

"In the case of local exemption boards whenever there has been evidence to show pronounced discrimination against Negro draftees or registrants as a class the war department in several specific instances has ordered the discharge of such exemption boards and has ordered reference of such cases to the department of justice for prosecution.

"Under recent date a special order was issued by the secretary of war, Hon. Newton D. Baker, unequivocally announcing his policy to discourage discrimination against any person by reason of their race or color.

"The third and fourth rumors mentioned are so ridiculous that no intelligent or fair-minded person would pay any attention to them.

"There is no evidence that Colored American prisoners of war are treated differently from white American prisoners.

"There are no soldiers at Columbia hospital, New York, who were mutilated by the Germans—that rumor is a falsehood."

GREENVILLE NEGRO WRITES OF FRONT

John Duncan, in Letter to The News, Says He Is Doing Hit Bit For Democracy

WITH ENGINEERS

GREENVILLE S C NEWS
MAY 13, 1918

The News has received from John Duncan, a colored native of Greenville, a very interesting letter—the first which has come to this paper from a member of the race in active duty in France. He mentions in his letter the names of several prominent people of this city, who, he says, knows who he is. In a postscript he gives the information that he belongs to the Engineers, "which is known as the Black Boys in Brown."

The letter in full follows:

"Dear Editor: Here you will read just a few lines from one who was born in your dear old city, Greenville, S. C., and from one who is now fighting over here for a cause which is a good one and one that is to defend the Nation and to keep Old Glory on top, now and forever. Of course I answered the call from the State of Ohio, but you will remember that I am one of Greenville's true sons, and when your country and mine sum up the number that has been given, why just put me down on your roll. Because to save my soul I can't give to some other city that which belongs to my home town. So now that I am "Somewhere in France" will you be so kind as to see that the news of my whereabouts are carried throughout the city of Greenville so that certain people and friends may know that I am yet alive, for many have thought me dead. And I also send my best regards to such friends. Sir, here are some special places that I would be glad to have these few lines find the way: G. W. Sirrine, Sr., who once lived on E. McBee avenue, and Mrs. Saddie Dyer, who lived on North Richardson street near Coffee street, and also the employers of the H. C. Markley Coach Factory, in which my grandfather worked for a long time and was well known, in fact I myself was reared in and about the old coach factory, and I was well cared for by the dear old lady, Mrs. Saddie Dyer. Mr. Editor, you may wonder from whom this letter came, but when you have asked any of the old settlers such as Mr. James McGee, or Mr. R. E. Allen, or Mr. J. F. Hunt, or Mr. James Birnie of the Piedmont Savings and Trust Co., they all can tell you about Bob Duncan of whom they all know so well. And so I chance to be the grandson of his and why I was well known around there myself. But now I am sleeping under the sound of bursting shells, and at times can see the reflection of destructive towns. So far we have not lost any of our men and the flank that we are holding, but we are expecting the great drive among us. Who would not gladly give his life and every ounce of strength to defend what we have left behind, and these are our women and children, and we will stay behind Old Glory to see that she is well cared for. Just a few more words and am through.

"While we are over here to give our lives to defend the nation, wont you all give your dollars to defend your sons? Buy a bond and help the Y. M. C. A. also, for they are doing great work over here and at home.

"Best wishes to you all and success to your press, the Greenville Daily News. And may the city and press forever prosper. From one of the true sons of Greenville city and county.

JOHN DUNCAN,
"Somewhere in France."

TIMELY SERVICE Appreciated

WASHINGTON, June 15.—Being advised today that Mrs. Pearl Henderson, of Dayton, Ohio, widowed mother of Sergeant Joseph Henderson, of the 372nd regiment, the first Colored soldier to die in action over in France, was in urgent need of funds to pay her house rent, installment on the furniture in her modest little home, and her isurance. The National Colored Soldiers' Comfort Committee immediately dispatched a check to her for a substantial sum to take care of all her immediate needs. The promptness with which the Committee responds to calls for aid is earning for it the love and confidence of the race. The Committee's contribution to the relief of this poor sorrowing Colored mother who had given a son for the cause of "our new freedom," is not a loan, but a gratuitous gift to a needy and deserving mother.

WHY SOLDIER IS A FIGHTER.

Henry Johnson, a negro with the Yankee forces in the Tou sector, recently killed or captured a round dozen Huns all by himself.

When a reporter for the New York Evening Post interviewed him and chided him for trying to win the war all alone, the soldier answered:

TACOMA WASH NEWS
JUNE 6, 1918

"I am seven. You see, I couldn't do much less."

The reporter was interested. He asked the Yank fighter how he happened to be seven men.

The negro made it plain. He represents seven stars on service flags, and he must make good for each of them.

A star represents him on the service flag in his home on the fourth floor rear of a Harlem tenement.

He shines as a star on the flag of the office building where he was once an elevator operator in New York.

The service flag of his church flies a star for him.

He represents a star on the flag of the negro Y. M. C. A.

The Frederick Douglas Marching Club has put a star in its flag for him.

The Upper Fifth Avenue Baseball Club has not overlooked one of their star players in France.

And lastly he is a star in the service flag of the Industrial Life Insurance company, to which he formerly paid 10 cents a week.

"I leave it to you if I could have done less than I did do," said the warrior.

The correspondent acknowledged the justice of the claim, and he asserted that he would turn the whole German army over to the said Mr. Johnson, who fights for seven stars in seven service flags.

COLORED BOY AMONG THE MISSING "OVER THERE"

Guardian 5-18-18

Boston Post, May 17, 1918.

Desperate hand-to-hand fighting against superior numbers of Germans during the battle of Seicheprey by the 102d Infantry and the 102d Field Artillery, composed mostly of Connecticut men, in which a large number of thtir members were taken prisoners by the Huns, is the story being told by the daily casualty lists issued by the War Department. At least 100 New Englanders in these units have been reported as missing in action to date. All of these men are believed to be prisoners behind the German lines.

Norman C. Elliott of Webster, who has been reported missing in action, was the only colored volunteer in B Battery, 102d Field Artillery, and enlisted June 1, 1917. During the month of April Elliott was presented a war cross by the French government for bravery by staying at his listening post 55 minutes during heavy bombardment by the Germans. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Elliott, reside on School street. He was 20 years old May 13.

COLORED TROOPS ROUT GERMAN FOE— NOW ARE AIMING TO REACH BERLIN

The Freeman 9-7-18

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, August 31.—Since August 21 the Colored divisions of troops, both the 92nd and 93rd, have shoved forward on the enemy's line by 12,000 yards, and continue to advance daily. It is a fact that America's Black Devils are sounding the death knell of trench warfare The Colored troops are forcing open fighting upon the enemy since the failure of the German drive in July. The Huns seem to be greatly inferior at the style of fighting that these Black Americans put up. The Germans had been used to fighting a while and resting a while, but with the Colored troops there has been no resting but continued fighting with the fierceness of tigers.

Early today one division of Colored troops advanced 600 yards without a single loss. It is a noticeable fact that the Germans fear the American Black troops because of the fierce manner in which they combat the enemy with their bayonets, shooting and singing as they charge on the fleeing enemy. When they began their attack on the towns of Sandemont and Recourt they ran the Huns from their trenches and kept them on the run until they captured both towns and several villages on the other side of Recourt. It was then that a command was given them to halt or retire to receive rations and rest, but not a man obeyed the command until they had driven the enemy out of sight. Monday, August 26th, both Colored divisions almost annihilated four fresh divisions of German Reserve troops who had been sent into the enemy's line to drive back those Black Americans in their attack on the town of Bertincourt, but the town was soon taken by the Negro troops capturing 800 Hun prisoners.

"What we're aiming to do," said a sprightly young Colored officer, "is to push our way right on into Berlin without stoppin', as we promised the folks at home we'd do, and we don't aim to be long at it, either," he continued as he leaped from the first line trenches to join his comrades in the thickest of the fray just as they were getting ready to make another savage attack on the enemy, and from the way they were going at it, it won't be long before they will enter Berlin.

August, 1918.

Dear Dr. Moton:

I write to express my best wishes for the uplift of your work and the teachers who are co-operating with you to protect what I regard the garden spot of the earth, the Tuskegee Institute. I and others join in telling you that we are well and glad to be here. Southwester

There is a large number of our boys here whose names I shall not mention. I do not dread being in the army because duty calls me here, and where duty calls, I am willing to serve. I consider this a great privilege to be in the Field Artillery.

Sir, the respect dwells in my heart for you. I am glad of the good instruction that was given me while I was there. (Only one regret I have, and that is I was compelled to leave school before I graduated, but yet and still it is my earnest intention to return and be a student again.

I shall now close. I desire a letter from you at your earliest convenience.

I remain your student,

Harlem's Negro Colony, Whence Came Most of the Men of the 369th Infantry, Is a Veritable City in Itself—Population of 100,000 Is Prosperous

By NINA DEFORD HILL

WHENCE came the men of New York's own negro regiment, those swarthy fighters who went to France as the 369th Infantry and returned the other day to be hailed as New York's conquering "Hell Fighters"? Was it, perhaps, a surprise to some that New York was able to furnish such a regiment—and not New York merely, but a relatively small section of the upper part of Manhattan? It should not have been a surprise, for the city has the distinction of possessing the largest and wealthiest negro colony in the world. It was from this colony, largely, that our Black Watch was recruited.

Less than a score of years ago a single house on 134th Street was turned over to negro tenants. To-day, within the area stretching north from 131st Street to 144th Street and east from Eighth Avenue to Madison Avenue, there lives a population of 100,000 negroes, equalling in numbers the inhabitants of Albany or of Dallas, Texas. The negroes of this district carry on their own businesses, work out their own problems, follow, as well as they may, their own ideals, care for the aged, the sick, the poor, the orphans of their race; in fact, conduct the affairs of their community as if it were a separate city instead of a part of cosmopolitan New York. The rapid growth of the colony and the progress made by the negroes living there are highly significant.

One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street and Lenox Avenue is the heart of the negro district. The Lenox Avenue subway has a station at this point and the Lenox Avenue and crosstown surface lines intersect. Up and down the broad stretch of Lenox or across town on either side can be seen rows and rows of apartment houses inhabited only by negroes and scores of stores and business offices that are run by negroes and for negroes. Spires of negro churches jut above the housetops; here and there an American flag makes a patch of glorious color against the sky. Except where it touches the Harlem River, the district is hemmed in with white residents. But all along the edges are enclaves where the negro colony has thrust out arms as if for breathing space in quarters already too small. Once past this fringe and you enter the negro city proper.

IT is difficult for the sightseer to believe he is still in New York. Not a white person is in sight. Negroes are gathered into groups on street corners, about the subway entrances, in front of shop doors. Negro mothers, well dressed and prosperous looking, are piloting their children to or from school, or wheeling baby carriages in the sunshine. An aged negro cripple is seated on the curb picking quaint old plantation tunes on a battered banjo, his brimless hat carefully placed upside down beside him. Five or six negro soldiers swing past just back from overseas duty, their trench caps tilted at rakish angles. Close behind them prance a score of small boys trying desperately to imitate the soldier stride. Delivery wagons and taxicabs have negro drivers. Limousines glide past guided by negro chauffeurs and carrying wealthy negroes to business or the club. Through the shop windows negro proprietors and negro clerks are seen at work. And everywhere is heard the soft, thick burr of the American negro's voice or the English accent of the West Indian negro.

"Land sakes, what yuh-all doin' up here?" is a greeting often heard as some Southern negro sights a recent arrival from Dixie. A few minutes later a rich Irish brogue may cause you to swing about in astonishment to find that it is not an Irishman speaking but a negro, an immigrant from Monserrat Island. Several thousand West Indians live in the district and a sprinkling of negroes from other countries, but the mass of the population is made up of Southern negroes, many of whom came North in the great migratory wave of the last three years, crowding into the district faster than accommodations could be found for them.

The houses of Harlem are very different from the ramshackle old buildings that the negroes of New York were obliged to live in before the uptown colony was opened in 1900. The district was once an exclusive residential section for whites and the houses are well built and attractive in appearance. Many of them are high-class elevator apartments. Rents are high accordingly, many apartments renting for $50 to $75 a month. Cheaper flats are to be had, some as low as $3 a room. But the average apartment of the community is of the better class where rents range from $7 to $10 a room.

Not all of the negroes, however, live in apartments. The district is studded thickly with private houses. Nearly all of the prominent negroes of the city live in this uptown colony and many of them own handsome homes. One of the finest is owned by no less a dignitary than Bert Williams, the comedian.

IN the negro district there is none of the hurry and bustle of New York—the mad rush that leads the uninitiated to believe that New Yorkers are being catapulted continually from some vast machine. With the blacks it is a racial instinct to take things leisurely and Harlem's "black belt," set down in the midst of the busiest city on the face of the earth, has about it a hint of a homey little Southern town and its easy-going ways of life. But under the appearance of ease there is much business energy. At least 300 business enterprises are owned and run by negroes exclusively. It has been said that from the junction of 135th Street and Lenox Avenue can be seen the business signs of negroes whose holdings aggregate $4,000,000.

Many are successful real estate operators. The firm of Nail & Parker has large holdings in the district, as has also the Philip A. Payton Company, managed by W. H. Wortham, an educated and public-spirited young negro. Here and there on the door of a store or office is the name of some nationally known firm, whose agent, a negro, has opened a branch office among his own people. A group of colored merchants are organizing a Board of Trade and making efforts to obtain property along the Harlem River where negro factories may be established. Already more than twenty manufacturing concerns in New York city are controlled by negro interests, and one of them, making dolls and toys, plans to put up a large building in the Harlem section and employ only negroes.

The negro women of the "Black Belt" are industrious. A unique form of industry which has become widespread in the district is "hair-straightening." About five hundred women have hair-dressing establishments and "beauty shops" which they conduct in their own homes. For every "beauty shop" on the West Side guaranteeing to put an "everlasting curl" into the hair of "white folks" there are two in Harlem guaranteeing to take the "everlasting curl" out of the hair of "black folks."

Harlem publishes its own newspapers and magazines. The New York News, the Amsterdam News, the Defender, the Independent, the Negro World, and the Voice are all weekly newspapers owned and published by negroes. George Harris, a Harvard graduate and a student for two years in the Harvard Law School, is editor of the New York News. His entire staff is made up of negro college graduates. The circulation of these newspapers is growing rapidly. One publisher claims that he has increased his edition by 1,500 copies in the last four weeks and yet cannot supply the demand.

Three magazines are published also. The Hotel Messenger has probably the largest circulation. There are many hotel messengers living in the district and besides the magazine which is published for their especial benefit, they have a club house. Other magazines published by negroes are the Challenge and the Crusader.

A STRAIN of intense religious emotion runs through the entire black race, and Harlem's negro city boasts of twenty-five regularly established churches. Two of these are Episcopal, eight or ten are Baptist, five are Methodist, and one is Catholic. A Congregational Church and a Spiritual Church also have many attendants. Probably the best known among the negro churches is St. Philip's Episcopal Church, established one hundred years ago as a branch of old Trinity. St. Philip's has an endowment fund that yields a yearly income of nearly $20,000. The church, built from the plans of a young negro architect, is beautifully designed. An Old Folks' Home and a four-story parish house are connected with the church, which also owns a block of six apartment houses on 133d Street and another row on 135th Street. Two thousand negroes are members of the church and 1,000 boys and girls are pupils in the Sunday school.

The Catholic Church of the district has a congregation composed almost exclusively of West Indians. Ten years ago, when the Rev. C. J. Plunkett moved into the rectory at 138th Street, only a few negroes were members. Most of the congregation was white. Father Plunkett and the nuns of the convent next door have watched the white families move away one by one and the negro city spread wider about them. The Catholic Church draws no color line and the blacks were received as freely into the church as the whites had been. Asked why he did not follow the exodus of whites, the gentle old priest replied, "Would you have me believe that souls in white bodies are the only ones worth saving? Some of the whitest souls I have ever known have been in the bodies of these black folk about me." More than one thousand negroes are members of this church and the nuns of the convent conduct a school that has accommodations for 400 children.

Harlem is rich in negro musicians. A Music School Settlement, which was chartered in 1915, now has 350 pupils. J. Rosamond Johnson, a well-known negro musician and member of the New England Conservatory, has management of the school. The Mask and Wig, an organization connected with the school, has an unusual custom of giving dramatic performances at midnight. There are many musical and theatrical clubs in the district. A vaudeville association has a large membership and furnishes negro comedians, singers, and dancers for all sorts of private and public entertainment.

It would be a hopeless task to enumerate all of Harlem's clubs and organizations. The negro has a passion for organization which is almost racial. He does not like to be alone in good works. Suggest to the average colored man the need of something for his community and he immediately proposes an organization. There is scarcely a thing in religion, in education, in business, in politics, in fighting race prejudice, that is not the object of organization. Perhaps the most widely known of all negro organizations is the National League on Urban Conditions Among Negroes, which has a branch office at Seventh Avenue and 135th Street. Close by a big Y. M. C. A. building for negroes is nearing completion.

They have their own professional men. There are twenty or more physicians in the community who received their medical training at various universities and colleges. In the legal fraternity there are twenty-five lawyers from Harvard, Yale, Syracuse, Columbia, New York State Law School, and Northwestern University. There are eight dentists from Howard and New York Dental Colleges, two architects from Cornell University, and four registered pharmacists who are conducting large drug stores. Finally there are about fifty trained nurses who have a Nurses' Home on 135th Street.

Negroes of the district hope soon to have a hospital owned and run by their own people. The charter of the McDonough Memorial Hospital property, owned by negroes, has been revived and plans are being perfected and funds raised to open the hospital.

SEVERAL plans are under way to establish a negro bank. It is very difficult to estimate the wealth of the community, for there are no definite data on the subject. Statistics published three years ago gave $15,000,000 as the sum which negroes of New York city had in savings banks. Since then the Harlem district has increased in size and war wages have poured in a stream of wealth. It would be safe to assume that now the residents of the Harlem district alone have more than that sum in banks.

Public School 89, at Lenox Avenue and 135th Street, is in the heart of the negro city. Of the 2,050 pupils, 90 per cent. are colored. There is a hint of prophecy in the pathetic persistence of their faith that emancipation from poverty and race prejudice alike will come through academic education. Parents make almost any sacrifice to send their children to high school or college. All but three of this year's graduating class at Public School 89 expect to go to higher institutions of learning.

Overcrowding is rather a serious problem in the negro city. Real-estate operators find it impossible to supply the demand for flats and apartments. Scores of applicants are turned away from their offices with the words "nothing vacant." As a consequence there is far more doubling up and crowding of families than is good for the community.

The community itself does not appear to object to this. The residents accept without complaint a condition they cannot help. Pushed aside by the whites, they have gathered more closely together and have developed a willingness to hold out a helping hand to those of their own race. They have that rarest of all charities in New York city—kindness one to another. They adopt the child that has been deserted and feed the next-door neighbor, even though they may have little themselves. Their hospitality is overflowing. "Five frens jus' come up f'om the Souf," a woman said who was only recently from the South herself and lived with her family of nine in a six-room apartment. "I jus had t' tek 'em in when they couldn't rent no flat." She opened her heart and her home to the stranded five and thought no more of the menace to health which fourteen persons in one flat threatened than she did of the pure charity of her act.

MANY persons believe that the "Black Belt" is a "black belt" in more senses than one. There is crime in the community—what community is without it?—but a majority of the residents are quiet and respectable. What crime there is the negroes themselves deplore. They believe, moreover, that were they allowed to police the district with picked negro policemen crime would be lessened to a marked degree. As one negro said, "Culled folks is a bit like the mules we used to have down South. You can coax 'em to do 'most anything, but you cain't drive 'em anywhere. The culled man knows what to expect when trouble comes with a white policeman. He knows and he takes his revenge right then and there." The better-class negroes are undoubtedly trying to make their district so law-abiding that the white race may have no occasion to lay the blame for the individual lawbreaker upon the entire community and point to the "menace" of the colony.

Fear of the negro slum has caused the whites to do their best to thwart the growth of the colony. It was started in 1900 by Philip A. Payton, a negro and wealthy real-estate operator who believed that one of the first requisites for the progress of his race was living conditions equal to those available for the white race. He realized that something must be done to better the condition of the New York negroes, most of whom were living in houses unfit for human beings.

At that time New York's most thickly segregated negro district was between West Fifty-ninth and Sixty-fourth Streets, Tenth and West End Avenues. Here the tenements were of the old double-decker and dumb-bell types, poorly ventilated and holding twenty-one families to a house. In the lower part of the city, around the Thirties, a number of rear tenements were occupied by colored people, and still farther south, about Cordelia Street, others lived in dilapidated former dwelling houses. On the upper East Side from Eighth Street north to 130th were a few very small negro settlements. The city's negro population was confined to these districts, all overcrowded, all more or less unfitted for human habitation, and all neglected by those interested in the moral and civic welfare of the city. It is not to be wondered that Payton, interested in the progress of his race, seized eagerly the chance to obtain real estate at 134th Street which a dispute between two white property owners gave him. One of the disputants turned his property over to Payton to be rented to negro tenants only.

Negro tenants gladly moved in. The house was better than they had been used to, and they were happy in the belief that at last they were to live in houses "fit for white folks to live in." The "white folks" were not so jubilant. A wealthy syndicate of whites managed to buy the house controlled by Payton and promptly evicted the tenants. Payton looked about, and in cooperation with J. M. Thomas, a negro undertaker, bought three flats near by and evicted the white tenants. These three houses formed the nucleus of Harlem's negro city of to-day.

ONCE firmly established in houses owned by negroes, the blacks could not be put out. Therefore the whites gave way and house after house passed to negroes. The block between Fifth and Lenox Avenues was soon filled with colored tenants and the block to the west, on 134th Street, was invaded.

It is not hard to imagine what the opening of the uptown colony meant to respectable negroes who had been living in the houses of the old colonies. During the first few months thousands moved up town into clean and comfortable modern houses. The colony grew rapidly. By 1912 it covered eleven city blocks and included about 750 tenements and dwellings, valued at $15,000,000, of which $2,000,000 worth was held by negroes. To-day it includes fifty-two city blocks populated solidly by negroes and has a fringe reaching out to both sides. It is considered the most prosperous negro district in the world.

AMERICAN ~~NEGRO~~ TROOPS IN BILLETS IN FRANCE

N. Y. C. EVE WORLD
JUNE 29 1918

AMERICAN COLORED TROOPS IN ONE OF THEIR CAMPS IN FRANCE © COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC INFORMATION

"SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE"

The incident which took place at the Lafayette Club, somewhere in France, a few days ago, when two Negro Lieutenants, United States Officers, entered the Club and seated themselves at a table, furnishes some food for thought.

It was noon hour, the hour when the natural appetite suggests the finding a place to eat. No doubt, those Negro officers were hungry, and we dare say they were not merely looking for a place to associate with the white officers, and perhaps the social side, other than each other had not entered their minds. But consternation followed, the "Monster Prejudice" asserted itself and for a moment it seemed that every white officer was ready to walk out, but "the democracy of khaki covered them all."

If a democracy comes out of this war that will enable the Colored man to get a morsel to eat, or a little refreshments when thirsty at the places where all other races freely enjoy in the United States, then we shall all feel that the Democracy for which Our Boys are freely fighting, is truly a Democracy for all the people.

We have some appreciation of the sacrifice that white men, especially men of Southern birth and traditions must make, when they accord their black brother an equal opportunity in the race of life, but this present war calls for Sacrifices. Great Sacrifices. Men every where are giving up those things that are Little, and which have contributed nothing to the advancement of civilization, for the Big Things. The magnet which is called "Democracy," on her onward march is drawing all men unto her.

Not that we feel that those two Colored officers were highly honored by being allowed to have a morsel to eat at an exclusive club in France, but we are pleased to know that the lines of prejudice are fading away.

351st and 358th American Safe In France

7-6-18

Word has been received in this city that the 368th Infantry and the 351st Field Artillery Regiments have landed safely overseas. Most of the Artillery Regiment is composed of Baltimore boys and since they left Camp Meade several weeks ago there has been some speculation as to just where they were. No definite information concerning there whereabouts was received, however, until Monday, when cards were received announcing the safe arrival of the boys "over there."

No information is obtainable as to just what port they landed as this information is not given out by the War Department. The Infantry companies are commanded for the most part by colored officers and folks at home are looking for them to give a good account of themselves.

The European war has the name of being the greatest war the world has ever witnessed; and to day you will find all true American citizens of the U. S. A. especially those who husbands; sons; brothers and sweethearts in France eargerly watching the news papers mornings and nights in hopes of finding some good news concerning their loved ones in France who are so near the front.

The majority of the people think that we are homesick and blue; but they are mistaken for there is no sign of the homesickness blues among the colored troops in Europe especially among the 372nd boys.

From the time they started to pack their clothes for the over sea journey to this present date there has been a continuation of joy and pleasantness among our boys; and I have not the slightest doubt that this joy and pleasantness will follow us through out this great struggle until we reach the soil of the dear old U. S. A. again.

Each day you will find every officer and enlisted man busily engaged in trying to learn every secret of modern warfare that will be of an advantage to America in helping to win this great war. It has not only been said but thought among many of the people that we would never have an opportunity to help our loyal white citizens of Aemrica to win this great struggle for Democracy which they are now fighting so bravely for; but as time is the only true fortune teller; it has proven their words and thoughts to be wrong. Because we are actually serving our country now.

Each day the boys go about their daily duties not only willingly but cheerfully singing and histling their old American melodies. (Old Kentucky Home) seems to relieve the boys from Kentucky of the idea that they are away from home, while the song of (Home Again in Indiana) lifts us all from our feet. (Take Me Back to Old Virginia) is a stimulant to all our Va. boys; if there is any thing that makes us blue it is the song of (Dear Old Girl;) which makes us think of friends and sweethearts which we left behind. It is useless for me to mention the popular song of (Old Black Joe;) because it is known as one of our favorite songs.

The boys receive so much pleasure out of their daily work until they seem to forget all about the surrounding excitement. I must not forget to mention the attitude of the French people to all American soldiers; they do all in their power to make it pleasant for us; and it is highly appreciated by all of the soldiers.

There is one thing which I wish to impress upon all of our people and that is they should write to their soldier boys as often as they can; as a letter is highly appreciated by all soldiers.

These few lines are sufficient to let the people know that we are all O. K.

Very truly yours,,
HARRY WILSON REID,
372nd Regiment Med. Department.

Colored American Troops Crush German Offensive

Cleveland Advocate 7-27-18

EXTRA

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMIES ON THE MARNE, July 22.—The American Colored troops are sweeping everything before them in their attack against the German fifth offensive. Alone they have taken many towns and villages and are steadily advancing on their end of the line of attack shouting and singing as they go. Their move appears to have been a surprise to the Germans, judging by the map, which shows a great area of forest covering the ground before the Colored troops who it is said had been preparing for this great drive for the past three months behind these scenes. Any number of times had they requested the favor of being permitted to take over part of the line of attack, though they had been holding a piece of French sector for the last three months without relief. Today they assumed a front line position and broke up all counter-attacks that were hastily made by the Germans. The enemy's whole left flank was menaced so badly that the German officers quickly gave orders to draw in their line of troops from this end of the front. An eye witness says the Colored boys refused to stay in their dug-outs but almost ran in their advance over the first, second and third line barriers, rapidly firing, shouting and singing as they went.

Today they regained entire possession of the river northwest of Chateau Thierry, that had been lost in the early fighting by the French army. Repeatedly the black troops were attacked by the Huns but they were broken up and driven back under a deadly barrage for nearly a mile. "The enemy was totally surprised at the action of the black troops, who fought long and at times like devils, and seemed to care nothing for their lives as they advanced. They left their white comrades behind in their eagerness to win the day."

Sustain Only Two Wounded in a Heavy Raid.

BRLYN N Y STANDARD UNION
JULY 1, 1918

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMIES IN FRANCE, July 1.—American colored troops proved their value as fighters in the line east of Verdun on June 12, it is now permissible to state. The Germans attempted a raid in that sector, but were repulsed by them. The Boches began a bombardment at one minute after midnight, throwing over between 3,000 and 4,000 shells from guns ranging in size from 67 to 340 milimeters. The bombardment was concentrated on small areas. Many of the shells made holes from ten to fifteen feet across.

In the midst of this inferno the soldiers coolly stuck to their posts, operating machine guns and automatic rifles and keeping up such a steady barrage that the German infantry ~~failed to penetrate the American~~ lines. The Americans sustained only two wounded.

"Dixie luck was ah workin' with us," explained one. "We all got knocked down lots of times, but every man got right up."

Private Henry Gaillard, of New York, under shellfire, took his automatic rifle from its place of concealment, placed it on the parpet and met the Boches with a rain of bullets.

Private Harry Brown, also of New York, a member of the signal corps, found a telephone line not working. Ignoring the barrage, he went out to repair the wire. He made twenty-five repairs.

During the attack the crew of a machine gun was bowled over by a minewerfer projectile which made a 15-foot hole ten feet from them. They all got up, remounted the gun and continued shooting until it jammed. Then, despite the bombardment, they fixed it, and again turned it on the Germans. This incident was repeated twice.

Both French and American officers reported the colored troop performed like veterans. They obeyed orders promptly, took risky duties voluntarily and compared well with the best troops on the west front.

A German raid east of St. Die, in Alsace, was repulsed by American machine gun and rifle fire Saturday, the enemy suffering heavy losses.

An American lieutenant and eighty men successfully raided German positions in Fontaine wood, near Montdidier, Saturday morning, capturing an officer and thirty-five men and inflicting heavy casualties.

In Lorraine American airplanes conducted several reconnaisance expeditions.

HUNS JOIN BIRD FAMILY AS BLACK SOLDIERS CHARGE

Colored Fighters From America Have Made the Boches Take to the Tall Timber by Their Fierce Charges—"Black Devils" Are Sounding Death Knell to Trench Warfare—Are Forcing Teutonic "Kultur" Exponents to Fight in the Open—Germans In Deadly Fear of Our Black "Boys"—Taking Prisoners and Capturing Towns.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE.—Since August 21 the colored divisions of troops, both the 92nd and 93rd, have shoved forward on the enemy's line by 12,000 yards, and continue to advance daily. It is a fact that America's "Black Devils" are sounding the death knell of trench warfare. The colored troops are forcing open fighting upon the enemy since the failure of the German drive in July. The Huns seem to be greatly inferior at the style of fighting that these black Americans put up. The Germans had been used to fighting a while and resting a while, but with the colored troops there has been no resting but continued fighting with the fierceness of tigers.

Early today one division of colored troops advanced 600 yards without a single loss. It is a noticeable fact that the Germans fear the American black troops because of the fierce manner in which they combat the enemy with their bayonets, shooting and singing as they charge on the fleeing enemy. When they began their attack on the towns of Sandemont and Recourt they ran the Huns from their trenches and kept them on the run until they captured both towns and several villages on the other side of Recourt. It was then that a command was given them to halt or retire to receive rations and rest, but not a man obeyed the command until they had driven the enemy out of sight. Monday, August 26th, both colored divisions almost annihilated four fresh divisions of German reserve troops who had been sent into the enemy's line to drive back those black Americans in their attack on the town of Bertincourt, but the town was soon taken by the Negro troops capturing 800 Hun prisoners.

"What we're aiming to do," said a sprightly young colored officer, "is to push our way right on into Berlin without stoppin', as we promised the folks at home we'd do, and we don't aim to be long at it, either," he continued as he leaped from the first line trenches to join his comrades in the thickest of the fray just as they were getting ready to make another savage attack on the enemy, and from the way they were going at it, it won't be long before they will enter Berlin.

BALTIMORE, Md., July 13.—Drum Major Charles Landm, Colored, of the Three Hundred and Sixty-eight Infantry Regiment, the fellow who made President Wilson laugh at the big Meade parade held in this city on April 6, has arrived in France.

Word has been received in this city that the Three Hundred and Fifty-first Field Artillery Regiment and the Three Hundred and Sixty-eighth debarked in that country a few days ago. Both of these regiments are Colored organizations and were stationed at Meade.

The two regiments left the Maryland cantonment about three weeks ago, a few days after the Three Hundred and Sixty-eighth had given a concert at the Lyric theater.

My dear Father,

I wrote Sister a day or two ago; I guess she will get it in this mail. as our mail is not sent daily. I haven't received any answers to letters sent from "Over here." I answered several letters from Camps Grant and Upton. However, they were gladly received and highly appreciated.

I hardly know what to say, as our letters are very limited, but I will say that I am a little more accustomed to the roar of big guns. I never worry about home as an usual thing, for I can easily adapt myself to almost any old circumstances, but regardless to that, I have for the past few days been thinking of you dear ones at home very much. I realize tho that it is useless to worry, for God only knows when this thing shall be made to end and it will be by His hand only that we are delivered. I am looking forward to the time when we can again be together and I can sit and tell you all of my many experiences. I know you will be a patient listener to all that I shall have to say. I am praying for our victory and safe return. I know you people at home are praying daily for us, and the least thing we can do is to pray for ourselves. I feel that I shall not be lost, but shall see the honors of the war finished and return to the dear old U. S. A. a real man, ready to complete my plans.

How is business and everything during these hard times? I guess the farmers see the best times now as their product is in great demand.

Enclosed you will find a Xmas coupon. Without it I would not get the package. Please send me a pound box of chocolate candy and a two lb. fruit cake. Please let me hear from you often.

With much love to everybody.

My own dear sweet Sister,

I received two letters from you last week. One was sent to Camp Grant and the other to Camp Upton. I was more than glad to hear from you, for it had been more than monh since I had heard from you. I have been on the go so much that I have not had much time to write you. Sister dear, I am somewhere in France, now situated in or, rather, under a shelter. I I have done a bit of traveling since last seeing you. I I thot that whilst I was traveling all over the U. S. A. that I was traveling some, but dearie, I had not begun. Those trips from N. Y., to San Francisco were noting compared to this. I have just left a village where I was comfortably situated in an ancient barn. The village was built up of ancient style houses, all made of stone, even stone covered. The most notable thing about the village is the hospitality of the people. They were very willing to divide with the soldiers and help them to speak a word or two in French. I made friends with an old family which had a son at the front. I visited them daily and occasionally had a meal with them. From constant contact with them I learned to speak a phrase or two in French. I shall try to perfect the speech of French, if only I have the opportunity to use it. Write me as often as possible. You may not hear from me some time for a month, but don't fail to write me. I am not always where I can write all of the time, nevertheless I am expecting to hear from you weekly. I wrote LeRoy from England. I shall expect a package for Christmas. I hope we well soon bring things to a close and we can be comfortably situated in the Sates again. You must be real sweet.

Your devoted brother,
William.

France, Nov. 10, 1918

My dear Sister:

It has been some four weeks since I have written you, my long silence being accounted for through the fact that one of those Hun bullets struck my leg a glancing blow in a fight during the latter part of last month and laid me up in the hospital for three weeks. It might have gone through my leg and caused a serious wound but it did not strike me square. This was the third hard battle my company was in during that week, and, little girl, let me tell you it was the worst thing I have ever seen. We were next to a white company from an Illinois regiment and the way those boys and our went over the top would have made you feel good. We had just gotten on the other side of No Man's Land after a mighty effort when my pal said to me, "Look out, Charlie, there comes a grenade." I looked up just in time to shun it when it exploded and my pal was blown to pieces. This thing hurt my heart and I determined to make some one pay for my friends death even though I lost my life. In less time than it takes to tell, we were face to face with the Hun and in hand to hand tussles. By this time we were fighting like wild men, those white boys and us, and my pal's place had been taken by one of them, we were so close together and so mixed up. I spied a big German coming after me like he was going to eat me up, I set for him and as he lunged forward to put me out of business I sidestepped him and pushed my boyonet square through him. As I pushed it hard into him, he groaned and keeled over dead. I felt like I had made some one pay for my pal's life, who had earlier in the battle been blown to pieces and was about to go on when two of them rushed me from the side and were about to attack me when my new white fighting pal hollowed "Lookout" and I turned and was just missed by the bayonet of one of them. By this time my friend was by my side and we grappled with the two Huns. My bayonet in some way got loose and I was forced to use the but of my gun. I thought it was all up with me, but in some way the Hun before me must have gotten scared and as I swung my gun at him he turned and ran. My friend had brained his man and just as he started forward the man who was apparently dead on the ground raised up and fired, the shot going through his leg and bringing him down. I saw him fall and ran toward him when the man who had fled from me turned and fired. The bullet struck me in the leg but did not seem to put me out of business and I raised my gun to fire when I saw the man keel over, throw, up his hands and fall. He had been shot by the lieutenant of my white friend's company. By this time our comrades had gone forward and we were out of it. All around us was nothing but dead and wounded men. About two yards from us was a young German boy who had had half of his face blown away by a grenade. He held out his hand in our direction for he couldn't see but had heard us talking. My friend saw it and said, "I don't think I am so badly hurt, see what that guy wants." I went over and the poor fellow seemed almost gone. I took him up in my arms and started back of the lines with him a wounded German with his leg broken sitting up hollowed in English, "Hurry, the boy is most dead." Two doctors then came up and I gave the boy over to them and then I went back to my friend whose leg was broken. I helped him to get back out of danger and then we sat down and talked over the hell we had been through. Two stretcher bearers came up and carried my friend to the field hospital and told me to follow. At the hospital we saw that German boy that I carried off the field. He was in awful misery but the doctor said he would get well but would lose one of his eyes and part of his nose. He seem to be hardly more than 15 years old. My white friend and I were sent to the hospital, he is still there and not yet able to walk. I would not like to see anything like that battle again although it looks like we're ready for another go over the top today or tomorrow. Just think, pieces of men all around you and in the barbed wire some men were caught up and slaughtered and their dead bodies hanging there after the battle. I understand that James Wilson and Eugene Ward were killed in the same drive. They were in another company. One of my officers had his hand shot away and another had bayonet pushed clean through his leg but he killed his man and his soldiers had to pull out the bayonet. I wrote to Margaret last week telling her I was out the hospital and back at the front. I have a fine German helmet as a souvenir for little Charlie. It belonged to the German I killed. I hope Margaret has gotten her money every month and if she hasn't write her and tell her to inquire at the Red Cross about it. It looks to us now that we will end this thing soon. Ofcourse we all hope so anyhow. While in the hospital a colored lady from St. Louis, a doctor's wife, was one of our attendants and she was mighty fine to us. Her name was Mrs. Curtly. I believe. Well, I must close as I have but ten minutes to get ready for sentry duty. Don't forget to ask Margaret about her money. This label is for a box for Christmas. I don't want any eats but everything to smoke. I sent her and Charlie a little French Christmas present last week and yours I mailed yesterday. I am now tipping the scales at about 175 and am feeling fine. I have been recommended for the officers training camp over here.

Your devoted brother,

Charlie.

Dear Father:

Well its all over now and I am thankful to say that I have come through with only a silght reminder of the contests we have been through, and that it I have lost a piece of my left ear which I wrote you about and which put me in the hospital for two weeks. I don't know when we are to come across but I hope soon. I am just crazy to hold little sadie in my arms again and hear her call me daddy again and to be with Sarah. You have no idea what joy the men had when they were told that the Germans had signed the armistice. The day before we had an awful fight and about twenty five of my company were killed and over fifty wounded. Among the killed was Hank Spaulding whose sister lives in Charleston and used to be in the same house with Sarah before we married. The poor fellow was leading his squad and when about half way across No Man's Land a shell burst in front of him and killed him and four of his companions. They were blown to pieces. Just as we got across the third man from me and the one behind me were killed by machine gun bullets. We were prepared for a death hand to hand fight but when the Huns saw us coming over like wild bulls they took to their heels and would not take any of our bayonet fighting. In the trip across our first lieutenant was shot through the head and fell and our first sergeant was killed by a hand grenade. The lieutenant will recover. Willie Masters lost his life just as the thing was about all over. He overtook a fleeing Hun and was just about to capture him when he was shot through the heart. We are now waiting here, so our captain says, to get orders to proceed into German territory. I am glad it is all over and that sometimes soon we will be back home. Sidney Jones lost a leg in the last fight but not until he had killed a Hun with whom he had a bayonet duel. He was pierced through the leg by the Hun's bayonet as he jammed his bayonet through the German's body. He has the dead man's helmet which he sent to his little son as a souvenir. Our boys have made a mighty good account of themselves, especially in the hand to hand fights and they are being given all kinds of good treatment by the French people in the towns round about. You remember Vance Allison. He was killed by a shell in one of our advances. He was among those leading the charge and was killed in less time than a twinkle of the eye. Another Savannah boy was also kelled in the same fight, I can't remember his name, he was not in my company. I heard that he was killed with a hand grenade as he was going across the top. During our last fight we were attracted after the battle by overhead fights between four American planes and five German machines It was a thrilling sight and all the soldiers said that it was worth the battle they had earlier in the day. The German planes seemed to be getting the best of the fight and had disabled one of the American machines which glided to earth, when all of a sudden one of our machines got above and peppered the German under him. The Hun machine wiggled and as it began to fall it burst into flames. This fellow then attacked another German and got above him and fired. The German's wing seem to snap and he began to fall and then another shot hit him and down he came. He fell just about two hundred yard from us. The other Germans then flew away with our men behind them. We all went over to the German machine that had falled near us and found three men in it. Two of them were dead and the third one unconscious when we got there he came to and seemed only dazed. He was made a prisoner. He seemed to be nothing but a boy about seventeen years old. Well, now that it is all at an end I am glad that I had a part in it but never again do I want to see such bloody things as I have seen in the past two months. Write me all the home news and send me some cigarettes for Christmas. Hoping that you are well and getting along fine,

My dear Wife:

I am writing you these few lines to let you know that I am well and having a fine time over here and I trust that you and the baby are well. Can the baby talk yet? While I am far away from you, somewhere in France. I trust that you are thinking of me often and long. It was awfully hard for me to leave you, but I could be no slacker and had to make the sacrifice when I heard our country's call. To be at home with you, little wife, is happiness that is true, but I could not help but be one of those to carry the Stars and Stripes to victory. I often think of those beautiful, happy days of ours at home and it makes me blue to think we are so far apart, but when I remember that it for you and your future happiness I am doing my bit I cheer up feel that nothing is too hard for me to bear. This great conflict will most likely end soon and then we shall all have that sweet privilege of returning to our loved ones at home. With the Americans, Aug. 10.—One division now heading to drive the Huns back to Berlin and which may be labeled for purpose of future identification, when the censor permits the folks at home to know what troops have fought well, as Division DB has been at its task of strafing the Huns ever since their arrival here and without a rest or letup. There are men from the South and North in it. From the beginning of its service in France it has possessed a remarkable morale.

After a sufficiently arduous service in the training areas, Division DB was ordered out of line June 28 last. It was to be given a rest, its orders said, and a little additional training after a time. It never did get that rest. As Generalissimo Foch got additional information of the enemy plans he moved the divisions of the Allied army like checker men.

It rode in trains and rode in camions and hiked and hiked again until it finally wound up in the Chalons area in the first days of July. Here it became a part of the French army commanded by General Gouraud. In the opinion of Foch and Gouraud the fifth and greatest offensive of the Germans would be directed through the Chalons plain.

"The DB American division is needed elsewhere," was the word that once came.

"I can't spare the DBs," said Gouraud.

"One platoon was attacked by a full company of Germans," said the officer who told the story. "Major ——— happened to be in command of that platoon. He bade his men hold their fire until he gave the word. He did not give the word until the boches were near enough to see their faces clearly. Then the men fired.

"Now go to it," he yelled to his men, and the platoon went over and met the Germans right in the wire. Not a German lived through it, and not an American was hurt. They fought like wild men. Major ———'s report is still being quoted through the army:

"A platoon of G Company attacked a company of the enemy," he wrote. "The attack was successful. The Germans are all dead."

The Clerk read as follows:

Three Hundred and Sixty-ninth U. S. Infantry,
Formerly Fifteenth New York Infantry,
Secteur Postal, No. 54, A. E. F.,
France, May 18, 1918.

Mrs. Edna Johnson,
23 Monroe Street, Albany, N. Y.

My Dear Mrs. Johnson: Your husband, Pvt. Henry Johnson, is in my regiment, the 369th U. S. Infantry, formerly the 15th New York Infantry. He has been at all times a good soldier and is a good boy, of fine morals and upright character. To these admirable traits he has lately added the most convincing proof of fine courage and splendid fighting ability.

I regret to say that he is at the moment in a hospital, seriously, but not dangerously, wounded, the wounds having been received under such circumstances that everyone of us in the regiment would be pleased and proud to trade places with him. It was as follows:

He and Pvt. Needham Roberts were on guard together at a small outpost of a front-line trench near to the German lines, and during the night a strong raiding party of Germans, numbering from twelve to twenty (judging by the weapons, clothing and paraphernalia they left behind and by their footprints) stole across No Man's Land and made a surprise attack in the dead of night on our two brave soldiers.

We had learned some time ago from captured German prisoners that the Germans had heard of a regiment of black Americans in this sector, and the German officers had told their men how easy to combat and capture them it would be; so this raiding party came looking for the black Americans. They did not find them asleep, however, but, on the contrary, both Henry Johnson and Needham Roberts were very much awake and alert and attending strictly to their duties. At the beginning of the attack the Germans fired a volley of bullets and grenades, and both the boys were wounded, your husband three times and Roberts twice. Then the Germans rushed the post, expecting to make an easy capture. In spite of their wounds, the two boys waited coolly and courageously, and when the Germans were within striking distance opened fire, your husband with his rifle and Pvt. Roberts, from his helpless position on the ground, with hand grenades. The German raiding party came on in spite of their wounded, and in a few seconds our boys were at grips with the terrible foe in a desperate hand-to-hand encounter, in which the enemy outnumbered them ten to one.

The boys inflicted great loss on the enemy, but Roberts was overpowered and about to be carried away, when your husband, who had used up all the cartridges in the magazine of his rifle and had knocked one German down with the butt end of it, drew his bolo from his belt. The bolo is a short, heavy weapon carried by the American soldier, with the edge of a razor, the weight of a cleaver, and the point of a butcher knife. He rushed to the rescue of his fallen comrade, and, fighting desperately, split open, with his bolo, the head of the German who was throttling Pvt. Roberts, and turning to the boche who had Roberts by the feet, plunged the bolo into the German's bowels. This one was the leader of the German party, and on receiving what must have been his mortal wound, exclaimed in American English, without any trace of accent, "Oh, the son of a —— got me," thus proving that he was undoubtedly one of the so-called German-Americans who came to our country not to become a good citizen of it, but to partake of its plenty and bounty and then return to fight for the Kaiser and help enslave the world. He was doubtless selected as the leader of the party to speak English and perhaps fool my soldiers by calling to them in the darkness in English not to fire, that it was a friend.

Henry laid about him right and left with his heavy knife, and Roberts, released from the grasp of the scoundrels, began again throwing hand grenades and exploding them in their midst, and the Germans, doubtless thinking it was a host instead of two brave colored boys fighting like tigers at bay, picked up their dead and wounded and slunk away, leaving many weapons and parts of their torn, cut, and shot-riddled clothing, and leaving a trail of blood which we followed at dawn clear to their lines.

We feel certain that one of the enemy was killed by rifle fire, two by your

WASHINGTON, D. C.—"Colored men are not dodging the draft," observed S. A. Lynch of Maryland, at the Washington. "Indeed, our Colored citizens have shown the utmost patriotism, and in all the states they have been among the first to volunteer. Somehow, the Colored fellows appear to like soldiering. I didn't wonder that the Huns are scared of the American Negro troops. Not long ago I happened to be at the railroad station when a number of Colored men were going aboard the train for the training camp. They marched down the station platform shouting and singing. Among them was a stout, dark man of 35, perhaps more. One of his eyes was completely gone. In some manner he had passed the examining board after registration and been designated for the training camp. Among the men at the depot overlooking the draftees was a draft officer. He observed the one-eyed man, and, of course, immediately went up to him.

"'What are you doing in line?' asked the man. 'You know you cannot be a soldier, having only one eye. How did you pass the examining board? You had better step out now. There's no chance for you to get by.' 'Yes, I will,' returned the Negro. 'When you get to camp and the officers there see you, they will send you back at once,' insisted the official. 'They won't send me back,' confidently answered the Colored man. 'When I tell the officers I was cook at the Maryland Club twelve years they won't send me back.' Sure enough, they didn't send him back, and he's in France now."

Negro Troops Valuable Along American Lines

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY ON THE MARNE, July 17.—(By The A. P.)—American negro troops are helping to hold the allied line against the fifth German offensive. They requested the favor of being permitted to take over a part of the line of attack though they had been holding a piece of a French sector for the last three months without relief.

husband's bolo, one by grenades thrown by Pvt. Roberts, and several others grievously wounded.

So it was in this way the Germans found the black Americans!

Both boys have received the citation of the French general commanding the splendid French division in which my regiment is now serving, and will receive the Croix de Guerre (Cross of War). The citation, translated, is as follows:

——— Division. May 16, 1918.

Order No. ———.

The general ——— commanding ——— D. I., mentions in orders of the division the soldiers of the 369th Regiment d'Infanterie, United States.

1. Johnson, Henry (No. 103348), private in Company C.

Being on double sentry duty during the night, and having been assailed by a group composed of at least a dozen Germans, shot and disabled one of them and grievously wounded two others with his bolo. In spite of three wounds with pistol bullets and grenades at the beginning of the fighting, this man ran to the assistance of his wounded comrade, who was about to be carried away prisoner by the enemy, and continued to fight up to the retreat of the Germans.

He has given a beautiful example of courage and activity.

2. Roberts, Needham (No. 103369), private in Company C.

Being on double sentry duty during the night, having been assailed and grievously wounded in his leg by a group of Germans, continued fighting by throwing grenades, although he was prone on the ground, up to the retreat of the enemy. Good and brave soldier.

The general requested that the citation of the division commander of the soldier, Johnson, be changed to a citation in the orders of the army.

Some time ago the great French general, Gouraud, placed in my hands the sum of one hundred francs, to be sent to the family of the first one of my soldiers wounded in a fight with the enemy under heroic circumstances. Inasmuch as these boys were wounded simultaneously and both displayed great heroism, I think it but fair to send to each one half of this sum. Accordingly I am inclosing New York exchange for the equivalent of fifty francs.

I am sure that you have made a splendid contribution to the cause of liberty by giving your husband to your country, and it is my hope and prayer to bring him back to you safe and sound, together with as many of his comrades as it is humanly possible by care and caution to conserve and bring back to America. But it must be borne in mind that we cannot all come back; that none of us can come back until this job is done.

My cordial respects go with this letter to the wife of Henry Johnson.

Very truly, yours,

William Hayward, Colonel.

Turn Up Smiling in a Ruined French Village and Are Mistaken for Senegalese or Moroccans.

N. Y. EVE SUN
MAY 14, 1918

By THOMAS M. JOHNSON,

Staff Correspondent of THE EVENING SUN.

(Copyright, 1918. All rights reserved.)

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, May 14.—In the half light of the setting sun two soldiers sauntered down the battered streets of a ruined village somewhere in France. They were clad in khaki and walked jauntily, with their hands in their pockets.

As they came a little closer it was disclosed that they were gentlemen of color. "French Colonials," we remarked, for at first glance they were the spit and image of Senegalese or Moroccans.

They approached still closer, and suddenly we seemed to detect something homelike in their shining faces and in the cut of their uniforms. Incredulously we tried an experiment.

"Where do you come from?" we asked, and back came the answer with a broad grin and a flash of white teeth:

"We're both from New York!"

So, the lost are found! New York's negro troops are in France!

At one place in the village where they are is a dove cote containing carrier pigeons, and one negro trooper, after watching his officer laboriously writing out a message to be tied to the legs of one of the birds, said:

"Say, Cap'n, why couldn't we cross these yere pigeons with parrots, and then they could speak the messages?"

Always Good Natured.

They're always good natured. Perhaps this is because they are always singing of an evening, and when we passed through the village we found one company of them drawn up, and raising their full, rich melodious voices in a famous negro song, under the leadership of a former aid to Gov. Whitman.

The song was "Little David, Play on Your Harp," and they sang it with a will. The performance is repeated every evening, while they are resting in billets, greatly to the delight of the villagers, one of the striking features of their new life being the harmony existing between them and the French soldiers.

This harmony prevails, despite the difficulties of different languages, and the soldiers of the two nations can always be seen gathered in little knots, engaged in conversation. Occasionally some of them will break out into laughter, believing the old saying about the difficulty one nation has in understanding the jokes of another.

Fine, Upstanding Men.

They're fine, upstanding men, these negro soldiers, and the praise of their officers is confirmed and borne out by the ocular evidence of their earnestness and courage.

It has been said "The Lost Are Found!" This needs explaining, as does also their chaplain's message that these troops have had a checkered career.

After no less than four false starts from Atlantic ports in the United States, due to accidents to transports they finally landed in France at the beginning of the new year. From then until some time in March they were at one of the ports of entry where they did everything under the sun.

JOHNSON'S BOLO KNIFE SURE CAME HANDY IN CLOSE FIGHT WITH HUNS

Richmond

With It Henry Johnson, Colored U. S. Soldier Split a Lot of German Skulls in a Rough-and-Tumble.

NEW AND TERRIBLE WEAPON IS NOT PLEASING TO THEM.

Americans First Came in Contact With It When They Went Into the Philippines.

Washington, June 29.—A year ago Henry Johnson a colored citizen of Albany, N. Y. was peddling ice, coal and wood in contented obscurity. To day Henry Johnson a soldier of the United States is wearing the coveted French War Cross with palms because he proved himself a brave man and because at the critical moment he got his hands on a bolo knife.

The cable has told of Henry's exploit—how on night duty with a com panion in an American listening post he "took on" twenty four marauding Germans in a swift rough and tumble, killed some of them with his rifle bombed others from his basket of gren ades and then even after he had been wounded split so many skulls with his bolo that all the enemy left on their feet after meeting Henry be came suddenly and violently home sick.

AN "UGLY" WEAPON.

The bolo knife which Henry wield ed so well weighs 1 pound and 8 ounces without its scabbard and has a broad 14 inch blade. It is sharpened to a razor edge and near the end runs abruptly to a thrusting point. But one of its chief virtues as a small arm is its cleaving power. Most of the weight of the knife is distributed along the back of the blade. The handle is serrated to fit the fingers for an easy grip and with a quick muscular swing the bolo is a bone cutter of the first rank.

Americans first ran up against the bolo in the Philippines. Over there it was originally an agricultural tool just as the machete was in Cuba and blacksmiths at country crossroads hammered it out infinitely and in all sorts of forms. The "cris" with its curly blade is a form of bolo and the "campilan" is a bigger bolo.

WAS WEAPON OF THE MOROS.

It was up among the Moros that it was developed for war purposes. In the underbrush it proved a very terrible weapon as many a trooper found to his cost. A healthy stroke in the tropical night—just one—counted for a major American casualty. After a while our soldiers found there was no particular knack in the Malay use of the bolo they could not master. Then they began to capture bolos. And so after the war ended bolos kept coming back to the United States as souvenirs.

But it was not until 1910 that the War Department tried the experiment of issuing the bolo knife as a regular part of the American equipment. It was used and tested by our men in Mexico but there it was employed chiefly as a tool rather than a weapon. It was not until our khaki clad boys went down into the French trenches that the bolo knife proved its right to be considered "the last line of defense" and a life saver to the man who unsheathed it.

Our colored troops display a special aptitude and affection for this weapon. The white fighter is inclined to rely upon his automatic pistol in an emergency at close quarters but the colored man in uniform takes as naturally to the bolo knife as he does to—well as he does to the name of "Mr. Johnson."

ISSUED TO U. S. TROOPS.

The bolo knife is issued to our troops in two sizes—the smaller size of the type which Henry Johnson used and a larger knife employed exclusively by Field Artillery batteries. This latter is practically a short sword comparable to the principal weapon of the old Roman legionaries. It is two feet long and weighs between three and four pounds. Of course being issued only to artillery men who are not ordinarily actually at grips with the enemy. It is intended mainly as a sort of superbrush cutter. But in the hands of a desperate man fighting for his life it is a terrible persuader.

NOT A TRENCH KNIFE.

The bolo is in no sense a trench knife. That is issued to every man in the ranks and is a special tool not meant for fighting save at the last gasp. But the 14 inch bolo knife is essentially a weapon. It is issued to 6 per cent. of our infantry forces—not regularly to every seventeenth man.. but as occasion may require or the immediate commanding officer may direct. Henry Johnson was given his because he was assigned to particularly dangerous duty in a listening post. Others may be equipped with bolo knives—for instance as members of a special detachment to accompanying raiding forces within the enemy lines. Their work must be quick silent and thorough. From Luneville to Cantigny the Germans have found it so.

BEST IN USE OVER THERE.

The small Arms Division of the United States Ordnance Department believes that the bolo knife has points of superiority over any knife in use on the European battle field else it would not have been adopted for our use The German uses his fighting knife chiefly for thrusting usually at the throat as the First American sentries stationed near the Rhine-Marne Canal soon discovered. But the bolo knife may be employed in any way the emergency dictates and its peculiar heft lends it an unlooked for wickedness.

Moreover this knife has a distinct psychological value. It was a com plete surprise to Fritz—if not to his intelligence department at least to himself and his associates in the trenches. What he has learned about the heritage of another successful war and a piece of steel which he is it he does not like. And to the American, convinced will do all that cold steel can it is a tried and tested weapon, man do.

Huns Leave Foodstuffs Behind As They Run From Race Troops

"If German Line Does Not Fall Back, We Want to See What's Holdin' 'Em There," Says One of Our Brave Troopers.

WITH THE AMERICAN TROOPS IN FRANCE, Aug. 24.—Both the 92nd and 93rd (Colored) divisions of troops were given strict orders to slow down last Tuesday night and in conformity with Marshal Foch's settled policy of not wasting the lives of his troops when time is working so powerfully on the side of the allies, the black troops have come to a halt for a brief session. The halt was made near the Aisne, where the "Black Devils" had repulsed minor attacks, advancing slightly near Bray, where French and Colored American soldiers had penetrated the outskirts of the town.

South of the Villers-Bretonneux-Chaulnes, Colored troops destroyed the railway so that the Germans were unable to move a long trainload of high explosives and were compelled to leave it behind.

On the north side of the Vesle river, where a brigade of Colored troops were holding the line, the enemy made a slight attack but were turned back repeatedly by the use of the bayonet. So often were these attacks made during the night that nearly all of the 93rd division was ordered to that end of the line. Early Tuesday morning it was discovered that there were many farm houses near the line that were well stocked with provisions, and a large amount of poultry and live stock, which places the hungry Huns were desperately fighting for. Before noon America's "Black Devils" had the starving Germans beaten back several miles from their farm houses and were preparing for a big feast to celebrate their continued victory.

During the afternoon while the order to "slow down" was in vogue the Colored troopers of both divisions sang songs of American origin in rag time with now and then a patriotic air or a jubilee melody of the South, as they "dined" on hot fowl and French wine.

It is likely that another attack along the north side of the Vesle river will be renewed by the enemy, but at present it is held secure by the Colored Americans and French.

"If the German line does not fall completely back from the Vesle river front we want to see what's holdin' 'em there when we attack the line," said a Colored trooper, as he finished a cigaret he had been smoking.

MAKING GOOD IN ARMY

In this issue of The Times-Journal will be found an interesting letter from a young colored man, Otho Haskins, who is now in Uncle Sam's army. Young Haskins came from one of our best old colored families and he is making good in the army as he and his father did in civil life. Uncle Sam is no respector of persons when it comes to giving his fighting men a square deal and regardless of color or condition of former servitude each man is given an opportunity of advancement if he proves his worth. Haskins started in as a private and made such a good soldier he has already secured two promotions. We are proud of our colored soldiers who have come out with a vim and a determination to do their utmost to make the world safe for democracy We are sure when the fighting time comes it may again be said of them "the colored troops fought bravely."

MISS ISMA DOOLEY CALLS ATTENTION OF COLORED WOMEN TO SICK SOLDIERS AT FORT M'PHERSON.

Benjamin Davis, Editor, The Atlanta Independent, Atlanta, Ga.

My attention has been called to the fact that on Sunday afternoons when large parties of people visit upon the soldiers in the hospitals at Fort McPherson and take many of them to drive, that there seem to be very few visitors upon the returned Negro soldiers who are ill in the hospitals there.

I feel sure that if this was brought to the attention of the representative people of the colored citizens of Atlanta that some action would be taken in this direction, and I feel sure that there are organizations or groups of colored women who could not only visit regularly upon these men, bringing them the delecacies, etc., which are brought to the white soldiers, and I believe, furthermore, that where owners of machines among the colored people who would be glad from time to time to take these convalescent soldiers to ride, just as the others are taken.

I have not myself visited the colored wards, so I am not in position to say positively whether or not any attentions have been shown to these people, but knowing your influence as editor of the paper which reaches so many of your people I thought perhaps you might take steps towards seeing that the colored soldiers are looked after, and that they have certain recreations which are permitted convalescent soldiers.

Yours for the Fourth Liberty Loan,
ISMA DOOLEY,

369th Regiment Across Seas Is Made Part of French Foreign Legion

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 5.—Captain Hamilton Fish, Jr., of the 369th United States infantry, the first regiment of Negroes sent to France, has written to his father the following letter:

"I hope you will forgive me for not writing oftener, but I am busy every moment getting my company ready for a tour of duty in the trenches. We expect to be ordered up in ten days, and naturally there is a lot of polishing up to be done, so that we can give a good account of ourselves on our introduction to the Boche. After all our wanderings and experiences it is difficult to realize that we will be facing German bullets, and I hope, taking German helmets before you get this letter. I understand that helmets are the only things we are allowed to keep, and also to send home.

"Our regiment is the most er American regiment in France, and i.. the greatest opportunity to make a wonderful record. We are with the French army and have the incomparable advantage of the instructions and experience of the French. We are, to all intents and purposes, a part of the French army, and supplied by them with all of our rifles, bayonets, helmets, gas masks, knapsacks, food and ammunition. The men looked splendid in the American khaki uniforms and French leather equipment and brown helmets. I wonder what the Germans will think when they take one of our boys prisoner and find that he cannot speak French and comes from Harlem.

"I am a great believer in the fighting quality of the educated American Negro, provided he is well led. If the regiment does not make a splendid record, it will not be the fault of the men. I believe, if the censorship regulations were abolished, the 15th New York, (now the 369th U. S. infantry) would be as well known as the Rough Riders were in the Spanish-American war, before peace is declared. We were the second New York regiment over here, following closely on the old 69th, and, I believe, the first Colored regiment to land in France. Today we are the American Foreign Legion of France. We are sending back our old 15th New York infantry flag to Governor Whitman, to be placed with the other old regimental flags in the State Capitol at Albany. It is quite appropriate that the flag should be returned to Governor Whitman, as the regiment was ordered during his administration, and owes its success to his personal interest and efforts in its behalf.

"We are billeted in a small village not very far from the front and are not bothered by German shells, but we can plainly hear the incessant rumble of the artillery. On clear nights the front looks like a Fourth of July celebration with rockets, flares and flashes of big guns. Most of the firing is now done at night time, because the artillery on both sides shell the lines of communication to prevent the bringing up of supplies and movement of troops. There are plenty of German airplanes hovering about, especially at night, and there have been several air fights in the vicinity of our village. One of our battalions has already gone to the trenches. It was an interesting sight to see our troops march out of the little French village while our band played the 'Sombre' and 'Meuse,' the 'Marseillaise,' and our national anthem. There were no flowers and no good-byes, as our boys marched out to give battle, but just the same those of us who saw them go were greatly impressed by their martial appearance."

Hero of Toul Sector Severely Wounded

[illegible], N. Y., June [illegible]—Henry Johnson, who was reported as being severely wounded in todays casualty list, is one of the two sentries who were mentioned by General Pershing in his communique of May 19th for bravery and devotion. The communique, after describing the attack upon the sentries by a German raiding party of twenty men, said that Johnson and his companion "continued fighting after receiving wounds and despite the use of grenades by a superior force." Johnson is a member of the 15th New York Regiment.

Crack Colored Yank Division Fight Like Demons Over There

Colored Troops Praised by Men in High Command for Their Remarkable Morale

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, Sept. 21.—One division now helping to drive the Huns back to Berlin and which may be labeled for purposes of future identification, when the censor permits the folks at home to know what troops have fought well, is Division DB has been at its task of strafing the Huns ever since their arrival here and without a rest or letup. There are men from the South and North in it. From the beginning of its service in France it has possessed a remarkable morale.

After a sufficiently arduous service in the training areas, Division DB was ordered out of line June 28 last. It was to be given a rest, its orders said, and a little additional training after a time. It never did get that rest. As Generalissimo Foch got additional information of the enemy plans he moved the divisions of the Allied army like checker men.

It rode in trains and rode in camions and hiked and hiked again until it finally wound up in the Chalons area in the first days of July. Here it became a part of the French army commanded by General Gouraud. In the opinion of Foch and Gouraud the fifth and greatest offensive of the Germans would be directed through the Chalons plain.

"The DB American division is needed elsewhere," was the word that once came.

"I can't spare the DBs," said Gouraud.

"One platoon was attacked by a full company of Germans," said the officer who told the story. "Major ——— happened to be in command of that platoon. He bade his men hold their fire until he gave the word. He did not give the word until the boches were near enough to see their faces clearly. Then the men fired.

"Now go to it," he yelled to his men, and the platoon went over and met the Germans right in the wire. Not a German lived through it, and not an American was hurt. They fought like wild men. Major ———'s report is still being quoted through the army:

"A platoon of G Company attacked a company of the enemy," he wrote. "The attack was successful. The Germans are all dead."

American Negroes Surprise French in Throwing Grenades.

Dr. C. R. Harding of Davidson has received a second letter from Dr. Thomas L. Lingle, formerly of Davidson, who is now on the other side. Dr. Lingle said among other things:

"I am enclosing a letter received today from Marshall Thompson. I believe he was from the Laurinburg section. His letter shows a fine spirit. About five weeks ago I ran across him accidentally when he was with a division of Americans in my sector for some weeks. He left with his division for that one of the present six sectors held by Americans, that is nearest Paris. They have had a hot time of it there, but the division has made a world reputation as fighters and I see in the Paris paper this evening that the Americans there have taken more than 500 prisoners in the past few days.

"It looks as if American baseball is to be an important factor in winning the war No other nation has a universally popular game that develops the arm for throwing so successfully. The British correspondent with that division says in The Daily Mail of Paris yesterday that the Americans in actual fighting throw the grenades twice as far as the Prussians, and that as grenadiers they have never had a rival in all history. I talked recently with a French lieutenant who had been instructing a regiment of American negroes in grenade work. He was enthusiastic over them and said they throw the grenade on the average fully 20 meters (a fraction less than 22 yards) farther than Frenchmen who have been in that service for two years, and with as much accuracy.

"Cordially yours,
"THOS. W LINGLE."

WITH THE AMERICAN TROOPS IN FRANCE, Tuesday, September 17 (Correspondence of The Associated Press.—American negro soldiers in France are a source of nevr-ending interest and amusement to the French, who do not tire of watching and listening as they wield picks and shovels, and chant as they work in a wierd minor key.

They have shown a fearlessness amounting almost to utter indifference—if their white officers are with them—a carelessness where personal danger is involved that is at once amazing and sometimes annoying to the officers, and a desire to fight that amounts to a mania.

The American negro soldier, in the words of a colonel who commands a regiment of them and has for years known a good deal about their characteristics, is very close to a fatalist when it comes to fear. Repeatedly his own troops bandy remarks among themselves, the gist of which is about as folows:—

"Don't worry about that shell, Rastus. It ain't got your number on it."

As the shells screams by, the negroes who believe it had not their number stand idly around and expose themselves as they should not. The colonel frankly admits being afraid when big shells are flying about, and seeks cover.

The first regiment which went into action went in primarily because it threatened to decimate itself in inactivity. Razors and knives came more and more freely into play, and then men demanded so frequently and so insistently of their officers why they might not get some action that it was finally arranged for them. They proved quite as strenuous fighters in the line as they had behind it.

tI goes without saying that the negro soldier is as boastful as any in a similar profession. The mraines had just covered themselves with glory in the Chateau-Thierry fight when a delegation from a negro regiment in line in a quiet sector waited on the commanding officer and asked if they, too, might not get in on the "fun."

"Let us go in, Colonel," they said. "We are the only real fighters. The Marines are all right, of course, but just let us have a whack at the Boche. Then the Marines wont' be in it. And as for the rest—Lord, they don't count at all."

Louisville Lieutenant Captures German Saloon and Its Two Bartenders.

By NEWTON C. PARKE,
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY ON THE LORRAINE FRONT, Sept. 20.—All branches of the cosmopolitan personnel of the American Army are acquitting themselves with unusual merit whenever called upon. This applies to supposedly non-combatants as well as fighting men, and to all Americans, regardless of the color of their skin.

The American patrol composed exclusively of full-blooded Indians has been doing particularly effective work west of Moselle. Adopting the tactics of their ancestral warriors they are locating scores of enemy machine gun nests, killing or capturing the gun crews, and bringing in the machine guns to be turned on the enemy.

CAPTURES SALOON.

Lieutenant Clayborn Arthur, of Louisville, Kentucky, is probably the first American to have the distinction of capturing a German saloon in its entirety, including the bartenders.

Arthur was advancing with a detachment of men toward Norroy. Although hunting for Germans, his hunting days in old Kentucky wouldn't permit him to pass up a couple of rabbits, flushed en route. He killed both of them.

At Norroy he looked up a French woman and persuaded her to cook them for him. From this woman the lieutenant learned that two Germans who had been operating a saloon were still asleep and unmindful of the approach of the Americans.

Arthur entered the cafe, captured both of the bartenders and a large supply of beer. (What happened to the supply is deleted.)

NEGROES TAKE PRISONERS.

During an American attack on the northern flank of the front six negroes, employed in laboring detachments, wandered through the forest in an effort to get a better view of the battle. Suddenly they came upon a detachment of twenty Germans.

The negroes had no weapons save picks and shovels, but they charged, and the Germans surrendered. The negroes marched proudly to the rear with their prisoners.

American tank officers are enthusiastic in their praises of American engineers who have been advancing ahead of the tanks, filling up pitfraps left by the enemy and enabling the tanks to make unusually rapid advances.

NEGRO TROOPS MAKE GREAT SHOWING.

American Negro troops, operating under the direction of the French, have captured Binarville in the sector of the Argonne Forest.

A certain unit of our colored troops that had previously fought brilliantly under the French in the Argonne participated in this offensive west of the Argonne under command of the French. A report from a French corps recently specifically mentioned that "American colored troops did good work last night," referring to the advance near Bouconville. Several of these colored soldiers won the Croix de Guerre early last spring.

One of the finest feats performed by the Americans was the capture of a German strong point called "Abris St. Louis," which fell before the rush of New York troops. It had been holding up our advance on the edge of the Argonne Forest.

During the afternoon the German batteries became active and Gesnes was vigorously shelled.

An amusing incident accompanied the taking of Binarville. The colored troops explained that "it was the first strange town they had been in."

(The capture of Binarville was reported by the French War Office on Tuesday).

It has been strangely quiet on the center and right wing in the absence of the usual cannonading. There were spasmodic shots from field guns, but no firing by the long-range pieces nor the big-caliber cannon.—Atlanta Georgian.

THE NEGRO TROOPS.

N Y C HERALD
JUNE 9, 1918

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:—

As a negro citizen and taxpayer I feel proud of what the New York negro regiment is doing for freedom on the bloody fields of France.

When I appeared before Governor Sulzer and asked him to sign the bill for this negro regiment I told him that in case of war our negro soldiers would do their duty—and could fight just as well, and just as hard, and just as bravely as their white brethren.

For many years the negro taxpayers of New York urged legislation for this negro regiment, only to have Governors and legislators shut the doors of justice and opportunity in their faces.

All honor to Governor Sulzer, who had the courage in the face of tremendous opposition to sign the bill. All honor to the brave legislators of 1913 who had the courage to vote for it, and all honor to our negro soldiers of New York who are fighting bravely for our cause.

Stories of Heroic Daring Trickle Through About Colored Troops Abroad

The Cleveland Advocate

Acts of Valor Show the World that America's Black Troops Are the Equal of Any on Earth

10-19/18.

By Special Correspondent.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY AT THE FRONT.—If Emperor William in recent weeks has been on his historic observation post at Montfaucon, where he saw the fighting before Verdun in 1916, he would have seen American Negro soldiers holding a portion of the trenches in the Forests de Hesse. The units had been a part of six different French divisions since landing in France and has always been progressing toward the hotter spots in the line until now it is believed to be ready for the supreme test of a real fight in equal to those in which the light-skinned Americans have written pages of valor. They have already shown that they are able to withstand big shells bursting on all sides—an ordeal which in the first year of the war shook the nerves of earliest Negro units put into the front lines.

"I have as much confidence in the Negro soldier as in any other body of troops with the same amount of fighting experience," says the colonel, a seasoned regular army officer who is the only white man in command.

The story of how Corporal Isaac Valley, of Gerald, Kan., won the distinguished service cross is an inspiration to every man in the unit. Valley is one of the few Colored soldiers who thus far has won that honor. He served three years in the Twenty-fourth Infantry before he was transferred to this regiment. A private in attempting to throw a hand grenade dropped it in the trench in the midst of his comrades. Valley had no time to pick it up and throw it out, he therefore put his foot on it and shoved it into the mud. The grenade exploded and tore off part of his foot. His only comment as he was carried back was, "I saved the others even if it did get me."

When General Pershing heard of the incident he awarded the ribbon, which is the ambition of every fighting man to possess. "That man will be back in a few days," said the colonel to me one day.

One night a big German raiding party came over and penetrated behind the first lines of this unit before the Americans opened up and without the loss of a single man, drove them back.

The Negro soldiers are not only anxious for real fighting but many of them have high ideals of their duty.

"We are here," said Sergt. Greenleaf Johnson of the Colored Y. M. C. A. in Washington, D. C., "not because we think the Negroes of the United States ought to be represented, but because we are American citizens and it is our duty to help our country in the war.

"We believe in taking a part, even if it be small, in the great contest to make the world better morally, socially and economically. We realize that any thing helps our country helps the world and makes life better for humanity."

Sergt. Johnson also described the bravery of Capt. Sylvester Epps, a Spanish war veteran and for many years chief messenger for successive war secretaries in Washington. He was in charge of the men who repelled a raid the Germans made on the lines in the Vauquois forest. Capt. Arthur Davis, a clerk in the Washington post-office, also took part in the same fight, in which the enemy lost 100 men in killed and wounded and 50 prisoners.

Privates Frank F. Moore, of Pittsburg, and William Curtiss Washington, of Meridien, Conn., were jarred by the same grenade which was stamped into the ground by another Colored soldier and won for him the distinguished service cross.

Corp. Robert S. Ellington, of 3149 Dearborn street, Chicago, has returned to his unit after receiving a stray bullet in his leg while directing rifle practice on a field within range of enemy snipers.

Private Andrew Mills, of Richmond, Va., is convinced that Colored men are just as visible at night as their white fellow soldiers. He shows a dent in his steel helmet made by the bullet of a German sniper when he peeped over the parapet of the trench on a bright moonlight night.

COULD NOT HOLD NEGRO TROOPS

Colonel, in Answer to Reprimand, Said Whole German Army Couldn't Do It

HAMMERED WAY THROUGH

Y. M. C. A. of C. Taking Splendid Care of Negro Fighters at Front

9-11-18.

By JOSEPH J. CANAVAN

Unofficial reports filtering back from the fighting front in France have added the final touch of amplification to the phrase contained in a German official statement when the big drive by American troops was at its heights a few weeks ago, and which noted that "black Americans" had hammered their way gloriously through the Hun lines.

It was not, though, until the battle was over, according to the unofficial version of the same fighting, that the brigade commander summoned the colonel of a Negro regiment before him and demanded to know in terse military fashion why that colonel had not maintained better control over his troops, and why, above everything else, he had not "stopped" his men and kept them from passing beyond their appointed objectives, and, in fact, hacking their way through ahead of their own protective barrage.

"Stop them?" queried the colonel, "Stop them? Hell, man, how could you expect me to stop them, when the whole German Army couldn't do it?"

The brigade commanders reply is not recorded, either officially or unofficially, but the story, is only one of a thousand that is being told of the admirable dash and courage of the Americans who compose the Negro units of the expeditionary force and which every day are out there in the thick of the fighting and holding their place in the line wherever they may be called upon to do their military bit.

In just the same manner, the men who compose those regiments are partaking of the carefully built up welfare work that is being accomplished on both sides of the water by the Knights of Columbus on War Activities. In fact, they are receiving special attention, both in the camps in this country and K. of C. huts in France, and the work among the Negro troops is being broadened as rapidly as the numbers of the Negro troops grow, under the operation of the selective service laws and by voluntary enlistment, the latter apparently being a particularly inviting method for Negroes getting into the army.

Under the system as it now has been worked out, the Negro soldier needs no other countersign than his khaki uniform to gain for him every advantage offered by the Knights of Columbus service.

92nd Division Is in Thick of Fight

The Cleveland Advocate

Paris, Oct. 10.—(By Mail.)—The Ninety-second division, which includes all the Negro draftees of Minnesota who were called into service last fall, is now in France and is making good at the tasks to which it has been assigned to date. 11/9/18

A majority of the Minnesota Negro draftees are assigned to the 366th infantry, the unit of the Ninety-second division which was trained at Camp Dodge in the winter of 1917-1918 and the spring of 1918.

Major General C. C. Ballou, who was commandant of the Negro officers' training school held at Fort Des Moines, Iowa, in 1917, and who commanded the 163d depot brigade at Camp Dodge, Iowa, prior to his promotion to the grade of major general, is in command of the Negro division.

Part of Fourth Corps.

The Ninety-second division is one of the six divisions comprising the Fourth American army corps. Maj. Gen. George W. Read commands the Fourth army corps, which comprises the Eighty-third, Eighty-ninth, Thirty-seventh, Twenty-ninth, Nineteenth and Ninety-second divisions. In addition to the Colored troops, the Fourth army corps includes former National Guard units of Ohio, New Jersey, Virginia, Delaware, Maryland and the District of Columbia, and former National Army units of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Kansas, Missouri, South Dakota, Nebraska, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Texas and Oklahoma. This line-up is permissible because of announcement by the chief of the general staff of the composition of the first five army corps on or near the front in France.

The chief of staff also announced the officers commanding each regimental, battalion and brigade unit of the five corps. In the Ninety-second division the 366th infantry is commanded by Col. Ralph B. Parrott, who, it will be recalled, was commandant of the first officers' training school to be held at Camp Dodge.

Black Soldiers in France.

A writer in the Wall Street Journal says: "I asked an enterprising international banker to name the most interesting and impressive things of the war. He responded promptly: First, the extraordinary use of black troops by the French. Nine hundred thousand black men fighting and dying for France is a marvelous fact."

All the reports that have come from France in regard to the conduct of American negro troops have been highly favorable. Their officers, the French and British observers and correspondents in the field have given them high praise as soldiers in peaceful service and as fighters. They have met all requirements and have won the admiration and respect of those who had doubted their quality. Their bravery can no longer be questioned.

The 900,000 black men referred to were not all from the United States, of course. England had negro troops from South Africa and there were dark-skinned soldiers from Morocco and Algiers. Also there were Hindoos who might carelessly have been counted as black men. But it is in our own negroes, that the United States has special interest. They fought for [illegible]e because they were loyal Amer[illegible] ready to obey their country's bidding. They did their part just as white men did, and as well. They faced the guns of the enemy with courage; they were found among the wounded and among the dead.

Grateful France will know no difference between the graves of black soldiers and white, but will lay flowers on all alike. It is for this country to pay equal honor to living veterans with black skins and to white soldiers on their return and to give the black men an equal chance in the occupation of civil life. They have earned that right.

Roberts is the man who, with another of his race, captured thirteen Germans.

369TH INFANTRY COMMENDED BY COMMANDING OFFICER TO GOVERNOR WHITMAN

The Houston Observer. 9-14-18.

Colonel William B. Hayward, in Letter to Chief Executive of the Empire State, Praises the Fighting Qualities and Conduct Under Galling Enemy Fire Demonstrated by the Black Soldiers of His Command—This Whole Regiment Was Cited for Bravery Some Weeks Ago—Greatest and Only Achievement of Its Kind In the Annals of Warfare—Kaiser Wilhelm Witnessed the Smashing of the Hun Line by the "Black Devils."

Special to The Observer.

Albany, N. Y.—The state flags of the Fifteenth (colored) Regiment and the Twenty-second Engineers, which were carried by them when they aided in repulsing the German offensive in the Champagne sector, will soon be unfurled in the executive chamber in the capitol, having been returned to the State by these units. The flags are slightly stained, but bear only a few bullet holes. As far as is known, they were the only state flags to be carried by any American troop unit to the front line and baptized by the German shell fire.

In a letter to Governor Whitman telling of the action, Col. William B. Hayward, commander of the colored regiment, says it was most stupendous and indescribable. His letter in part reads:

"We were through the big battle, the biggest in the world's history, I suppose. Where we were and so far as our part in it went it lasted ten days. It was the most wonderful, stupendous, terrifying (I am not ashamed to say it) thing. I can't describe the forces involved, the magnitude of it. It is beyond imagination. It seemed to me there must be no artillery left anywhere from Switzerland to the sea, that it was all in our sector behind us. Hadn't supposed there was so much in the world, German and Allied, as I saw and heard. Oh, it was a tremendous party. We were proudly a part of that splendid French army which stood and slew and stood and slew more, just as wonderful General Gouraud told us to, with machine guns, heavy and light artillery, grenades, gas mines, tanks and aeroplanes, until the boche no longer came, and then we went forward and picked them out of the front trenches we had evacuated purposely and left full of trouble and death for them. I think it was the most brilliant, most scientific achievement in the military annals of the world—to stop in its tracks the greatest human avalanche ever precipitated and with a previously unheard of minimum of losses on our side.

"The French papers say William Hohenzollern watched the attack from his side, not far from where we were, indeed nearly opposite the point where the old 369th was (as I figure it) on our left a few kilos. I hope he did, for if so he saw his grey hosts batter themselves to pieces on a stone wall, saw the green grass of No Man's Land covered with an ever-thickening gray carpet, and saw the rivers and creeks which here flow north, turn red and flow red for days.

"Of course, we saw but little of it, only on our own front, but we knew the same was going on along a front of fifty miles. We think it was the supreme boche effort. I think the boche is licked. It may last six months or six years, but he has passed his high point. Only the 15th and 369th were in it, and we were the only Negro regiment. So just imagine, if you can, our pride to read in the German communique, in General Ludendorff's petulant list of the Allied forces against him 'white Americans' and 'black Americans.' We were certainly happy to be among those present.

"We are back in the front line again some distance from either of our previous sectors, tired but contented. My officers were reduced to thirty-six at the time of the battle, four company commanders were carried through on stretchers. I was on crutches. The boys were splendid.

"Where and when the next big drive will come we wonder at, guess at, surmise. Possibly right here, this grand army and it will stick, just as it did before. 'On ne passer ont pas' does not aply solely to Verdun now. Haven't the Americans done creditably everywhere? Still we have so much to learn. I've been a colonel longer than anyone in the world, eighteen years or so, but I learn, learn from my French brother-in-arms more each month than I ever knew all told before coming to them. On the military maps and official records a P. C. (Post de Command) is always given a proper name. On the maps and records of this great battle of Champagne there are shown two Posts de Command, where the 369th was. One is P. C. Whitman and the other is P. C. Leland. You can imagine the boche would have had to fight harder than he did to take either of them.

"Our boys are rich with booty now. Helmets by the score, haversacks, Mauser rifles (which, by the way, they are using because they are similar to the Springfield) thousands and thousands of rounds of ammunition, overcoats, field glasses, etc."

U. S. MEN MASSED INTO ONE ARMY

Nearly 95 Per Cent. of American Troops Brigaded With British and French Withdrawn.

SAYS THE SHIPPING IMPROVES

N Y C TELEGRAPH
SEPTEMBER 8 1918

Washington Bureau, b
The Morning Telegraph,
Washington, D. C., Sept. 7.

Nearly 95 per cent. of the American troops brigaded with the French and British have been withdrawn in France, General March told the members of the Senate Military Committee to-day, and are being massed into an American army at a point not designated. They will form the First American Field Army under General Pershing.

General March, in his weekly statement, said there is only one division, the Thirty-second, engaged in the present battle, but the Twenty-seventh, composed of New York troops, has taken its place on the line in Flanders, while the Ninety-second, composed of negro troops, has arrived in the Vosges. American troops in Italy are still in reserve sectors, he declared, and have not yet taken part in the hostilities.

The Germans, he said, were in a general retreat on a 100-mile front from Arras to Rheims, and the Chief of Staff called attention to the fact that the Huns are now sixty miles distant from Paris at their nearest point as against forty miles on July 15.

Two Operations Did It.

Two operations were responsible for the forcing of the German retreat, General March explained. The first of these, he said, was that of the British on the Arras-Peronne front, and the second was the advance of the Franco-American troops across the Soissons plateau.

The Hindenburg line, he points out, is now only ten miles away from the advancing Allies at its farthest sector.

In this connection, the Chief of Staff announced that official reports received at the department show that the Franco-American troops had reached the Aisne on a ten-mile front last night, while the French and American troops farther north were within ten miles of St. Quentin.

Reverting to the American army organization, General March said the making up of three new divisions is now under way. They will be the Ninety-fifth at Camp Sheridan, Ohio; the Ninety-sixth at Camp Wadsworth, S. C., and the Ninety-seventh at Camp Cody, N. M.

Shipping Improves, He Says.

There is a continued improvement in the transportation facilities, General March declared, and the number of ships now in use, he said, not only is being greatly increased, but the schedule of trips is being so planned as to eliminate to the minimum degree delays on both this side and the other side of the Atlantic.

Troop ships are now being unloaded in French ports in three or four days, he said, while the time for unloading cargo carriers has been reduced until now from ten to fifteen days are required.

Summarizing reports received here on the Siberian situation, the Chief of Staff said that the Czechoslovaks and the Cossack-Japanese forces had cleared the trans-Siberian Railway from Vladivostok to the River Volga. He added that the general situation was now more favorable.

Colored Troops Prove Marksmanship; Hit Hun Plane 100 Times

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, Sept. 25 (by mail).—Our colored troops proved their marksmanship recently by bringing down a Boche plane, which had raked them with machine gun fire, in less than fifteen seconds. More than a hundred bullets penetrated the airplane.

The German appeared over the quaint old town of St. Die and swooped down to an altitude of less than 150 feet. He was forced to rise to clear the tower of the Hotel de Ville, but again glided down and turned his machine gun on the principal street, despite the fact that many civilians, men, women and children, were on the sidewalks. One civilian was wounded.

Two colored military policemen promptly unloaded their revolvers at the Hun. He climbed out of the range and passed over the city, sliding down again when he discovered a company of negro infantry, on the hike, resting under some trees.

He turned loose his machine gun again. The company commander ordered his men to open fire. The Boche plane burst into flames and fell in a field a few yards away. The pilot was killed.

Colored Yanks Bury Dead As They Sing Old Songs

The Cleveland Advertiser

Picks Swing to the Tune of "We Are Climbing Jacob's Ladder" As Heroes Over There Bury Comrades

9-28-1918

(By a special correspondent.)

PARIS, Sept. 21.—A plain dirt road winds about the base of a low, thickly wooded hill and, passing into fields, runs along across a hollow where lie the ruins of what once was a village of stone houses. Just at the edge of the village it cuts at an acute angle another road, and in the first of the angles thus formed stands the cross of the wayside shrine. At the foot of the cross is a short, freshly dug trench whence a few weeks ago a machine gun poured out its deadly hell.

We stand there in the warm sun struck by the thought which this contrast inspires, when from the direction of the hill comes the droning sound of song.

"We'er climbing, climbing, climbing up Jacob's ladder,
Every little round goes higher, higher,
Lord, I'm almost home."

We listen to the smooth roll of melody, then walk toward it. In about a hundred yards we come to a group of twelve or fifteen Negro laborers in charge of an American sergeant. Most of them are lolling on the ground, but three, standing elbow to elbow, are swinging their picks in rhythmic unison as they sing an old camp meeting song.

"We're climbing up Jacob's ladder—
Lord, I'm almos' home."

The words of the cadence of soft voices and the scene touch us to the quick.

On the nearby hill is Belleau Wood and the ruins of a village. The Negroes are digging a trench grave for the bodies of those splendid heroes who gave their lives in that desperate struggle.

COLORED YANK RUSHES ENEMY ROUTS TWENTY

PEORIA ILL JOURNAL
AUGUST 27, 1918

"Look Out, You Bush Germans, I'm Coming," Yells One Time Elevator Runner, As He Rescues His Lieutenant.

BY LINCOLN EYRE.

(Copyright 1918 by Press Publishing Co. New York World-Peoria Journal Cable Service.)

WITH AN AMERICAN NEGRO CONTINGENT ON THE FRENCH FRONT, Aug. 27—"Look out, you bush Germans, I'm comin'!" yelled Sergt. William Butler of New York as he leaped from a shallow pit in advance of the firing trenches and trained his automatic rifle on the enemy.

Butler, who was an "indoor chauffeur" once upon a time "came" with such good effect that he liberated his white Lieutenant and four American privates from the foe's clutches and killed at least four Boches, badly wounded a Prussian officer, who later died, and put a score of Boches to ignominious fight.

He concluded his "private war" by pursuing the Germans right up to their own line and nonchalantly tossing hand grenades into their dugouts, though at the time their barrage was biting the earth all around him.

Wins Cross of War.

Butler's exploit, for which he received the Croix de Guerre, rivals the performance of Henry Johnson and Needham Roberts, privates in the same regiment, the first report of which was cabled to The World and Journal last May. It is additional proof of the fighting qualities of our negro soldiers.

The engagement in which Butler played so splendid a role took place in the early morning of Aug. 18 in the regimental sector near Maisons de Champagne, northeast of Stemenhould. Following a sharp artillery preparation, the enemy had launched a strong raiding party, which, cutting in from two sides, managed with the aid of a cage barrage, to isolate four of our front line combat posts. In one of them, Lieut. G. R. Jones, stepping over to light a starshell, was "jumped" by five Boches. He and four of his men were dragged out of the trench and shoved toward the German lines, along a disused communication trench in no man's land. On the way the raiders, with their prisoners ahead of them, passed within fifty yards of a little advanced post in which Butler crouched with two privates.

"Don't fire, Butler!" Lieut. Jones cried. "Not yet, sir, but soon," the Sergeant sang out.

Germans Confused.

The Germans were so flustered by this colloquy, which seemed to them to indicate an ambuscade, that they wheeled about towards Butler's hiding place. Lieut. Jones immediately signalled his four men to follow him and clambered up the side of the trench. As the five started back toward the American lines the Lieutenant cried: "Now let 'em have it, Sergeant."

Butler shrieked his warning to the "bush Germans" and stumbled thru the darkness to a point from which he could enfilade the trench they were in, and cut loose with the automatic. The Boches "made up a train," as the negro troops say, and without lose of time they skedaddled homeward at top speed leaving their officer wounded, and four privates killed in the trench.

Butler chased them to within their own wire, and doubtless slew some more with his hand grenades. He rambled all over the sector in search of gray-green prey, returning to the combat post only when he was completely exhausted.

"Just Ran Amuck."

"Guess I just ran amuck" he said afterward.

Lieut. Jones, whose presence of mind won him the highest recommendation, also received the Croix de Guerre. An hour after the fight Capt. John Outwater of New York, commanding the company against which the raid was launched, heard groans just beyond our barbed wire. He crawled out there and found a German officer with his right arm torn clean off by Butler's bullets, and otherwise wounded. Capt. Outwater carried him to the American trenches. Before he died the Purssian gave Capt. Outwater, who interrogated him in German, valuable data about the enemy dispositions of troops.

Capt. Outwater's courageous conduct gained him the War Cross.

SECTORS HELD BY THE COLORED SOLDIERS IN FRANCE

The Richmond Planet

(Special to The Planet.)

With the 372nd Infantry, S. P. 179, A. E. F., France, August 17.—American newspapers are publishing daily the great success of the Allied Armies in this present drive, and I am confident that the colored citizens of the U. S. A. are anxious to know what part of this great task their boys are doing and where they are situated.

9-14-1918

Against the law of the A. E. F. for me, or any one else connected with said organization to tell the names of the different sectors held by any soldiers in France, as it would afford much valuable information to the enemy, but nevertheless I will endeavor to describe the important trenches and sectors held by Colored American Soldiers during this great drive.

COLORED SOLDIERS CAPTURE A NUMBER OF PRISONERS.

The Colored Soldiers, including the Fifteenth New York Infantry, Eighth Illinois or 370th Infantry and the 372nd Regiment Infantry, are holding some of the most important sectors in France, in which they have succeeded in capturing a number of prisoners and officers, including one Major.

The 372nd Regiment is now holding one of the greatest sectors in France, in which thousands of German soldiers have given their lives in a vain effort to capture. Our boys marched to this sector under a terrific shell fire, losing some men, but never wavering in their speed. Several times the enemy has attempted to wrest this sector from us, but have been unsuccessful in each attempt.

GERMANS SMOTHERED BY FIRE AND KNIVES OF OUR BOYS.

Each time they attacked they received such a fusillade of machine gun fire, grenades, bolo knives, trench mortars and shell fire, that they will have to content themselves with the knowledge that the sector is as impregnable as in the year of 1916.

During this great drive in which the German hordes have suffered such a crushing defeat, it is very important to keep a constant watch on every inch of the front which they occupy. They remind me of what my teacher used to call (mischievous students) "eye servants." They must be watched at all times unceasingly and then if you are not extremely careful they will put one over on you.

GERMANS SURPRISED AT VALOR OF ALL AMERICAN TROOPS.

They seem to be mad at heart and sick in spirit at the success of the Allies, during the months of July and August, especially the battles which the American Forces have been so closely identified, first because they were so surprised at the presence of such hordes of Americans in France, second because of their presence in the front line trenches; and greater still of their valor and dash which they deemed impossible due to information regarding their untrained and incompetent rookies.

I suppose they are thoroughly acquainted with Uncle Sam's fighting valor by now, because the Yanks have had them in constant retreat ever since they made their debut in Belleau Woods, in which one American regiment completely destroyed thousands of old German vets, especially the much vaunted Prussian Guards, in this woody fighting, where they had machine guns placed in most every other tree.

THOUSANDS OF GERMANS ARE MADE PRISONERS BY ALLIES.

Considering the American soldiers in regards to numbers with that of their Allies and the short time they have had for training, their mark of efficiency and accomplishments can be recorded along with their older and more experienced comrades. The prisoners captured by the Allies during the months of July and August are as follows:

July—British, 4,500; French, 33,400; Americans, 4,300.

August—British, 28,000; French, 8,426; Americans, 4,008.

The Germans have been driven back 21 miles during July and August, and they are still advancing towards Berlin instead of Paris

Very truly yours,
HARRY W. REID,
Pharmacist, 372nd Inf., U. S. S. P., 179, France.

THE FIGHTING BLACK.

DALLAS TEX JOURNAL
JULY 2, 1918

How American Negro troops outfought the Boches in the Verdun sector is graphically told in a belated story from the front. It furnishes added proof that the fighting black may be relied upon to stand by his guns to a finish, and should compel those who have found occasion to question his courage and staying qualities to revise their opinion. Under the right commander, the negro soldier will prove as good or better than the German squarehead, and, given his chance, will distinguish himself.

His demonstrated prowess merits approving comment and should serve to heighten the loyalty of his race at home and make them more responsive to the industrial demands of the hour. It may be said for this home contingent of negroes that few, if any of them, have faced a charge of disloyalty, and this despite insiduous German effort to awaken their prejudices and inflame their minds.

NEGROES WRITE MOTHER

Three Sons of Mrs. Fannie Byars With Forces In France

Southwestern Christian Advocate 10/17/18

"Few letters have" been received in San Antonio equaling in interest because of the attendant circumstances, the following three; which came to a Negro laundress. They are from the sons of Mrs. Fannie Byars, three young Negro boys now in France. The first one, written by George Byars, a corporal with the A. E. F., reads in part as follows:

"I have not been successful enough to get a fountain pen as yet. Do hate to write with a pencil.

"Bufford and I are fine, but have not seen James (referring to his brother) in two weeks. He is away taking a special course in some school.

"Hope you are well. I have not heard from you since we have been here, but suppose the mail will come in a few days. This is a beautiful country. Gee! Wish I could describe the surrounding country, but it is not possible. The French people certainly treat us nice. hey are always tring to do pleasant things for us, women as well as men. Of course, we would like to be back in the States, but other than that we do not worry at all. The war is our last wory and all of the boys are in fine spirits, feeling that the war will soon be over and we will be back home."

I have no news today as I am a little tired from a practice march, but a Y. M. M. C. A., man came to town today, and I think you will hear from us more often.

Writes During Rain

The second letter, written also from France, was from James, another son, who began:

"It is raining too badly for me to go to service, which is a short way away. But the conveniences are such that I can sit in, out of the weather and write. No doubt you have received my other letter by now. Yours that was written me in the States came safely a few days ago, and gave us quite a relief." I am a short ways away from George and Bufford, who are yet together, but I am expecting to join them in a few days. We are just doing fine. I had a cold a few days ago, but am well now. All we have to do is to turn around and walk into a place for treatment of any kind. The first aid stations are always in our doors. You and others over there do not have any idea of the amount of money and work that Americans, you included, are spending for our comfort. Whenever it is possible, we are given as near home comforts as any one could expect so far away.

"The courage of all the American soldiers is growing stronger each day. We are not getting at all weak. All say they are sure to return home after they 'get the Kaiser.' It is really wonderful to talk to some men who have accomplished something at the front."

We are feeling quite sure that you are getting along all right and are still trying to do as you want us to do.

Gives Advice to Mother

From the third son, Bufford, came the following letter mailed just before the troops sailed:

"Just when we will leave is not known. f we leave soon you may continue to send ur mail as usual. If you write the name of he organization plainly we will get it.

"You might wonder what there is for you o do to please us. I shall tell you in plain vords. First: Quit work, be cheerful and ook to the early future for the best of it. 'ake our absence as a portion of your sacifice which must go to make you mission n this earth complete. And prepare for our eception if we return. I feel that we will eturn, because your prayers can not fail, but f we do not, your prayer is: Thy will be one, and why then mourn after His vorks?"

"We have gone into this because we feel hat our share in this country is as great s that of any other American citizen and our part remains undone until we do it. With all this in mind, we go over. It may happen that your boys may not get into a single battle—and, again, we may fall in the severest conflict. We do not know, and I do not worry about that. I may be one of the fortunate ones and return to tell the tale. Whatever comes, just say that this is a part of the war, and look happily to the future. You have not once failed me in being a real mother, and now is no time to mourn. We go with light hearts full of the expectation of returnng, so be cheerful."

ON THE HONOR ROLL

PRIVATES Henry Johnson and Needham Roberts, negro Americans, have been awarded the cross of war by France. This is for distinguished bravery. The award was made by the French commander of the division in which the negro regiment is brigaded, some distance from the American sector at Toul.

Negro Americans distinguished themselves at San Juan in the war against Spain. Others already had distinguished themselves by courage and devotion to duty in the Civil War. Now members of the race whose freedom was won in that war are fighting for the liberties of others on the battlefields of France.

Johnson and Roberts, on entry duty, at night, some distance apart, were attacked by a German assaulting party numbering 20. Each of the two was wounded several times, but continued fighting with such dash and bravery that three of the enemy were killed and the rest were put to flight. In addition to the war cross, a second war decoration is to be awarded Private Johnson.

The names of these two will live long on the honor roll of America.

Colored Yanks in Action Show Reckless Daring

Several Colored Yanks Win Medals of Honor for Distinguished Conduct Under Fire

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY AT THE FRONT, Sept. 12.—If Emperor William in recent weeks has been on his historic observation post at Montfaucon, where he saw the fighting before Verdun in 1916, he would have seen American Negro soldiers holding a portion of the trenches in the Forest de Hesse. The unit had been a part of six different French divisions since landing in France and has always been progressing toward the hotter spots in the line until now it is believed to be ready for the supreme test of a real fight equal to those in which the light-skinned Americans have written pages of valor. They have already shown that they are able to withstand big shells bursting on all sides—an ordeal which in the first year of the war shook the nerves of earliest Negro units put into the front lines.

"I have as much confidence in the Negro soldiers as in any other body of troops with the same amount of fighting experience," says the colonel, a seasoned regular army officer, who is the only white man in the command. "All we want is a chance to get the boches," declare the men, pronouncing the word "bushes."

COMMANDER 93D DIV. COMMENDS OUR FIGHTERS

(Special to The New York Age)

WASHINGTON, D. C.—General Roy C. Hoffman, who went to France as the commander of the 93rd Division, made up of colored troops, is back to this country. He lauds the men of his command in the highest terms and says the world has never seen better fighting men. He takes pride in describing the encounter of Needham Roberts and Harry Johnson with the Boches and how these brave lads put the Huns to inglorious flight and won the French Croix de Guerre. Gen. Hoffman says our boys are doing finely over there and that they are esteemed in the warmest measure by the French people of all classes. Gen. Hoffman says any officer should be proud to command the type of men who made up the 93rd Division, and he is anxious to have some more of the same kind.

Special to The Observer.

Vladivostok, Russia.—The world-famous United States Ninth Cavalry, colored, arrived here a few days ago from Stotensburg, Philippine Islands, where the troopers have been stationed for some time keeping order among the Filipinos. The Ninth is part of the Aemrican expeditionary forces recently landed here, who, with the Japanese forces, form the allied invasion in Siberia. This is not the first time that the Ninth has carried the Stars and Stripes into battle in the orient. It will be remembered that this regiment fought in the battle of Tien Tsin during the Boxer uprisings in 1899, their commanding officer, Colonel Liscum, being killed in action. The second officer in command of this organization is a colored man, Lieutenant Colonel Ollie B. Phillips, who was formerly a major for several years in the same cavalry. The bolsheviki will get a genuine spanking, if they persist in their defiant spirit and belligerent and bellicose attitude towards Uncle Sam and the allies.

The above news item relative to the Ninth United States Cavalry landing in Russia recalls the gallant and conspicuous service that this organization has rendered since its birth in New Orleans, La., in 1866, when 2,266 ex-slaves were recruited for the armed services of America. These men formed the nucleus around and on which the Twenty-Fourth and Twenty-Fifth Infantry, the Ninth and Tenth Cavalry were organized. All four are noted as fearless and intrepid fighters, with the honors going to the cavalry commands. The Ninth, often called the "Nigger Ninth," during the fifty-two years of its existence, has participated in Indian wars on the Western frontiers and rendered distinguished service at San Juan Hill, when the Ninth and Tenth stormed the entrenched Spaniards, despite the yells and protestations of Colonel Theodore Rosevelt and his Rough Riders that it was death to climb the hill in the face of the terrific enemy fire, and thereby saved the day for Old Glory and prevented the utter annihilation of the colonel and his great organization.

Their charge up San Juan Hill is one of the greatest feats of daring and intrepidity in the annals of warfare, and the capture of El Caney was no small accomplishment. neither did it fall short of San Juan in daring, bravery and gallantry. These black troopers know nothing about retreat; in fact, it is not in their martial vocabulary or lexicon, for whe ninformed at San Juan Hill that it was death to storm the Spanish trenches, they yelled: "To hell with the rear! There'll be a hot time in the old town tonight." They captured the fort and won the day for Uncle Sam, Sergeant Berry of the Tenth being the first American soldier to reach the Spanish blockhouse and hoist the Stars and Stripes amidst a veritable rain of Spanish bullets.

By Wm. Stevenson, Overseas War Correspondent for National Negro Press Association.

The fourth of July was a great day in France. It was observed as a holiday, stores, banks, etc., being closed. The people were dressed in their best and everywhere the American flag was prominently displayed with the colors of the Allies.

This town is a small city but an immense parade was held in the morning. Many thousands of American, French and British soldiers and sailors marched.

The Y. M. C. A. was represented with about seventy-five workers. There are now three American colored women in France and others are to be sent over to serve the thousands of colored troops in the front and rear services. One of these colored women is located at this base and was in the parade.

The members of the Y. M. C. A. marched like real soldiers and were cheered along the line of march.

Among the American troops were thousands of Colored soldiers. As they marched through the streets of this city the people waved their hats and handkerchiefs and greeted them with "Vive l'Amerique."

It made me feel proud to know that these men whose forefathers fought in order that the Union might be saved, were now in France doing their bit toward making the world "safe for democracy."

In the afternoon there was a track meet at one of the camps, where all sorts of athletics were indulged in, including a mule race, which was very amusing. At another camp there was a barbecue.

Thousands of French people were carried to the camps in Uncle Sams army trucks and Y. M. C. A. automobiles, and great numbers of both French and English witnessed the games and joined in the spirit of the day. It was not difficult for them to do this, for after all, both English and French soldiers fought in the war during which was written the Declaration of Independence.

It was a great day in France for all the Allies.

NEWS FROM OVER THERE—WAR CORRESPONDENT APPOINTED BY THE NATIONAL NEGRO PRESS ASSOCIATION LAST FEBRUARY, SENDS OUT HIS FIRST INSTALLMENTS.

"SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE."

By Wm. Stevenson, Overseas War Correspondent for National Negro Press Association.

Inasmuch as this is my first letter to the National Negro Press Association I deem it proper to first touch upon the importance of the Y. M. C. A., under the auspices of which I am doing my "bit."

Like many others, I have for many years been interested in, and read considerable concerning the importance of its work.

Several years ago a campaign was put on in Cincinnati, under the Rosenwald plan, for the construction of a building for colored men. Your humble servant was captain of the winning team which wrote $3,800.00 worth of subscriptions in ten days. It has been my pleasure to visit some of the organization's finest and most complete buildings and to spend three months in Army Y. M. C. A. work at Camp Taylor, Ky. However, not until I came "over here" and saw its immense plant—its Foreign Uniform, Athletic, Publicity and Medical Departments, it warehouses and its great number of Christian workers, did I have a proper idea of the strength and the world wide importance of the Young Men's Christian Association. It is planned and works like a great corporation. If the people throughout the country could only see the great good that is being done for the men in France with the money they have contributed they would indeed, be amazed and say "We never saw it in this fashion.." It is undenominational and the strongest organization of its kind in the world. It was organized nearly seventy-five years ago and did work in the Civil War. In every war since, and in almost every country of the world it has ministered to the needs of those who have gone forth to fight for their country.

Today its huts and tents are all over France, Italy, England and the Holy Land, and in them more than 1,50 of its workers, men and women are cheering the hearts of the soldiers. The religious phase of its work is carried out by deeds rather than words.

Heretofore I thought I had a pretty good idea of the greatness of this organization. However, almost immediately after arriving here I found that I knew very little concerning its work. Others, no doubt, have the same ideas I had. What I have said has been stated simply for the purpose of impressing upon those readers what the Y. M. C. A. of today is and what it means to our army "over here."

What I write must necessarily be written hurriedly. Therefore I make no apology for what is here set forth except to state that my effort has been to give facts rather than to please the ear.

It was as workers of such an organization as described above that we took passage on a French ship on the eighth of March. There were ministers, teachers, doctors, lawyers and business men in the party, which included women. All held first class tickets and the treatment and cuisine on board were excellent.

As our vessel slowly made its way out into the river, I took a parting look at the City's skyline and the Goddess of Liberty statue which stands in its harbor. As I gazed at it I was reminded that it was Lafayette, a young Frenchman, who first stirred his country to action in the war of the seventeen hundreds; that his activities resulted in France sending Rochambeau and others with ship and men to America, there to fight in the great conflict, during the early part of which was born that imperishable document, the Declaration of Independence. I was then overwhelmed with the thought that, this being true, it was a great privilege to be allowed to lend a helping hand to France—to the country which carries on her coins the motto: "Libertie, Egalite, Fraternite," and which has so long fought to maintain these principles.

France gave us Lafayette, to France we have given Pershing and hundreds of thousands of other men, and ships and guns. And America will continue to send and give to the end that there shall be driven out of this beautiful land an army which has ravished her women, mutiliated her children and destroyed her wonderful works of art. We must suppress this atrocious enemy, who believes in a "ruthless warfare" and considers a sacred treaty as only a "scrap of paper."

Finally darkness spread her blanket over this immense body of water, for we were now in the Atlantic ocean. The next morning I arose early to find that the land had completely disappeared. Then I fully realized that I was on the mission of my life for the greatest organization of its kind in the world.

At ten o'clock the Y. M. C. A. workers held a conference and at two o'clock in the afternoon we attend a French class. The organization has done and is doing all it can to assist not only its workers but also the soldiers to learn some French. In every hut and tent "over here" the language is taught by a French teacher who speaks English.

During the day that great prairie of salt water worked itself into a fury and tossed our ship about as though it were only a row boat. Most every one on board, including your humble servant, became sick. As a result, things began to come up upon which we had not counted and food was, therefore, cast upon the waters for the denizens of the deep.

Sunday morning the Y. M. C. A. held a service in the salon which was well attended, and during the week several entertainments were given by it including one for the soldiers.

During the last three days of our voyage we passed through the submarine zone, skirting the coast of Spain. While we had many anxious hours we did not see a single submarine; how many saw us I do not know. I do know, however, that we were very well satisfied for most of us were not looking for extraordinary thrills. It has been said that "everything comes to him who waits." Being in the danger zone, I think most of us had adopted as a good motto: "That which you do not see don't ask for."

After traveling for eleven days we reached the river upon which is located the city where we landed, which is said to be about six hundred years old and one of the largest wine making centers of France.

As we glided slowly through its water thousands of colored stevedores and many others persons of various nationalities and walks of life—even German prisoners, lined its banks and greeted us by waving their hats and handkerchiefs. The prisoners were, no doubt, glad to be there, for all I have seen are well treated. In the immediate vicinity where I am now writing there was about fifteen hundred of them, and they go about their duties in a manner which indicates that they are content to remain prisoners until the day when victory shall have been won by the Allies and a lasting peace declared.

A few moments before we landed the band, amid cheers both on board and ashore, struck up "The Star Spangled Banner." This was the proudest moment of my life. Then it was that I was thrilled through and through. That thing we call patriotism took possession of me and my hair seemed to stand on end. Proud, indeed, was I to be an American and a Y. M. C. A. man, and proud was I of the fact that I had traveled as such more than thirty-five hundred miles across the great Atlantic and faced the dangers of the death-dealing submarine, all for the purpose of contributing my "bit" in the furtherance and protection of a great principle.

P. S.—In my next letter I will tell of the air raids and long range gun bombardments of Paris.

THE NEGRO SOLDIER AT THE FRONT.

(SYRACUSE) JULY 1, 1918

Once more the attention of the public has been called to the signal service which the Negro troops of France have rendered to the cause of the Allies. Recently that service was made the subject of a complimentary resolution in the French Chamber of Deputies, and it is now announced that a Negro deputy from Senegal is traveling through French West Africa with a view to intensifying voluntary enlistment amongst the different tribes that people those vast territories. The announcement could not come at a more favorable time than the present, when the American newspapers are enthusically praising the Negro troops of the United States Army at the front for their bravery, self-abnegation, and exemplary bearing. Numerous battalions have been raised among the Negro race for service abroad, and the men who compose their ranks have manifested much the same enthusiasm and comprehension of the lofty task before them as their white comrades-in-arms.

The war, it is said, has revealed to the Negro a new world. As far as the French Negro forces, which number at least 120,000 men, are concerned, their conception of service has assumed a form of patriotism almost religious in its sincerity. The point to remember with regard to the employment of French troops is that they are in a literal sense defenders of their territories against conquest by a ruthless foe. One of the distinct objects of Germany in attacking France was the capture of the French African colonies. This circumstance was brought out in the conversations between the German Chancellor and the British Ambassador in Berlin, on July 29, 1914, when Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg declared that he was quite ready, in return for England's neutrality, to promise that Germany would not annex any territory in France, but would not make a like promise with regard to the French possessions outside of Europe. France thus had no difficulty in achieving a magnificent response to her appeal to the natives of Africa and of Far Eastern colonies to rally to the defense of their land. If one may include the Arabs of Northern Africa under the same heading, then it may be literally said that hundreds of thousands of fighting men from Africa fell into line in the French ranks and fought on the western front. That rally was a magnificent tribute to the benevolent and fraternal policy of France in Africa which has secured for her such stout defenders among the people whom she has taken under her protection, and was the best possible answer to the hypocritical protest, which was heard in Germany' note to neutrals, against the employment of native toops in the Entente armies. This protest came with poor grace from a nation which had secretly worked to create a Holy War in Asia and Africa, and "black peril" in Africa for fomenting a revolt against the white arc in the French and English colonies. Barred from using its own native troops in Europe, Germany of th conscientious scruples did not hesitate to use them against the colonial troops detailed to wrest the German colonies from their unscrupulous owners.

On the occasion of Germany' most recent protest on the subject of the employment of black troops the note, it is fair to assume, was intended to make a particular appeal to the "sense of humanity" of the American people whose population includes 11,000,000 and more Negroes. But once again Germany failed to gauge the sentiment of other nations, or the mettle of the Negro population of the United States. Speaking generally, if the prestige of the white race has suffered in this war, then it is not because, as was pointed out in the French Chamber of Deputies, of the employment of Negro troops in the melee, but because of Germany's crimes.—Christian Science Monitor.

GERMAN FLIERS LOCATE MISSING

Drop Note Reporting Safety of Americans.

NEW YORK NEGROES HONORED

Johnson and Robinson Get French War Cross for Bravery.

N Y C EVE SUN
JULY 8, 1918

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMIES IN FRANCE, July 8.—A note dropped by German airmen on the Toul front contains the information that Lieut. G. A. P. Hyler (G. A. Phyler?), Lieut. B. B. Battle of Columbus, Ohio, and Lieut. J. Williamson of California, missing American airmen, are uninjured and held as prisoners.

There was increased artillery fire on the Lorraine front last night, but in other American sectors to the southward it was comparatively quiet.

The German claim of a successful raid at Xivray was not so successful after all, as may be judged from these facts. A Boche patrol entered the town at night and encountered an outpost. The Americans signalled for an artillery barrage. The Germans were immediately pounded with shrapnel and had to pass through the barrage to reach their own lines. They probably lost heavily.

Henry Johnson and Robert Robinson, negroes, of New York city, were decorated with the French War Cross in the Argonne region. They formed an outpost which was attacked by a large German patrol and killed several Boches with grenades. Then the Germans closed in and there was a melee of bayonets, clubbed rifles, fists and well placed kicks.

Johnson was wounded and Robinson carried him back to a dugout. When Robinson returned, the Germans had carried off their wounded. Later, they returned to the attack and Robinson drove them off single handed. He was wounded in this fight. Both men are convalescing.

367TH UNDERGOES TRAINING FOR THE FRONT LINE TRENCHES

Pittsburgh Post 8-24-18

Regiment Expects To See Active Service in France Any Day.

COL. J.A. MOSS WRITES

Says Conduct of the Men Has Been Splendid and Health Excellent—"Buffaloes" In Fine Spirits—Counter Attack of Franco-American Troops the One Topic of General Conversation in France—Expect to Have Baptism of Fire Soon.

The "Buffaloes," officially known as the 367th Infantry, have been undergoing intensive training, preparatory to going into the front line trenches is the information just received from Col. James A. Moss by Fred R. Moore. The letter was written "Somewhere in France" on July 22, and says:

"Thinking that a line or two from over here might be of interest to you, I would say that on the afternoon of June 19, nine days after having sailed from America, we reached a certain French port, and after spending a couple of days in a so-called Rest Camp, about four miles away, we entrained for a certain training area, and after traveling nearly the whole way across France we reached our destination June 26, since which time the 'Buffaloes' have been undergoing, with the assistance of French officers, a course of the most intensive kind of training preparatory to taking our place in the front-line trenches, which we now expect to do any day.

"Our voyage across the Atlantic was uneventful, although, naturally enough, we were during a part of the time under more or less of a nervous strain because of the submarine danger.

"We have lost a couple of men by drowning and two or three by natural death, but, as a whole, the health of the regiment has been excellent and both officers and men are in fine spirits. The conduct of the men has been splendid. The Chief of the Military Police at the Rest Camp told me the Buffaloes were the best disciplined and best behaved regiment that has yet passed through the camp.

"Everyone over here, military and civilian, to whom I have spoken, is of the same opinion, viz: The United States did not come to the rescue a minute too soon, and if it had not been for us the Huns would have won the war by now. However, the feeling is now one of confidence and optimism, there being no doubt in the mind of anyone but what we will ultimately win the war, although we all realize that we have on our minds a real man-size job.

"The splendid work that the Franco-American troops are doing in the present counter-attack is today the one topic of general conversation in France, and it has done wonders in raising the morale of the French and the rest of the Allies.

"As stated before, my regiment expects to be ordered to the front any day, and there is but little doubt, in my opinion, that by the time this letter reaches you the Buffaloes will have had their baptism of fire.

"Sincerely yours,
JAS. A. MOSS.

THAT SULPHUR SCENT

That the "bear cats," as the colored soldiers are called, because of the mauling they gave the "Heinies," have no difficulty in distinguishing the "doughboys" from Allied soldiers, when they are doing guard duty, was demonstrated quite recently, according to a story from "over there." This particular "bear cat" was doing night watch back of the first line trenches. In the distance he saw something coming toward him that at first, appeared to be an apparition, but which later turned out to be an ambulance rushing to a base hospital with wounded soldiers. "Hold, who goes there," cried out the guard, with gun aimed at the object. "English ambulance, sir," was the answer that came out of the darkness. "All right, English ambulance, pass right along," responded the guard. In a few minutes another specter made its appearance. This time it was a French ambulance and when the "bear cat" learned that the driver was all right, he said: "All right, French ambulance, you may proceed." Before the sentry had taken his post again he heard a chug, chug and saw a cloud of dust. Jumping into the middle of the road, he cried out, "Halt, who goes there?" And the reply this time was: "Get the —— out of the way, you blankety blank blank blank," called out a shrill voice, "or I'll run you down." That was enough for the bear cat. "All right, American ambulance, pass right along," he called out in a gentle voice.

Eight Soldiers Repel a Vicious Attack of German Night Raiding Party Near Verdun

The Chicago Defender 9-14-18

COMMENDED FOR BRAVERY BY COLONEL

By Junius B. Wood

(Special Cable to the Chicago Daily News, Republished by Permission)

With the American Army at the Front, Sept. 13.—If Emperor William in recent weeks had been on his historic observation post at Montfaucon, where he saw the fighting before Verdun in 1916, he would have seen American Negro soldiers holding a portion of the trenches in the Foret de Hesse. The unit has been a part of six different French divisions since landing in France and has always been progressing toward the hotter spots in the line until now it is believed to be ready for the supreme test of a real fight equal to those in which the lighter skinned Americans have written pages of valor. They have already shown that they are able to withstand big shells bursting on all sides—an ordeal which in the first year of the war shook the nerves of the earliest Negro units put in the front lines.

Edward Dobbins

"I have as much confidence in the Negro soldiers as in any other body of troops with the same amount of fighting experience," says the colonel, a seasoned regular army officer, who is the only white man in the command. "All we want is a chance to get at the boches," declare the men, pronouncing the word "bushes."

Negro Winner of Service Cross

The story of how Corporal Isaac Valely of Gerald, Kan., won the distinguished service cross is an inspiration to every man in the unit. Valley is one of the few soldiers who thus far has won that honor. He served three years in the Twenty-fourth infantry before he was transferred to this regiment. A private in attempting to throw a grenade dropped it in the trench in the midst of his comrades. Valley had no time to pick it up and throw it out. He, therefore, put his foot on it and shoved it into the mud. The grenade exploded and tore off part of his foot. His only comment as he was carried back was, "I saved the others, even if it did get me."

When Gen. Pershing heard of the incident he awarded the ribbon which is the ambition of every fighting man to possess. "That man will be back in a few days," said the colonel to me today.

One night a big German raiding party came over and penetrated behind the first lines of this unit before the Americans opened up and, without the loss of a single man, drove them back.

Chicagoans Repel the Foe

Good fighters from Chicago—Sergt. Robert Taylor of 3520 Forest avenue, Corporal Fred Carrington of 3145 Wabash avenue, Privates Fletcher Phillips of 4048 Indiana avenue, Edward Dobbins of 3755 Wabash avenue, Leroy Owens of 2825 Federal street, Corporal Robert Breckenridge of Sixty-third street and Cottage Grove avenue and Private Horace Jordan—were at an advanced listening post when the raiders passed overhead, leaving a guard which the men drove away and then joined in the attack that repelled the raiding party. The raid was in revenge for a successful attack made by the Americans on the previous night.

Sergt. Norman Nelson of 3538 Dearborn street, Chicago, on another night was one of a patrol party of forty scouting within the German lines. A flare disclosed the presence of the patrol, and Nelson dropped behind a bush. The Germans opened up with their machine guns, and the bullets, coming thick and fast, cut the bush like a scythe, and dented Nelson's steel helmet.

These are small affairs compared with the fighting which is coming. The men are equipped with American helmets in place of the French equipment which was formerly furnished. They hope soon to have complete American outfits with the exception of rifles and gas masks.

Corporal Robert S. Ellington of 3149 Dearborn street, Chicago, has returned to his unit after receiving a stray bullet in his leg while directing rifle practice on a field within range of enemy snipers.

Edward Dobbins, a member of Company C of the old —th regiment, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Dobbins, 3755 Wabash avenue. He has often written home to his parents describing the military activies on the western front.

U. S. NEGRO OFFICERS LUNCH AT ARMY CLUB

No Stir Caused by Appearance of Pair at Table in American City in France.

By CLAIR KENAMORE,

A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch, With the American Army in France.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, Aug. 30.—In what might be described as the second American city in France there is the Lafayette Club. This is an officers' mess, with all club conveniences. There is a capacious lounge, a big reading room, two real American bath tubs, barber shop and all the things to make the club comfortable and desirable. The dining room is a big thing and the meals are good and reasonable in price.

French, American and British officers are always to be found there. The waitresses are wives, widows or daughters of French soldiers, the barber is a pioneer whom wounds have incapacitated for work in the field, the manager is a soldier with one leg permanently stiffened, and the flower beds and lawns are tended by German prisoners.

At 12:30 today, in the midst of lunch, there was a moment of great tension in the dining room, when, for the first time in its history, two negro officers entered the dining room and seated themselves at a table.

Situation Often Discussed.

White officers from virtually every state in the Union were at the tables. There had been discussion of the situation which would arise, and everyone looked to someone else to see whether anything was about to happen. No officer was in doubt what he would do himself, but each one seemed in doubt as to what his neighbor would do.

Observers of the little drama saw the polite waitresses ask the new guests for their orders, and saw them served promptly, saw that they drank water, and heard the conversation at the other tables go ahead as if no strangers were within the gates.

No white officers went to the tables where the two negroes sat and made them welcome, but that would not have happened to new white officers, either. Nobody got up and left the room, and nobody acted as if a new situation had arisen.

The democracy of khaki covered them all, and nobody felt uncomfortable. Sons of old Southern families ate contentedly a few feet from the negro officers, one of whom was conspicuously black. There were men in the room who a year ago would have felt themselves forever disgraced by eating with a negro, but who now with perfect ease shared the meal with these two black Lieutenants.

No Color Line

A common cause and a common foe have for the time, at least, lowered the barriers so far as the Lafayette Club is concerned, and negro officers can get the same food at the same price in the same dining room at the same time as whites.

These are the first black officers seen in the club. The British have native officers in the Indian army but their rankings, while paralle are of different designations, and the youngest white subaltern ranks the oldest black officer. None of them and none of the French Moroccans have appeared at the club.

The French Are Amazed at Race Troops' Fearlessness

The Cleveland Press
JUN 19 1918

WITH THE AMERICAN TROOPS IN FRANCE.—American Negro soldiers in France are a source of never-ending interest and amusement to the French, who do not tire of watching and listening as they wield picks and shovels and chant, as they work, in a weird minor key.

They have shown a fearlessness amounting almost to utter indifference—if their white officers are with them—a carelessness where personal danger is involved that it is at once amazing and sometimes annoying to the officers, and a desire to fight that amounts to a mania.

The American Negro soldier, in the words of a colonel who commands a regiment of them and has for years known a good deal about their characteristics, is very close to a fatalist when it comes to fear. Repeatedly his own troops bandy remarks themselves, the gist of which is about as follows:

"Don't worry about that shell. It ain't got your number on it."

And the shell screams by the Negroes who believe it had not their number stand idly around and expose themselves as they should not. The colonel frankly admits being afraid when big shells are flying about, and seeks cover.

The first regiment which went into action, long ago now, went in primarily because it threatened to decimate itself into inactivity. Razors and knives came more and more freely into play, and the men demanded so frequently and so insistently of their officers why they might not get some action that it was finally arranged for them. They proved quite as strenuous fighters in the line as they had behind it.

The marines had just covered themselves with glory in the Chateau Thierry fight when a delegation from a Negro regiment in line in a quiet sector waited on the commanding officer and asked if they, too, might not get in on the "fun."

"Let us go in, colonel," they said. "We are the only real fighters. The marines are all right, of course, but just let us have a chance at the Boche. Then the marines won't be in it. And as for the rest, Lord, they don't count at all."

The Band Plays and Lightens Hearts in Sorrow-Stricken France

Afro American

With the American Army in France, June 30.—One of the best things in the first Afro-American contribution to the French firing line is its band. Subsidized by D. G. Reid with a check for $10,000, and organized by James R. Europe, "America's leading colored orchestra leader," now a Lieutenant in the regiment, the colored band is fast becoming celebrated throughout France. At the A. E. F.'s chief recreation centre a big silver cup and several golden palms were presented to the musicians by the municipality.

Sergt. Noble Sissle, the regimental drum major, has made a study of the effect of Yankee ragtime, as interpreted by his bandsmen, on French audiences. He has addressed the following summary of his impressions to the correspondent of The Inquirer with the American forces.

"After reading so many articles about the American bands and real heed of them in France, I thought I would write you concerning some of our experiences in the—New York Infantry Band 'over here.'

"When our country was dance-mad a few years ago, we quite agreed with the popular Broadway song composer who wrote:

Syncopation rules the nation
You can't get away from it.

"But if you could see the effect our good old 'jazz' melodies have on the peoples of every race and creed you would change the word 'nation' quoted above to 'world.'

"Inasmuch as the press seems to have kept the public well informed of our band's effort to make the boys happy in this land where everybody speaks everything but English, I will assume that you know Lieutenant James Reese Europe, its organizer and conductor. This Lieutenant Europe is the same Europe whose orchestras are considered to have done a goodly share toward making syncopated music popular on Broadway. Having been associated with Lieutenant Europe in civil life during his 'jazz bombardment' on the delicate, classical, musical ears of New York's critics, and having watched 'The Walls of Jerico' come tumbling down, I was naturally curious to see what would be the effect of a 'real American tune,' as Victor Herbert calls our Southern syncopated tunes, as played by a real American band.

"At last the opportunity came, and it was at a town in France where there were no American troops, and our audience, with the exception of an American general and his staff, was all French people. I am sure the greater part of the crowd had never heard a ragtime number. So what happened can be taken as a test of the success of our music in this country, where all is sadness and sorrow.

"THE MEMPHIS BLUES"

"The program started with a French march, followed by favorite overtures and vocal selections by our male quartette, all of which were heartily applauded. The second part of the program opened with 'The Stars and Stripes Forever,' the great Sousa march, and before the last note of the martial ending had been finished the house was ringing with applause. Next followed an arrangement of 'Plantation Melodies' and then came the fireworks, 'The Memphis Blues.'

"Lieutenant Europe, before raising his baton, twitched his shoulders, apparently to be sure that his tight-fitting military coat would stand the strain, each musician shifted his feet, the players of brass horns blew the saliva from their instruments, the drummers tightened their drumheads, every one settled back in their seats, half closed their eyes, and when the baton came down with a swoop that brought forth a soul-rousing crash both director and musicians seemed to forget their surroundings; they were lost in scenes and memories. Corne and clarinet players began to manipulate notes in that typical rhythm (tha rhythm which no artist has ever bee able to put down on paper); as th drummers struck their stride thei shoulders began shaking in time t their syncopated raps.

AUDIENCE SWAYED IN UNISON

"Then, it seemed, the whole audience began to sway, dignified French officers began to pat their feet alon with the American general, wh, temporarily, had lost his style and grace. Lieutenant Europe was no longer the Lieutenant Europe of a moment ago, but once more Jim Europe, who a few months ago rocked New York with his syncopated baton. His body swayed in willowy motions and his head was bobbing as it did in days when terpsichorean festivities reigned supreme. He turned to the trombone players, who sat impatiently waiting for their cue to have a "Jazz spasm," and they drew their slides out to the extremity and jerked them back with that characteristic crack (a la soixtante quinze).

"The audience could stand it no longer; the 'Jazz germ' hit them, and it seemed to find the vital spot, loosening all muscles and causing what is known in America as an 'Eagle Rocking Fit.' 'There now,' I said to myself. 'Col.—has brought his band over here and started ragtimitis in France aint this an awful thing to visit upon a nation with so many burdens?' Bu when the band had finished and the people were roaring with laughter their faces wreathed in smiles, I wa forced to say that this is just wha France needs at this critical moment

"All through France the same thin happened. Troop trains carryin Allied soldiers from everywhere passed us en route, and every head came out of the window when we struck up a good old Dixie-tune. Even German prisoners forgot they were prisoners, dropped their work to listen and pat their feet to the stirring American tunes.

"But the thing that capped the climax happened up in Northern France. We were playing our Colonel's favorite ragtime, 'The Army Blues,' in a little village where we were the first American troops there, and among the crowd listening to that band was an an old lady about sixty years of age. To every one's surprise, all of a sudden she started doing a dance that resembled 'Walking the Dog.' Then I was cured, and satisfied that American music would some day be the world's music. While at Aix les Bains, other musicians from American bands said their experiences had been the same.

"Who would think that little U. S. A. would ever give to the world a rhythm and melodies that, in the midst of such universal sorrow, would cause all students of music to yearn to learn how to play it. Such is the case, because every musician we meet—and they all seem to be masters of their instruments—are always asking the boys to teach them how to play ragtime. I sometimes think if the Kaiser ever heard a good syncopated melody he would not take himself so seriously.

"If France was well supplied with American bands, playing their lively tunes, I'm sure it would help a good deal in bringing home entertainment to our boys, and at the same time make the heart of sorrow-stricken France beat a deal lighter."

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, May 18.—The first hand-to-hand encounter between the Germans and American negro infantry has taken place. Two darkies holding an advanced post in the sector north of Saint Menehould drove back twenty-four Germans, killing or wounding fully half of the enemy, though they themselves were each wounded in three places.

The heroes of this affray are privates Henry Johnson of Albany and Needham Roberts of New York City. Both have been decorated with the French War Cross. They belong to a unit mainly composed of New Yorkers which has been holding a sector of the French front, supported by French artillery, for more than a month.

The Germans having failed to penetrate their camouflage prior to the repulse of the raiders by Johnson and Roberts, it has hitherto been forbidden to mention their presence in the line. I am the only correspondent who has visited the trenches they are occupying after an unprecedentedly brief training period. Their commander—an ex-Public Service Commissioner—is delighted with his men, whose morale is splendid. Their relations with the French soldiers and civilians are all that could be desired.

Up to three o'clock on the morning of May 15 when Johnson and Roberts using rifle, bolo knife and hand grenades routed assailants twelve times their number and averted a strong attack on one of our centres of resistance, the unit had not had a single casualty from the enemy fire While their sector was quiet, shelling was frequent and the French on either side have had the usual percentage of loss.

Participating in a raid with the Poilus in the early days of their trench training, the dusky New Yorkers captured three prisoners, as a result of which Lieut. Marshall L. Johnson, one of their white officers won the Croix de Guerre.

Negro Troops in Counter Attack Turn Foe's Thrust

N Y C TRIBUNE

(By The Associated Press)

WITH THE FRENCH ARMY IN FRANCE, June 11 (noon).—The strongest effort made by the Germans in the course of last night and this morning in their new offensive was in the direction of the railroad connec Estrees-St. Denis and Montdidier. The Germans met with such resistance that they renounced for the moment their attempts in this region.

Negro troops, supported by Entente Allied tanks, which did great execution, delivered a brilliant counter attack in this vicinity and recaptured the forest running southwest of Marqueglise, between Perte Farm and Loges Farm.

Late last night the Allied infantry reëntered the village of Mery, which had formed a protective point for the German advance through the valley.

Seeing their progress hindered on this side, the Germans turned toward the other flank and nearly reached Ribecourt, to the north of which place the hottest encounters occurred in the woods of Dreslincourt.

The enemy's possession of the height of Ecouvillon, below Thiescourt, enabled him to filter troops through the small valleys, making the position of the Allies occupying the small hillocks perilous and causing them to retire.

Colored Troops Storm German Position and Capture Two Towns

Cleveland Advocate,

SPECIAL EXTRA!

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY AT SOISSONS, Aug. 5, 1918.—Two more Colored regiments joined the 93rd division (all Colored) today and began a turning move that put hundreds of Germans on the run over a wide sector east of the Soissons-Rheims salient. They attacked the Hun firing line which was more than thre or four mile longs on each side of the village of Nesles.

On Wednesday night these Colored troops became eager to enter and capture the towns of Nesles and Cierges but were given strict orders because of heavy shell firing to retire all along the line, as they were almost half a mile ahead of their white comrades and the French. But so eager were the black Americans to advance upon the enemy that they ran on into the thickest of the fray, yelling like mad men, paying little or no attention t the commands given by their superi officers. No quarter was asked given, just the clash of cold st against cold steel was all that could b heard. As one officer stated that when fighting the Colored soldier pays very little attention to orders given but goes right on fighting to the finish of the enemy or himself.

Today it seemed that as long as the Colored division was kept on the right flank of the salient the Germans would continue to fall back until the Hun line of attack would be thrown less than five miles from the Marne. Only yesterday the Germans tried their cunning at fooling a brigade of Colored soldiers into a trap by displaying a white flag of truce from their trench line, but the Colored troopers did not wait to discover that the Hun did not lay down their arms but fought on in a desperate effort to drive the enemy from their dugouts and trenches. Late in the evening they completely routed them and made them captives.

On one section of the same fron the lines were so close together tha during a lull in the fighting the Germans hollered across to the Colored boys about the times on State street, Chicago, when they left. Their answer was that the boys back on State street were preparing to give them Cain as soon as they got over.

Regiment in American Army Gets Baptism of Fire on Fields of France.

MUCH SKILL IS SHOWN

Officers and Men Are Credited With Fine Fighting Qualities in Report.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMIES IN FRANCE.—(Correspondence of the Associated Press.)—One regiment of negroes in the American army has had its baptism of fire on the fighting fields of France and acquitted itself so well that the French commander of the sector has cited the whole regiment as worthy of receiving the war cross. This regiment's repulse of the enemy attack on the early morning of June 12 (possibly at Belleau wood or Bouresches) was briefly referred to in the official communique.

A later and official report of the engagement brings out interesting details and gives credit to the officers and men for fine fighting qualities displayed in their initial experience under shell and machine gun fire. The French commander of that sector has given the regiment the highest possible commendation for the results accomplished and the splendid fighting spirit shown by the American negroes.

For several days preceding the attack there were evidences that the enemy was preparing to strike a blow. Two days before one of the main points held by the regiment had been subjected to a strong bombardment of nearly 100 shells, gas and shrapnel. Prior to the heavy enemy artillery barrage occurring on the morning of the 12th, our advance groups heard movements apparently of narrow-gauge track trains in the wood back of the enemy lines, indicating they were getting ready for an attack.

Every preparation had been made for meeting the move if it came. Besides the usual combat groups at the main points of the line, a special machine gun section occupied a specially chosen position on a small salient projecting into the enemy line. It was accompanied by a combat group detailed from reserve company and carrying rifles and hand grenades.

"Stand To" Order Given.

It was 2:15 on the morning of the 12th that the order to "stand to" was given and all combat groups and the machine gun section took their fighting position. The enemy artillery now opened a violent bombardment, engaging in a "box barrage" fire of our main groups and the special machine gun position. The lines of this box barrage are well defined on the ground, showing its outer circuit, with considerable scattering of hits inside. The shells were mostly 77s, with some 155s, gas, shrapnel and high explosives. One of our points received particular attention, probably by minenwerfer, the craters of which were two yards in depth and five yards in diameter. The artillery bombardment was extremely violent at the start and tapered off gradually until it stopped after 30 minutes.

Meanwhile, under cover of the artillery, the enemy infantry began its operations, adopting the infiltering process by which detached groups are thrust forward at a number of points instead of moving in mass formation. One group came on with two light machine guns, firing a rather intense fire into one of our positions. Another group was estimated to be about 25 or 30. At another point on our front a stationary enemy patrol took position, firing with two small machine guns. Now and then squads would dart forward from their gun positions. Eight Germans got up to the wire in front of one of our positions and four others approached at another point. Besides these assault groups which reached our line, there were undoubtedly additional enemy forces in assaulting columns and supporting columns which were unable to enter the field.

The special machine gun group under command of Lieutenant L. E. Shaw was in one of the most exposed centers of the fighting, being under terrific artillery fire and the fire of two German machine guns. Lieutenant Shaw handled this very difficult situation with cool bravery. The enemy barrage was so close that it was impossible to stand up and Lieutenant Shaw controlled his guns by rolling from one to the other. His two guns fired 5000 rounds.

Men Stick to Posts.

Under this violent onslaught the men stuck to their posts, carried out every order without hesitation, often under galling fire, and showed a high degree of skill with their weapons and coolness and courage. Machine guns jammed three times, were partly disassembled and cleaned under fire, continuing in action throughout the engagement.

One team fired fourteen clips when the gun jammed. Reporting this to Lieutenant Shaw they were ordered to clear the jam. While under intense fire of artillery and machine guns they coolly dismounted the gun, remounted it and continued firing until ordered to cease. The fire of this machine-gun section was doubtless wholly unexpected by the enemy, and this fact coupled with the effective fire laid down was chiefly instrumental in causing the withdrawal of the enemy.

Instances of Bravery.

They were instances of individual bravery during the action. Private Howard Gaillard with a small rapid-fire piece was unable from his position to get a good fire to bear upon the advancing enemy groups, so he coolly and with entire disregard of danger mounted the parapet, and while enemy bullets were flying around him, fired his rapid-fire piece from the hip, first at one group and then at the other. Privates Smithfield Jones and George Woods are especially mentioned for their coolness in the face of violent shelling when they dismounted the machine guns and then reassembled them and continued firing until the close of the action. Lieutenant R. C. Grame was in command of the group which received the brunt of the enemy fire which, besides the barrage, added a heavy fire of large minnenwerfers. There was no flinching; the group always worked under perfect control, keeping all combat posts manned though three men were knocked down by the explosion of shells. Others commended for courage in the face of fire are Corporal Frank Harden, Private H. D. Brown, Corporal Bean, Sergeant G. A. Morton, and Private Sanders.

From the elaborate artillery preparation, the size of the box barrage, the extensive front occupied, the coup de main attempted by the enemy was clearly intended to be on a rather extensive scale.

Attack Is Frustrated.

Whatever may have been the object of the attack it was successfully frustrated. No enemy party succeeded in getting within assaulting distance or any part of the line except at one point and here they were quickly pressed back and then driven off. The shell-torn condition of the ground tells of the fierceness of the action. That the enemy suffered considerably in casualties is not doubted, as some of their groups pushed close into the machine-gun fire, but as their men fell they were carried off. The casualties on our side were small and none of them serious.

The chief importance of the action was in bringing this American unit for the first time under fire and demonstrating the steadiness and fighting ability of the men.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, May 14.—I have found the lost tribes of the American expeditionary force—the negro volunteers from New York. Since January they have been in France, and many considerations make this contingent as interesting as any the United States has contributed to the common cause. They are, over here, their typical negro selves.

There was a premature explosion of a hand grenade in their ranks one day.

"Before Gawd, Captain," a dusky grenadier replied contritely when taxed with dropping his missile, "that thing jes' began to swell right up in mah hand, and I had to let her go."

The standard of intelligence in the unit is extremely high, and no illiteracy is noticeable. Many of the men have become fluent French talkers and I have heard animated conversations between our darkies and the Senegalese who chanced to be passing.

Jim Europe Has His Band.

The American negro lads get along famously with both white and black Frenchmen. In their dealings with the feminine population they are punctiliously polite and not a single complaint has been lodged against them in this respect. Naturally they are delighted at the complete lack of racial prejudice they have found in France and some of them have declared to me their intention of remaining here after the war. Their pride in their unit speaks well for a continuance of the high morale they have manifested so far.

But they seem to be prouder still of their band of forty (count 'em—forty) pieces. Some one donated $10,000 for this band. He would never regret it if he could see how much pleasure it has brought into the drab lives of the aged men, women and children in the villages in which the negro troops have sojourned.

James Europe, once considered America's greatest negro bandmaster and now a First Lieutenant with the New York outfit, drafted seventeen members of the Municipal Orchestra of Porto Rico in order that his regimental band should, have worthy players of reed instruments. The average negro's lips, Europe explained, are too thick to enable him to play well an instrument like the flute.

This Is True Democracy.

Democracy is carried to the nth degree in this New York colored outfit. There are two negro Captains under whom white Lieutenants are serving without the least friction. Lieut. Europe's fellow officers include a newspaper man once on The World and a member of a millionaire family who not long ago was military secretary to Gov. Whitman (Lieut. Col. Lorillard Spencer.)

Not the least curious phase of the unit's war diary is the trials and tribulations it underwent on its way here. It embarked for France the first time in October last. Part of its equipment failed to arrive and the sailing was postponed till November. Two hundred miles at sea a bent piston rod forced the transport to put back to its home port. The troops started again in December and were again forced to return, this time by fire in the coal bunkers. Ten days later they got under way for the third time and in a blizzard in New York Harbor had the bow of their ship stove in by a collision with a tanker. The Captain was going to return to the pier, when a company of army mechanicians on board insisted on patching up the hull themselves with concrete. They did so and in January the unit finally landed in France.

Plantation Hymns for French.

They were immediately sent to another maritime base, where they did every imaginable chore from chopping wood to building railroads. Not until March were they ordered north to begin their training under French instructors close to the front.

While this was the first American negro contingent to reach France, there are others now undergoing intensive training at widely separated points. I visited three other units. While I was in one of their villages a battalion assembled for a singing competition the like of which the French peasants never had heard. Under the leadership of two noncommissioned officers, both of whom are graduates of negro colleges and one of whom it a distinguished preacher in a Southern State, they sang old plantation hymns in their soft, melodious tones.

Some of the hymns were "It's Me, O Lord, Standing in Need of Prayer," "You'd Better Run," "Little David, Play on Your Harp," "Hallelujah" and "Do You Think I'll Make a Soldier of the Cross?"

Among the throngs of French folks who stood listening silently to the singing and who evidently enjoyed what was really a musical treat was a French officer. I translated the words of the last-named song to him.

"I don't know whether they are soldiers of the Cross," he observed "but I am pretty sure they are going to be very fine soldiers of the United States."

Old Fifteenth Infantry Serves With French and Excels in Grenade Work.

OFFICER IS PROUD OF MEN

Captain Hamilton Fish, Jr., Writes That Regimental Flag Is Being Sent to Governor.

The old Fifteenth (negro) infantry, N. G., now the 369th United States infantry, was the second New York state regiment to reach France on active service, following closely the old Sixty-ninth infantry, now a unit of the Rainbow division, according to a letter written by Captain Hamilton Fish, Jr., an officer of the regiment, to his father, Hamilton Fish of New York. Captain Fish was formerly a member of assembly, being the only Progressive member of assembly following the rupture in the ranks of the Republican party.

According to Captain Fish's letter the old Fifteenth has probably seen active duty with the French army to which it is attached.

The flag of the old Fifteenth is to be sent back to Governor Whitman for safe keeping and to be kept with the other regimental flags in the State Capitol. In his letter Captain Fish said:

Prepare to Take Place in Trenches.

"I hope you will forgive me for not writing oftener, but I am busy every moment getting my company ready for a tour of duty in the trenches. We expect to be ordered up in ten days, and naturally there is a lot of polishing up to be done, so that we can give a good account of ourselves on our introduction to the Boche. After all our wanderings and experiences it is difficult to realize that we will be facing German bullets, and I hope, taking German helmets before you get this letter. I understand that helmets are the only things we are allowed to keep, and also to send home.

"Our regiment is the most envied American regiment in France, and has the greatest opportunity to make a wonderful record. We are with the French army and have the incomparable advantage of the instructions and experience of the French. We are, to all intents and purposes, a part of the French army, and supplied by them with all of our rifles, bayonets, helmets, gas masks, knapsacks, food, and ammunition. The men looked splendid in the American khaki uniforms and French leather equipment and brown helmets. I wonder what the Germans will think when they take one of our boys prisoner and find that he cannot speak French and comes from Harlem.

Backs Negroes as Fighters.

"I am a great believer in the fighting quality of the educated American negro, provided he is well led. If the regiment does not make a splendid record it will not be the fault of the men. I believe, if the censorship regulations were abolished, the Fifteenth New York (now the 369th U. S. infantry), would be as well known as the Rough Riders were in the Spanish-American war, before peace is declared. We were the second New York regiment over here, following closely on the old Sixty-ninth, and I believe the first colored regiment to land in France. Today we are the American Foreign Legion of France. We are sending back our old Fifteenth New York infantry flag to Governor Whitman, to be placed with the other old regimental flags in the state Capitol at Albany. It is quite appropriate that the flag should be returned to Governor Whitman, as the regiment was ordered during his administration, and owes its success to his personal interest and efforts in its behalf.

"We are billeted in a small village not very far from the front and are not bothered by German shells, but we can plainly hear the incessant rumble of the artillery. On clear nights the front looks like a Fourth of July celebration with rockets, flares and flashes of big guns. Most of the firing is now done at night time, because the artillery on both sides shell the lines of communication to prevent the bringing up of supplies and movement of troops. There are plenty of German airplanes hovering about, especially at night, and there have been several air fights in the vicinity of our village.

Comrades Get Send Off.

"One of our battalions has already gone to the trenches. It was an interesting sight to see our troops march out of the little French village while our band played the 'Sombre' and 'Meuse,' the 'Marseillaise' and our national anthem. There were no flowers and no good-byes, as our boys marched out to give battle, but just the same those of us who saw them go were greatly impressed by their martial appearance.

"I have given up all attempts to figure on the duration of the war, as it is a waste of time. We know less about the German offensive than you do in America, as we do not get the German bulletins and the allied communiques are closely censored. From the latest reports the Germans have been checked in their attempt to take Amiens.

"Please do not worry about my being hit, as it will not do either of us any good. There is no such thing as dodging a shell or a bullet, as the one that hits is never seen. It is a good deal a matter of luck, or, as the French say—'bonne chance.' I am willing to take my chance with the rest of them.

Excel in Grenade Throwing.

"We went through the throwing of hand grenades without an accident, although one man dropped his and had the pluck to pick it up again and throw it out of the trench. Our boys already excel the French at grenade throwing on account of their baseball training. The hand grenade is one of the most important features of the present war, and has taken the place of the rifle to a large extent in trench warfare. Several of our men can throw dummy grenades seventy-five meters, which is ten meters further than any of the French soldiers near here. Grenade throwing for distance, accuracy, and speed is the war sport of France, and has taken the place of football and other games.

"H. R. is working in a French canteen, less than twenty miles from here, and sent me a letter by one of our soldiers who happened to pass by. I will try to go to see her soon. Evidently the town she is living in has been severely bombed by German aviators. These air raids are always carried out on clear nights, and we can distinctly hear the machines pass over our darkened little village on their mission of destruction. About a week ago, a French officer told me that a single bomb had fallen there and killed forty-two non-combatants who had taken supposed shelter in the cellar of a house.

"We declared war just one year ago, and all reports indicate that America is aroused and enthusiastic for the prosecution of the war to victory. I am glad to hear that the nation has shaken off its shackles and destroyed the maggots of pacifism which fed on its carcass and lulled us into fancied security. I am confident that the farmers—the back-home folks, the plain people—whose sons are in khaki will bend every energy and make every sacrifice to bring this terrible war to a quick and successful conclusion.

TRENCHES NOT SO BAD

Negro Soldier Boy Writes of Exciting Times on Firing Line — Crosses on Cathedrals Unharmed by German Fire

"The trenches are not half so bad as people think. Why, I even spent my birthday in them and had plenty of fireworks at that," writes Private Edward Harris of Co M, 372d regiment, a Springfield Negro youth, in a letter to his mother, Mrs Sarah Harris of 9 Adams street. He also writes: "Ducking the boche's big 75's or 105's is a favorite pastime. We stayed down to keep from getting down." The letter is as follows:—

I am just out of the trenches after a period of 36 days. I feel none the worse for my experience, it really is exciting all right—something every minute. The first night that we started for the trenches, when we were within a mile of the firing line the boches opened up their artillery and shelled the road. Never before have I seen such excitement. It was our first experience under fire. You really would have had to laugh had you seen our platoon getting down. I never hugged the ground so tight in my life, even our horses tried to get down on their knees.

Trenches Not So Bad

Our company is a machine gun company and most of our patrols go out at night. The trenches are not half as bad as the people back in the States think they are. I really would rather be there than where we are now, because, you are perfectly safe, or, at least, as safe as we can be under the circumstances. We have lived in dugouts ever since June 5. Why I even spent my birthday in the trenches, with plenty of fireworks, too. The ducking of the boche's big 75's or 105's is a pastime now. They come over so often that we stay down to keep from getting down.

If you could see me with my trench togs on, I'm sure you would never know me dressed as I am in my gas mask, steel helmet, trench shoes and other equipment. Most fellows like myself are enthusiastic about going out on patrol at night. You have passwords and signals so you can get through the trenches. The trenches are laid out just like a large city and are given names. Directions are given on the arrival of a company in a sector and you must acquaint yourself with your immediate vicinity so as to know just where to go in case of an attack from the boche.

Patroling "No Man's Land"

"It is very essential that all must know where the saps and parapets are located. I have not as yet been fortunate enough to be detailed on patrol, but judging from what the fellows have told me, it is exciting, especially when they get out in the middle of 'No Man's land,' and the boche throws up rockets to light up. You have to lie down, for if you were discovered it is very likely that they would turn a battery of machine guns on you.

"I was told by a sergeant in Co K that they were out a few nights ago and were up to the German lines cutting wire, when the boche threw up rockets and they had to get in a shell crater and stay hidden for two hours, not daring to move for fear of being located by snipers or lookouts. So you see evening patrols are not without plenty of adventure. I could write page after page of our experiences during our stay in the trenches.

Crosses on Cathedrals Withstand Boche Fire

"I have passed through town after town that were beautiful places once upon a time, but the shell fire of the boche has reduced them to nothing. One striking feature is that though the beautiful cathedrals have been shelled by them in most instances the cross is left standing untouched. I really feel that God's work is truly shown here. I am feeling fine, never felt better and have developed an enormous appetite from somewhere, so you see that trench warfare agrees with me. I must close now. I would be glad to hear from anyone in Springfield."

Six U. S. Divisions Fight.

The American chief of staff told with evident satisfaction of the fact that six American divisions are battling with the French and for the first time revealed their identity. They either are on the advancing lines between Soissons and Chateau Thierry or on those that are pressing the enemy along the Marne front, where there is reason to believe the Germans may suffer serious losses in men and material before they reach safety. Still another division of Americans is with General Gouraud, the French leader who commands east of Rheims, where the enemy assault hit against a stone wall defense.

General March's explanation of the disposition of the American forces indicated that at least 196,000 American fighting troops are in the battle, and probably the total force is nearer 300,000 than 200,000. Each division has a fighting strength of 27,000 men and each of the two detached negro regiments a strength of 3600. The full strength of each division with auxiliary units is 45,000 men.

UNION LEAGUE CLUB PRESENTS COLORS

Governor Whitman Makes Presentation and Is Assured Flag Will Never Be Surrendered.

MARCH 24 1918

Colonel Moss' "Buffaloes," the sturdy negro soldiers of the 367th infantry, National Army, who have been drilled into splendid form at Camp Upton, captured Fifth avenue yesterday afternoon. The aristocratic thoroughfare, which has echoed to the cheers evoked so often of late by their white comrades in arms, was not less lavish in its plaudits than were Seventh avenue, Lenox avenue and 110th street when the swarthy infantrymen swung past in perfect alignment.

The regiment turned out to the number of almost three thousand men. In deference to the mild, springlike weather, they marched without their overcoats, but wore the reversed winter caps which have come to be regarded as the distinctive headgear insignia in this latitude of the Camp Upton troops. They were without their packs, but were equipped with canteens and ammunition belts.

A point of difference between this and other recent processions was the fact that the negro regiment marched with fixed bayonets gleaming from the muzzles of their rifles, giving them a distinctively warlike aspect.

Reviewed by Governor Whitman.

With Colonel James A. Moss and his staff striding ahead of the regiment's own band of forty pieces, the column left the armory of the old Sixty-ninth regiment, Lexington avenue and Twenty-sixth street, at two o'clock. Fifteen minutes later, with the musicians playing a medley in which the strains of "Dixie," "Suwanee River," and "Maryland" were prominent, the head of line, with "eyes right," saluted Governor Whitman, the reviewing officer, who stood surrounded by a group of military and civic dignitaries in the stand erected across the front of the Union League Club building, at Thirty-ninth street.

There the head of the regiment was halted. Company A formed a color guard of honor, drawn up on three sides of a square. In its centre stood Colonel Moss and staff, flanked by buglers, while behind the Colonel and conspicuously mounted on a big box, so as to make him visible to the entire company, was Camp Upton's Y.M.C.A. song master.

As the officers stood at attention the clarion voice of George T. Wilson was heard from the stand calling for three cheers for the regiment. While these were being given Governor Whitman, attended by his staff and Brigadier General Sherrill, State Adjutant General, left the reviewing stand and advanced into the avenue. A uniformed club attendant marched beside him carrying a beautiful new stand of colors the Union League was to present to the regiment.

Governor Whitman said:—"Colonel Moss, officers and men of the 367th infantry, National Army, gentlemen of the Union League Club and my other fellow Americans, four times before have the Stars and Stripes been committed to the keeping of a colored regiment by the great club before whose house you are now standing. Four times before have those colors come back to this historic spot, sometimes tattered and torn; stained, it may be, with heroic blood, but always honored and glorified.

"In behalf of the Union League Club of New York I commit into your keeping the most sacred trust that can be committed to man—the flag of his country. I charge you by all that is holy to protect this banner with all the strength God has given you—yes, even to the sacrifice of your lives. In so doing I know already that you will never permit it to be dishonored to the shame of yourselves or of those who have given it to you to-day.

"Your countrymen will watch you proudly. They know you will be true to yourselves and to your trust, true to the land of your birth, true to the record of those other soldiers of your race whose valorous deeds have brought glory to these Stars and Stripes. Go forth and fight for the cause of humanity, as those other colored patriots have done. And bring this flag, tattered and bloodstained it may be, but bring it back from the field of battle, from the trenches, the forts, the march, the firing line; bring it back without one stripe dishonored, without one star obscured!

"Bring it back victorious!" shouted the Governor in a cry that might have been heard almost to Forty-second street.

"They'll do it. Hurrah for the Buffaloes!" cried a man in the sidewalk crowd.

"Bring it back victorious," continued the Governor, "and may God bless you and keep you and bring you back to the country that sends you forth in the cause of freedom!"

Colonel Moss Responds.

Colonel Moss took the national standard and the blue regimental flag from the hand of the Governor, passed them over to the color guard and said:—

"Your Excellency, Gentlemen of the Union League Club and Fellow American Citizens:—In accepting this stand of colors I wish to say in behalf of the 367th infantry, which it is my pleasant duty to command, that we prize this banner more than for mere beauty and intrinsic worth. We shall prize it especially because of the generous and patriotic impulse prompting the gift, and because it exemplifies this club's historic friendship for the colored man, for the soldier and patriot who has sprung from a race once enslaved—a friendship based upon the American principle of a square deal for all.

"That the colored men of this regiment will protect this flag, as have all other colored regiments in the history of this country, will protect it even in the grapple with death itself, goes without saying. When the war is over and this regiment comes back there is going to be another presentation of colors in front of this club house. I want to say to you as an officer with eighteen years' experience in the command of colored troops, and as one who has commanded them in two campaigns, that these men on their return are going to present you with colors which, we hope, you will be glad to hang upon your walls, where they years to come a story of valor and unshrinking patriotism which all Americans can tell in silent eloquence through all th[illegible] including our twelve millions of black cit[illegible]zens, may contemplate with the thrill [illegible] pride."

The Negro Soldier at the Front

ONCE more the attention of the public has been called to the signal service which the Negro troops of France have rendered to the cause of the Allies. Recently that service was made the subject of a complimentary resolution in the French Chamber of Deputies, and it is now announced that a Negro deputy from Senegal is traveling through French West Africa with a view to intensifying voluntary enlistment amongst the different tribes that people those vast territories. The announcement could not come at a more favorable time than the present, when the American newspapers are enthusiastically praising the Negro troops of the United States Army at the front for their bravery, self-abnegation, and exemplary bearing. Numerous battalions have been raised among the Negro race for service abroad, and the men who compose their ranks have manifested much the same enthusiasm and comprehension of the lofty task before them as their white comrades-in-arms. Christian Science

The war, it is said, has revealed to the Negro a new world. As far as the French Negro forces, which number at least 120,000 men, are concerned, their conception of service has assumed a form of patriotism almost religious in its sincerity. The point to remember with regard to the employment of French black troops is that they are in a literal sense defenders of their territories against conquest by a ruthless foe. One of the distinct objects of Germany in attacking France was the capture of the French African colonies. This circumstance was brought out in the conversations between the German Chancellor and the British Ambassador in Berlin, on July 29, 1914, when Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg declared that he was quite ready, in return for England's neutrality, to promise that Germany would not annex any territory in France, but would not make a like promise with regard to the French possessions outside of Europe. France thus had no difficulty in achieving a magnificent response to her appeal to the natives of Africa and of Far Eastern colonies to rally to the defense of their land. If one may include the Arabs of Northern Africa under the same heading, then it may be literally said that hundreds of thousands of fighting men from Africa fell into line in the French ranks and fought on the western front. That rally was a magnificent tribute to the benevolent and fraternal policy of France in Africa which has secured for her such stout defenders among the people whom she has taken under her protection, and was the best possible answer to the hypocritical protest, which was heard in Germany's note to neutrals, against the employment of native troops in the Entente armies. This protest came with poor grace from a nation which had secretly worked to create a Holy War in Asia and Africa, and a "black peril" in Africa by fomenting a revolt against the white race in the French and English colonies. Barred from using its own native troops in Europe, Germany of the conscientious scruples did not hesitate to use them against the colonial troops detailed to wrest the German colonies from their unscrupulous owners.

On the occasion of Germany's most recent protest on the subject of the employment of black troops, the note, it is fair to assume, was intended to make a particular appeal to the "sense of humanity" of the American people whose population includes 10,000,000 and more Negroes. But once again Germany failed to gauge the sentiment of other nations, or the mettle of the Negro population of the United States. Speaking generally, if the prestige of the white race has suffered in this war, then it is not because, as was pointed out in the French Chamber of Deputies, of the employment of Negro troops in the mêlée, but because of Germany's crimes.

The sector in question has been extremely quiet since this contingent took up its position.

NEGRO WOUNDED TWICE FIGHTING AT FRONT

Augusta Chronicle 6-22-18

Macon, Ga., June 18.—Wearing two gold service stripes, Sergt. Charles H. Salter, Negro soldier, wounded twice near the front lines in France, has returned home. He is to be discharged. Salter was wounded in an air raid, his leg having been broken in two places. He prizes very highly the gold stripes, signifying he was wounded twice in action.

On account of the censorship regulations, he was reluctant to discuss conditions abroad. He said, however, Negroes of America had the wrong impression about Negro troops not being fed and given good sleeping quarters, but instead he said their treatment was excellent.

Troops' Showing Wins Praise from Mr. Daniels and Allied Officers

New York Herald 7-23-18

SECRETARY DANIELS:—"I am very much pleased with the showing made by the men of the National Army. It gave me pleasure to have the honor of being with General Johnson at this wonderful demonstration here to-day. It shows what Americans can do when they find it necessary to form an army all of a sudden. I was particularly pleased at the showing made by the negroes, who always have been among the first to hear the bugle when it summoned men to the colors in this country."

BRIGADIER GENERAL EVAN M. JOHNSON:—"I am proud of my men. That's all I can say, and surely that is enough."

ACTING MAYOR ALFRED E. SMITH:—"My one regret is that Mayor Hylan could not be present to-day to see how the New York men in the National Army appeared. It was a marvellous showing."

BARON CHARLES HUARD, French High Commission:—"The soldiers of France will be glad to welcome to the front such a fine body of men as I have seen pass to-day. My people are doing their best to hold the Germans back until such men as these can get into the trenches."

CAPTAIN RUDOLFO SERRAO, of the Italian Army:—"It was, indeed, an inspiring sight. I wish my comrades on the battle front could see these fine fellows coming to their aid as they soon will be."

THE NEGRO IN THE ARMY.

LOUISVILLE KY HERALD
JUNE 16, 1918

German prisoners relate that their officers seek diligently to get them to fight desperately against the Americans by warning them of the atrocities that will be visited upon them if they should be taken prisoners, especially at the hands of the negro soldiers. With amazement, those who have the good luck to have the cry of "Kamerad" honored—it can not always be since often enough it is as a treacherous flag of truce and masks an ambuscade with mercy—discover that the American fighting man, black or white, is tender and solicitous for the welfare of those he takes in fair fight. And he takes none other. The dirty fighter gets short shrift.

But, to return to the soldier of color, we doubt if people—even his own people—realize just how fine and worthy a record he is making for himself somewhere in France, or the praise he is earning from the French who, in these matters, have the benefit of comparison with their own men from Senegal and the back country of Tunis and Algeria. Let us give one instance:

> While doing outpost duty 150 feet in front of our main line, two negro soldiers were attacked by a party of Germans said to include as many as twenty-four men. Thus outnumbered, they made a highly expert and soldierly use of the fighting tools with which they were plentifully supplied in the form of rifles, grenades, and the razor-edged bolos, killed or wounded a generous percentage of their assailants and put the remainder to flight. That the decisive moment in the fight, the one when they did the greatest execution on the enemy, came after both negroes had been severely wounded, is an important point. Their names are Privates Henry Johnson and Needham Roberts, and they hail from New York.

That is just one example out of many.

In discipline, in endurance, in devotion to duty the negro fighter is as good a man as any Uncle Sam is sending overseas to save the world for democracy, and that is saying a great deal.

"COURAGE AND ENERGY"—HOW REWARDED?

"He gave a magnificent example of courage and energy," says a French General of Division of Private Henry Johnson, U. S. A., colored. "A good and brave soldier," he says of Needham Roberts, also colored, whose life Johnson saved. "Both men fought bravely," says Gen. Pershing in his official communiqué. Together, though both severely wounded, they beat off an attack by twenty Germans in a listening-post, forcing them to flee. For their splendid initiative, valor and determination the Croix de Guerre has been awarded them; to Johnson the gold palm also.

Upon the same page of The World that described this feat of arms appeared a despatch from Valdosta, Ga., telling how Mary Turner, colored, was hanged by a mob.

N Y C WORLD
MAY 21, 1918

For the crime of killing a white farmer and wounding his wife, two men had been lynched last week. Mrs. Turner was the fourth victim, her husband preceding her by a few hours. The murder plot was supposed to have been made in her home; she "was said to have had" the dead farmer's watch when captured. Legal evidence against her there was none; even the lynch-law testimony, not subject to cross-examination, was worthless and inconclusive.

In France two negro volunteers, badly wounded, give an example of courage and energy in the defense of democracy which is deemed worthy of citation before a whole army division and by Gen. Pershing. In one of the leading States of the South a negro woman is put to death by a mob, without companionship of her sex, without benefit of clergy, without evidence or plea, in defiance of law and justice.

With tens of thousands of American negroes fighting for civilization in France under the American flag, how much longer are the American people to tolerate negro lynchings?

Color Sergeant Under Fire From Enemy Planes Refuses to Lie Down And Let the American Flag Touch the Ground.

Negro soldiers "Somewhere in France" have again moved up to the first page in the war news. This time the distinction goes to the color sergeant of a regiment. The report tells of the Colored men being shelled by enemy planes while they were on the march over shell-marked roads in France.

The colonel sensed the situation and ordered that the men should get off the road and lie flat on the ground.

"Fall out! Take cover!" went down the line. The well trained soldiers scattered like a convey of quail, and a minute later there was no target left for the swooping hawks, for the road was clear and the men were scattered khaki dots against the gray earth.

The road was clear for all but one man. Erect in his place, calmly holding the flag high and steady against the breeze, was the color bearer.

"Did you hear the order to lie down?" a lieutenant asked.

"Yes, sir," quite respectfully, "but while I can stand up, I don't never mean to let this flag touch the dirt."

The colonel heard and he did not need to stop and ponder.

"Let him stay where he is," he said.

So the circus flew past and disappeared and the flag flapped high and clear, unharmed. Then the regiment reformed, and plodded on down the muddy road to meet their new comrades in arms, and to do their work.—St. Louis Argus.

Our All-American Team

No American army in France would be complete without negro regiments in it. And no negro regiments of ours could be very long in France without breaking into the news with a vengeance. It is a way they have, whether the spot is San Juan Hill or anywhere else.

Now that Harry Johnson, of Albany, N. Y., and Needham Roberts, of Trenton, N. J., have been cited in the orders of the day and are to receive the cross with the palm, we can feel sure that America is in the war, and in the war to stay. They are of Hayward's Browns, as nearly as the censor graciously permits us to guess. And the regiment is brigaded with the French, who cannot say enough of their soldierly qualities. The story of Johnson and Roberts and their fight with guns and grenades and hands and knives gives us a glimpse of one of the finest and pluckiest American scraps of the war.

There could not be more loyal Americans or better two-fisted fighters than our negro soldiers. We are proud as proud of them, and we salute them all in the persons of Privates Johnson and Roberts, cited for the Croix de Guerre before the army of France.

Boches Drop 5,000 Shells in Two Hours in Terriffic Bombardment of Men of the 93rd Division

SPECIAL EXTRA

WITH THE AMERICAN COLORED TROOPS, On the Aisne-Vesle Front, Aug. 10.—Today the Colored troops of the 93rd Division had a brilliant share in throwing the Germans back of the Aisne-Vesle line.

The attack on the Colored troops was launched with terrific force. For two hours the Germans shelled the American position with high explosives. Between four and five thousand shells were thrown. A more ferocious bombardment could not be imagined. The Negroes were knocked all around.

Dugouts were smashed, trenches were destroyed, gun positions were obliterated. Yet when the German infantry came over, presumably expecting to find the American positions deserted or the shelters filled with terror-stricken black men, it was met with a withering machine gun and rifle fire.

The Americans had remounted machine guns, worked on new positions, dragged one another out of demolished dugouts, and when the German line came rushing across "No Man's Land" the Negroes were ready at every point. Germans fell by scores, [illegible] reached the wire stretched a few rods out from the American front line but none got through it. It was a solid victory for the Americans.

And only two Americans were seriously wounded. A great many received slight injuries, but they are all back in the line now, ready for anything.

During the bombardment two black men did what may earn for them the distinguished service cross. Telephone wires connecting the front line with company and regimental headquarters were destroyed. The Negroes went out and at twenty-five points, every one in the danger zone, repaired the wires so that communication was re-established.

In this attack the Huns were terror-stricken because of the constant machine gun fire kept up by the "black devils," as the French call them. The increasing Boche terror caused them to take to their heels for safety.

A hill southwest of Fismes was covered with German dead who had made an unsuccessful attempt to remove a Colored regiment from their trenches during the night.

In the last twenty-four hours nearly 1,000 Germans have become prisoners through fear of the savage-like attack made on them by America's black dare-devils. Both white and Colored officers in command are yet unable to hold their Colored troops in check when under fire, and it has been learned that it was not due to their not being acquainted with all orders and commands given but because they refused to let up fighting, so determined are they to fight it out to a finish.

In various attacks along the line, there were scores of Huns who threw down their rifles and shouted "Kamerad!" in great terror as the Colored troopers advanced, fighting like demons with every step. Despite the heavy rain and the sogginess of the ground, these boys of the now famous 93rd have not made one single halt in their attack nor anything like slowing up. The "black devils" have got their blood up and they are making the Hun suffer.

Tuesday night a severe attack was renewed on the Negro troops near Siry-Salsogne, but it was soon slowed up by the Colored regiments in a sudden retort that caused many a Hun soldier to lose his life in the Vesle river.

INTREPID OFFICER HOME ON CRUTCHES

Says Whole Regiment Was Cited For Bravery In Action And Will Receive French Croix de Guerre

Whole Regiment, Many of Which Are

Major Lorilard Spencer, Jr., former military secretary to Governor Whitman and one of the officers of the famous Fighting Fifteenth Infantry of the old New York National Guard, cited for bravery, is back in New York recovering from wounds. According to a letter received by Governor Whitman from Colonel William Hayward, commander of the famous Negro regiment, Major Spencer was wounded, almost in the first rush overthe top, by six machine gun bullets.

Resting on his crutches in the Union League Club yesterday afternoon, Major Spencer told the story of the bravery of the fighting Negroes, many of them fro mAlbany, which won th entire regiment citation for bravery and the the coveted Croix de Gurre, when the regiment hit Hindenburg line, and broke off a considerable chunk.

"I remember the worst fight early in June when the Germans launched a severe attack on my battalion, and the men stuck to their posts admirably, using hand grenades and machine guns to check the onslaught. Company "M", Capt. David l'Esperance, bore the brunt of it, and Capt Shaw, a New York insurance broker hda charge of the machine gun section which was so placed that it surprised the attackers as they streamed toward our trenches, and and sprayed death among them. The Boche dropped 'minnies, around us, and these giant aerial torpedoes gouged big holes in the earth, burying some of my men.

"Even the first time they went out in the open under heavy shell fire they were unafraid. On July 15 they were ordered to take up frot line positions, and the road was shelled continually, some companies had only two officers, and in some cases units went up with only non-coms in charge.

"In the fight west of the Argonne, when we were brigaded with the Fourth French Army, these boys did nobly, and on one occasion when we were caught in a box barrage and fought the enemy, without a man leaving his post, twenty-four were cited by the French general for bravery."

When the Band Struck Home

The negro stevedores were playing baseball—playing it tooth and nail, without a thought for anything else in the world. They hadn't been so wrapped up in anything since they landed in France. Suddenly, on the fringe of the thick, noisy, black line of rooters across the outfield, men began to turn their backs on the game, stiffly standing at attention. Over their heads, from the direction of the band, came faint but thrilling music, to which they automatically fitted words:

N Y C POST
JUNE 15, 1918

To arms, ye brave, to arms!
We'll form battalions strong,
March on, . . .

"Attention!" shouted the husky lieutenant, who but a moment before had been ragging the pitcher. More men, and down the rooters' line yet more men, were straightening, stiffly erect. The runner, ten feet off second, spun half a turn on his heel. The pitcher dropped his ball, the batter his stick. Even the "ump" was called to silence. Away back, the Y. M. C. A. man saw a lazy catcher stand, elbow crooked, and with his black hand to the forehead of his wire mask.

The "Marseillaise" had hushed the Great American Game.

Our Dusky Fighters.

Two of our negro soldiers in France have been [redacted]ted for glorious [redacted]ploits. Privates Johnson and Robert[redacted] single handed, while on sentry duty, fought twenty-four Huns, killed several of them and put the rest to flight. With bullets, bayonets, the butts of their muskets, hand grenades and knives, these darky heroes raged like black cyclones in the midst of the attacking force, piercing, clubbing and disemboweling their foes with knives. Both were three times wounded; but Johnson prostrate in the mud kept his one good arm busy hurling hand bombs after their fleeing foes.

General Butler told the North in his day how nobly the colored troops had fought, and other officers have testified to their valor at San Juan Hill. Now the Huns are learning what dusky terrors strapping six-foot colored boys in khaki are. And our Indian fighters, of whom there are some thousands in the service, may also teach them to revise their notions about inferior races. But it is possible that their most complete and painful surprise will come when our cowboy cavalrymen from the great Southwest are chasing their uhlans in retreat across the Rhine. OVER THERE.

Some where in France, Negro soldiers are making history Some where in France, Ethiopia is stretching forth her hand to God.

It has leaked out, according to authentic reports, that for a long while American Negro troops have been holding a front line of trenches in battle scarred France; not only have they made good in point of prisoners captured, but wherever they have been stationed they have gained the greatest respect and admiration of the French people and are idolized by the French children.

Strange as it may seem, to some of those who are working overtime to try and make sensible people believe that Negro men are a menace to the white women of America, there has not been a single instance of any complaint by the women of France as to the discourtesy of any American Negro soldier.

It is no uncommon sight in the villages where Negro troops are billeted to see a stalwarth black man dressed in the uniform of the American Army assisting some French women to carry a burden. Often, the sight of a Negro soldier helping a French woman to wash clothes or dishes, affords one the opportunity to wonder why such a hue and cry is raised in America as to the danger of being near a Negro man.

"Soldats noirs le'Amerique" as Negro troops are known in France, are making history that is destined to outlive any slurs that have been cast in the past as to the bravery of Negro soldiers or the gentlemanly bearing of the average Negro civilian.

As to the fighting qualities of the "Soldats noirs le'Amerique" we think that the underpaid murderers of the Kaiser can testify most efficiently. Surely General Pershing knew just what he wanted, when he requested that Negro soldiers be sent him in the largest number possible.

Miss Catherine Wright, daughter of Mrs. W. S. Wright, who is in canteen service near the front, writes:

"Last evening we had three troop trains of negroes, splendid men, all of them. Their officers were a most remarkable class of men, mostly college graduates. Each officer saw that 'his' men were served—they all jumped in and helped. The men were kept in perfect order. The appearance of the negroes could not have been more perfect. They were all clean, well groomed and efficient, the officers most remarkably so. It takes Uncle Sam to make a splendid army."

Buried With Every Honor a General Could Have Had.

A day or two ago we had our first funeral. It was not one of our boys, but a colored boy from Alabama, who had been brought into our hospital. For some days it was known that he could not live, and I had visited him several times. No coffins had come, so the boys made a pine box. We gave him a soldier's funeral; as good as a general would have. We wrapped him in the United States flag, half filled the grave with holly, then taps were sounded. How shrill it sounded over the chilly French fields and how white the boys' faces looked in the fading light. So that is the end of the colored boy from Alabama. Aye, not the end, but the beginning. He must have had a spark of idealism or he would not have been here. Somehow it got hold of the boys and me.—From letter of Rev. Henry Wilds Smith in the Lee Gleaner.

The strong background brought the white faces out in bold relief and made the officers become an easy mark for the sharpshooters who began picking them off, and the order was issued to blacken up. The negro troops have caused a great sensation in France. They are stalwart Southern negroes who have been well trained and have developed into splendid soldiers. They are not lacking in pluck and two were cited for bravery in General Pershing's message yesterday. The two negroes were attacked by a raiding party of twenty Germans. They manfully stood their ground and fought, although both were wounded. When the enemy closed about them they used their knives and defeated the raiders, who expected to surprise the Yankees and capture a number of prisoners.

MAKE GOOD SHOWING IN FIRST ACTION ON THE WESTERN FRONT.

Special Telegram to The Express.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY ON THE MARNE, July 17.—American negro troops are now participating in the great fighting that has been developing since the renewal of the German offensive. This is the first time the negro soldiers have been in heavy action, and they are acquitting themselves well.

Their commanding officer, who is white, was in a hospital many miles to the rear of the fighting lines suffering from a broken ankle. When he heard that the offensive had been resumed he summoned an automobile and over the emphatic protests of his doctors, he raced back to his organization, which already was in action, and took command.

Three officers who also had been in bed in hospitals with influenza rejoined their units.

The German attack was completely broken up by artillery fire at the particular point where the negroes were in the line. The Boches were held in their trenches at the very outset of their venture and the attack suffered heavy losses.

New Negro Regiment Also Has Motto of "Do It Right Now"

A systematic course of training has been drawn up for the Negro soldiers in the 814th Pioneer Infantry by their commanding officer, Colonel Cyrus A. Dolph. The system calls for play as well as work, says the Louisville Courier-Journal.

The 814th Pioneer Infantry is the second of its kind to be organized at Camp Zachary Taylor. The 301st, the first, is now on the battlefields of France.

Each Negro is studied individually. Colonel Dolph spends much of his time on the field with his men and reviews the regiment at retreat every night. Packey MacFarland, camp boxing instructor, has organized several classes among the officers and enlisted men.

The regiment has been named the "Black Devils," and the men have adopted a standard with a "black devil" charging with a bayonet and the words "Do it right now" written around the figure. This standard was accepted by the men, who cheered and asked that the "black devil" be made blacker. It will be known as the official standard of the 814th Pioneer Infantry, and the enlisted men and officers are resolved to rival the famous "Blue Devils" of France.

FORT WORTH TEX RECORD
OCTOBER 13, 1918

Colored Troops Fought Nobly.

"Governor Manning of South Carolina has six sons in the army," chuckled State Press Joseph Taylor of the Dallas News, "but there is a colored citizen of Edgecomb county, North Carolina, who has fourteen sons in uniform, therefore the governor of South Carolina hasn't any right to say anything rash to the governor of North Carolina." It goes without saying that the irrepressible and patriotic Joe is a native of North Carolina. There was a time in his history when State Press would have refused to subscribe to the slogan, "the colored troops fought nobly." Then he was a Bourbon Democrat; now he is a Hamiltonian Federalist and long ago kicked the tallow-dip relics of a dead civilization into the ditch. George Robinson has chided him for his treachery many times, but some day George will cease to be a tallow-dipper, and the acting governor of Texas will be the "lone fisherman survivor" of the state rights period of civilization.

N. Y. NEGRO TROOPS' FEARLESS ACTS WIN PRAISE OF GEN. FOCH

Col. Hayward Writes of Bravery in Trenches of Men of the 369th.

A letter was made public to-day from Col. William Hayward, Commander of the 369th (old 15th New York, colored), that is of particular interest in view of the feat of two negro infantrymen of the regiment, Privates Henry Johnson and Needham Roberts, who wear the French War Cross for putting to flight twenty-four Germans. The letter was to F. R. Moore, editor of the New York Age, and is in part:

"To-day I have two battalions in the trenches of the first line. The officers and men have done splendidly. The men sing a song (they are always singing) that has a couple of lines like this:

We used to use the picks and spades,
But now we throw the hand grenades.

"And they surely do throw them. One of the men tossed one prematurely the other day when we were laying down a barrage. I afterward scolded him for his haste and asked him what had made him so precipitate. He said, 'Why, Kunnel, dat ole grenade she started to swell right up in mah hand an' I simply had to fling 'er.'

"I am very proud of them. They are clean, brave men, fearing nothing, daring everything. Gen. Foch says of them: 'They are very strong and stout-hearted—and very rash.' The friends of the regiment ought to rejoice that we are up here with the splendid French, where bravery, hardihood, character, and not a man's color count."

"All the negroes are proud of the achievement of Johnson and Roberts," said Mr. Moore to-day. "We are proud of them and proud of the old Fifteenth. Maybe the conduct of these two men will result in doing away with the color line that seems to be drawn in some places in this war.

"There are many people who do not know that we have colored nurses who are ready to go to the front and minister to the wounded. We have contributed liberally to the American Red Cross fund. We draw no color line. Our nurses are no longer content to stay here, and they should receive some consideration when they ask to be sent to the front.

"We don't want a black Red Cross, but we do want a universal Red Cross with every vestige of the old anti-colored prejudices wiped out and with nothing else required of its workers but ability, respectability and character."

Bert A. Williams, the comedian, said:

"I feel a sort of fatherly pride in that old regiment. I was one of the negroes in town who helped to recruit it. We drew the boys from all over and we've been expecting something of them. Of course, we know that what they did isn't any more than what any of the other men in that crowd would have done if they had had the chance. Those boys simply ran true to form, that's all—and I guess if anybody had interviewed those twenty-four Germans they'd have found that that was quite enough."

The American colored man is distinguishing himself. No sooner do recover from the thrill of the story the gallant fight put up by two form New York national guardsmen of colored unit than we read of anoth negro who has set a world mark ship plate riveting at a time wh riveting is one of the most popul of outdoor sports.

NATIONAL ARMY MEN EAGER TO GET INTO FRONT LINE TO STOP BOCHI

"They'll Make the Finest Soldiers in World," Says General Overseas—Soldiers Determined to Fight to Finish—Snipers Take Daring Chances in "Pot Hunting"—Negro Troops Furnish Much of Humor in War Zone.

Enough of the American National army has arrived in France to bear out the predictions that this army will be one of the finest bodies of military men in the world. I recently went to a section of France where new troops are quartered for final training, writes Don Martin in the New York Herald. There I saw the vanguard of the millions who were legally selected to serve their country. A general who has been all his life in the army fairly glowed in admiration of them.

"They are a splendid lot of boys," the officer said. "They are proud to be here. They are sorry for the boys at home who are not to help in the great battle for democracy. They want to get right in the line. They realize the dangers fully, but that doesn't worry them. They have had their eyes opened fully to the wonderful sacrifices France has made. They have seen how the villages are stripped of everything but the very old and the very young, and yet they have seen how determined and cheerful the country is. So they are proud to be here, and they are going to make the finest soldiers the world has ever seen."

Superlatives ordinarily are not permitted by the censorship when reference is made to Americans. A deeply grounded principle of the American censorship is that America, while glorying in her own idealism and achievements, must not forget that France and England have been at war for nearly four years and have set a very high standard for Uncle Sam. But the superlatives indulged in by the general were sincere. He actually believes the National army will be as fine a lot of men as ever stood in a uniform, and after seeing them and talking with them in more than fifty villages I must say that I think he has prophetic vision.

All Show Their Mettle.

To praise the National army does not imply disparagement of any other wing of our military force. The militia group has already, in various clashes with the enemy, shown the stuff of which it is made. The 104th regiment, which hails from Massachusetts, has been decorated by the French government for its valor under heavy fire. All the men have made good, but all they have done will unquestionably be equaled by the excellent army of draft men. The latter have the physique, the initiative and the spirit. As one of them said, "We're not here because we're here; we're here because it's where we belong and where we want to be." The training they received in the United States worked wonders in them.

In a little village a handsome youngster in a private's uniform saluted with the grace and snap of a trained regular. He had the look of the soldier in every line.

"Where are you from?" I asked.

He named a small city in the Northwest.

"Were you ever a soldier before?"

"No, sir," he said, smiling, "I never did anything before but spend father's money and get arrested for speeding."

"Are you glad to be here?"

"I wouldn't be anywhere else for anything in the world."

Seated in front of a small house, a wrinkled woman on one side, an aged man on the other and two wee children playing on the ground in front of him, I saw another young man who would attract attention anywhere. As the officer who accompanied me approached the young man jumped to his feet, snapped his heels together and saluted as if militarism was in his marrow. He said he came from a small town in the middle West. I asked him about his affairs before he joined the army.

"I was in the lumber business," the private rejoined. "I was getting along pretty well—have a wife and two children about like these here (pointing to the two near his feet), but even if I knew my business was going to ruin I wouldn't go back if they'd let me. I'm here to stick it out to the finish and you'll find all the boys the same way."

The spirit of all is, as this young lumber dealer said, identical. The men are here to fight for France and democracy. They understand exactly what the issues are. They understand precisely why the United States came into the war and they will be disappointed if peace comes before every allied aim has been achieved.

Among the first ten thousand National army men who came here to fill in various units may be found men representative of every branch of citizenship. I saw motormen, farmers, bank clerks, architects, lawyers, manufacturers, brokers, commission men, carpenters—in fact, everything. There were men with names suggestive of every nationality in the world.

These particular soldiers are in northeastern France, where they are going through intensive training to equip themselves for the front line.

Snipers in the Trenches.

Far off there was a slight movement close to the ground. Two snipers were watching.

"Go on shoot," said one.

"It's your turn," said the other.

There was a snap of the trigger.

"You binged him all right—that's three in two days."

Perhaps this sniping might technically be called murder. The snipers don't call it that. They call it pot hunting. I have talked with several and have been on the line with a few. They wouldn't any more shoot a song bird or a magpie than they would kill one of their own officers, but shooting Fritz across the line—that's another story. It is dangerous business, too. Many a sniper is sniped himself. Some of them camouflage themselves and stand for hours in range of a thousand rifles. There is a young American officer from Massachusetts who is assigned to technical work, who spends a day and a night each week on the line sniping the enemy. He does it because he likes it. He is an expert rifle shot and he enjoys the hazards of his work and gets satisfaction from killing Huns.

The two best known Hun snipers are Black Fritz and Crazy Fritz. Black Fritz is dead. Crazy Fritz was wounded, but whether he is dead is not known. Black Fritz harassed the American sector for weeks. He was a good shot and put bullets now and then through a soldier's armor hat. But one day he was spotted behind a log and a bullet struck him between the eyes.

"He was a handsome chap," said a sniper, "and had beautiful hair, blonde as a girl's and combed back like a college boy's."

"If he had blonde hair why did you call him Black Fritz?"

"Because he hung so much crepe on our doors."

There is another Hun known as Foolish Fritz, and a rather pretty story may be told about him. He is not a sniper. The men in the trenches cannot tell just what he is. Perhaps, they have figured, he corresponds to an American football or baseball mascot. He is a mere youth and he takes dangerous chances. He might have been shot a hundred times, but the American snipers haven't the heart to kill him.

"One day," said a sniper who has watched him play around like a kitten, "he crawled up over the top of the trench and went over to a log and lay on it. He was there for an hour sunning himself. I had a bead on him all the time, but what's' the use?—a mere kid. Another time a new sniper here saw him and was just about to pick him when I said 'Nothing doing.' We can't exactly understand what it means. About two weeks ago I thought I'd give the youngster a scare, so I put a bullet in a very small tree about a foot from him. He scampered out of sight like a frightened puppy. I often wonder if he or anyone else knows that he is living in the shadow of death. Maybe the Germans figure they learn something from it. However, you'll never catch me killing that kid."

Negroes Furnish Much Humor.

Humor gleams frequently through the grimness of war and much of it comes from the negro soldiers from the United States. A particularly dark skinned private was overhauled recently by a military policeman. It was on a country road and the soldier was ambling along with his military outfit as well as about 150 pounds of souvenirs of France.

"Where are you from?' asked the policeman.

"Me, sah? I'se from Alabama."

"Whereabouts in Alabama?"

"Don't know, sah, exactly, but I'se from Alabama."

"Where you going to?"

"Well, I don't 'xactly know, sah."

"Where you coming from?"

"The last place I 'member, sah, 's Barleybuck. Seems to me the train I was on went while I's buying a few things to take back when I go."

"Do you know where you are?"

"Can't 'xactly say I do, sah (looking around with the feigned erudition of an astronomer), but I reckon I'se somewhere in France."

The negroes amuse the French people. The big black boys swing along the country roads singing or smiling. They frequently organize a quartet in a camion and if the work in which they are engaged isn't vitally important stop beside a road to "put over" a few diminished sevenths, better known as barber shops. And they know how to do it. They are happy-go-lucky when ever found.

First Separate Men Make Good Record

NEW HAVEN CONN REGISTER
SEPTEMBER 8 1918

The Clerk J. Edward Biggs of the office of the probate court today received a letter from his brother, George H. Biggs of this city, who is now with the colored troops "Somewhere in France."

The writer says that all of the New Haven colored men, including Sergeants Barndall, Buckman, Blue, Daniels, Washington, Porter; mechanics, Biggs and Phillips; and Corporals Gaskin, Selsey, Waterman and Jones, are "doing well," and wished to be remembered to their old New Haven friends.

His command, which is now a part of the machine gun branch of the 372nd infantry, was formerly a part of the First Separate Co. of New Haven.

There have been two or three losses in the local command.

Burial of Colored Soldier Boy at Sea Military Funeral

The Houston Observer

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 4.—Dr Thomas Jesse Jones, who recently went to France under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. has just sen Mr. Emmett J. Scott, special assistant, War Department, the following account of the burial of a colored soldier at sea: 12-7-18

A colored soldier was buried at sea today. The flags on all the ships of the fleet have been at half-mast all day. It matters not that the soldier came from a lowly cabin. It matters not that his ski is black. He is a soldier in the army of the United States and he was on his way to fight for democracy and civilization.

The announcement of his death was signalle to every commander, and every ship prepared to d honor to the colored fighter. As the sun was setting in the west the guard of honor, including all the officers, from the commander to the private came to attention. The body of the Negro trooper wrapped in the American flag, was tenderly carried to the stern of the ship. The chaplain read the solemn burial service. The engines of the fleet were checked. The troop ship was stopped for the only time in the long trip from America to Europe. The bugle sounded taps and the body of the American soldier was committed to the great ocean and to God.

The comradeship of the solemn occasion was the comradeship of real democracy. There was neither black nor white, North nor South, rich nor poor. All united in rendering honor to the Negro soldier who died in the service of humanity.

FRENCHMEN LAUD VALOR AND HEROISM OF BLACK AMERICANS

10/26/18

Houston Observer

The daily press—white as well as colored—devotes much space to deeds of valor by Negro soldiers on the battle front. Correspondents write of the good appearance they make. "They are soldiers who wear their uniforms with a smartened pride; who are jaunty and alert and prompt in their movements and who express a sincere and heartfelt inclination to get a whack at the foe with the shortest possible delay." Their officers, many of them Southern born, testify: "It isn't hard to send them into danger; the hard part is to keep them from going into it on their own account." * * * "I'd take a chance on going anywhere with these black soldiers at my back. So would any of the rest of the officers." And the Germans are reported to have "of the "black Americans," and to be afraid of them."

It remained, however, for the French to express the highest appreciation of our colored soldiers that has come to our notice. It came in a private letter from a white American officer, who wrote: "The stories we have heard about our troops give us all a thrill and you would be proud of them. A French officer said, the other day, that of all the troops he had ever seen in the line, barring none—British, French, Canadians, Australians—the finest he had seen were the American draft Negroes; they are wonderful in the open warfare."

As the lady who forwarded this quotation says: "Such praise is worth while and should be heard by every Negro who has justifiable pride and confidence in the future of his race."—Southern Workman.

CHICAGO COLORED MEN FIGHT HARD IN FRANCE

CHICAGO ILL NEWS
AUGUST 12 1918

Colonel, Supposedly Franklin A. Denison, Ill in Hospital of Heart Disease.

OLD EIGHTH IN THRILLERS

BY JUNIUS B. WOOD.
SPECIAL CABLE TO THE DAILY NEWS.
[Copyright, 1918, by The Chicago Daily News Co.]

With the American Army at the Front, Aug. 11 (delayed).—"If we could only get into the big push we'd show what we can do, but our turn will come later," said American colored soldiers whom I saw to-day. Like many other American units, they are on that portion of the front which must be content to "bite" several kilometers of the German lin daily. Still, there is enough fighting t satisfy the ordinary man, and these col ored troops are winning the praise of the leaders of their French allies with whom they are regimented.

A unit officered by former New Yorkers is just at present the "hottest." The colored Americans, with another unit, all of whose officers are colored, are at a place a few kilometers distant from a point rapidly assuming strategic importance. The first unit achieved distinction a few weeks ago in holding the extreme left where the Germans attempted to drive with such valor. Many men and officers covered themselves with glory.

Sees a Chicago Unit.

When I had completed a long automobile trip half way across France I reached the headquarters of the one of these units that I know best. Lieut. Franklin McFarland of 3427 Federal street, Chicago, had just returned from a midnight raid in "no man's land." These soldiers were holding trenches where in places the German lines were no more than a hundred yards distant.

In a hidden emplacement in one of these spots a German Maxim gun persisted in sniping every time a head appeared at an exposed place in our trenches. A patrol had previously located the gun and Lieut. McFarland's party set out for the purpose of ending the sniping. It was just ready to start when Sergt. John Ingram of Chicago appeared, equipped with a gas mask and a sack of grenades and insisted on accompanying the patrol.

Though Ingram returned with his skin whole, he left behind his mask and steel helmet in the flight which followed. The patrol stalked through "no man's land" and was just ready to rush the gun when instead of one, three opened fire. The men threw grenades and then dropped into shell holes and fired until the guns were silenced. Then they retired. The Germans were making the ground as light as day with rockets, so the advance of re-enforcements to capture the guns was impossible.

A few nights earlier a trench mortar platoon under Lieut. Robert A. War of 3700 Wabash avenue moved to the front trenches and supported a French coup de main, in which prisoners were captured. The battery fired 300 shells. An other night Lieut. William C. H. Phillips of East 37th street, a civil engineer and a graduate of Armour institute, led a patrol through more than 100 yards German front line trench and was unable to find any of the enemy.

When the first soldier of this regiment—a Chicago boy—was killed by German fire a few days ago a French general attended the funeral services and issued a general order praising the individual soldier, also saying: "This American unit gives proof of the liveliest desire for information, the men maneuver with energy, spirit and care and exhibit the beautiful military qualities with which the Americans daily impress me."

Col. Denison Believed to Be Ill.

The colonel commanding this regiment has been active since its organization. He is a lawyer at home. He is ill with heart trouble at the army hospital at present.

[Mr. Wood, without doubt, here refers t

Col. Franklin A. Denison, commanding the 379th infantry, or the old 8th regiment, Illinois national guard, one of Chicago's famous regiments. It was the only colored regiment of the city, but was recruited from leading business and professional colored men, and from its organization made a remarkable record. Col. Denison himself is a well known lawyer and of high standing, and was an assistant attorney-general of Illinois when America entered the war. The old 8th trained at Camp Logan with the Prairie division, and was one of the first regiments from that camp to be sent overseas. At Camp Logan it had the reputation of being one of the most efficient and highly trained units there. This is the first intimation of Col. Denison's being out of action.]

Another officer, the only white officer in the organization, was sent by the general staff temporarily to take the colonel's place.

Stood Up Like Veterans.

Ever since the other of these colored units stopped the end of the German push it has been nip and tuck day and night, with constant shelling of the trenches back of the support areas. The men stood up like veterans. The commanding officer, accompanied by his orderlies, Privates Stillman Hanna, former butler at the home of Mrs. Parlesa Harper, 1 West 67th street, New York, and Ernest Hunter, a runner of the Salem Crescent club, 321 59th street, New York, reconnoitering a position, advanced several hundred yards into no man's land in daylight before he discovered his situation. Hanna's helmet was pierced by a fragment of shell, but his head was uninjured. They returned precipitately through the shelling which followed and were safe. The only German encountered was a corpse that had been there so long that the hobnails of its boots were rusted.

Others of this outfit covered themselves with glory. Several white officers and colored soldiers were named in French and American orders. Capt. Samuel Shethar of New York, a hat manufacturer, was sick in a dugout. The surgeon sent him back in an ambulance. When the fight started he crawled out of bed and made his way to the front to his battery position and remained fighting throughout the day and night and forgot his illness.

To the Front on Stretchers.

An epidemic of Spanish influenza gripped the regiment. At that time Capt. James Dugald White, Capt. F. W. Cobb, Lieut. R. M. Roland and Second Lieutenant P. M. Clendemen were carried to the front on stretchers and continued to direct their men during the critical hours of the fighting. All these men are from New York, as are the others whose actions are briefly related below.

Lieut. Harold Landon, whose mother was recently killed by a long range shell in a church in Paris, with Private Daniel W. Lewis and Lieut. William S. Keenan, got out the dead and wounded mules when their supply train was struck by shells, hitched up others and drove through the barrage to the front, making it possible to hold the position.

Private Samuel Jackson led his men through the barrage and several of them were wounded. He returned to the supply train and brought up the mules through the same fire. Sergt. Charles Risk, when he reached the front, discovered that wagons had been left in three places. He made three trips through the barrage. Half the animals were killed, but he brought up all the wagons.

Knocked Down, Keeps Fighting.

Sergt. Robert Collins was knocked down by an explosion as he rushed out of an abri (shelter) during the shelling and was dazed, but refused to be evacuated. He remained until the fighting was finished directing his squad.

Private Arthur Simpson returned 600 yards through a barrage, when a comrade was struck by a shell and his mask was torn and he was gassed, brought up stretchers and started back carrying his gassed comrade when a shell killed the other stretcher bearer and the man they were carrying.

Private Howard Gaillard crawled out over the paapet unde fire, when he was unable to fire at two hostile groups, with a machine gun, and started shooting from the hip. He stopped both advances.

Capt. Leslie Shaw, commanding a machine gun company, which was stationed at the top of an abri, which was under high explosive, machine gun and grenade fire, kept in touch with each gun, encouraging his men.

Corporal Frank Harden, second in command of the machine guns, worked under the fire of two stationary hostile patrols until he had located them. Then he sent up rockets disclosing their location to the artillery.

Take Machine Gun Apart.

Private Smithfield Jones and George Woods took apart their machine gun when it jammed after firing fourteen clips, reassembled it and resumed firing, all the time under fire.

Private H. D. Brown and Private Patterson were in a fight in which the telephone wires were cut after the bombardment started. Brown insisted on going out of the dugout and repairing the wires, though French officers cautioned them against entering the barrage. The two men repaired twenty-five breaks and restored communication.

Private Joseph Rawlins made a 900-yard trip through a barrage, taking a message to a company which enabled it to protect its exposed flank.

Second Lieutenant O. H. Parish was leading a patrol at night through the hostile trenches when a German suddenly wrenched the rifle from one of the colored soldiers. The American grappled with him and fought with bare fists for fifteen minutes until the German fell unconscious. When Lieut. Parish brought the prisoner back to our lines it was discovered that he was a sergeant-major. The information secured was valuable to the French and they gave Parish a reward of 500 francs.

HERO'G JOHNSON TELLS HIS STORY

Albany Negro Soldier Gives Graphic Description of Fight He Put Up.

NOW HAS CROIX DE GUERRE

Now Convalescing in Hospital in France and Hopes to Return to Ranks.

ALBANY N Y ARGUS
AUGUST 18 1918

The August number of Association Men, the national monthly Y. M. C. A. publication, contains a detailed story of the exploits of Henry Johnson, negro soldier, of Albany, who with a comrade won the Croix de Guerre and other honors for unprecedented bravery in disposing of several Germans in a hand-to-hand fight. Johnson is now convalescent in a battle line hospital, having been wounded. His story, told in the hospital to a Y. M. C. A. man who visited him and retold in the magazine, follows:

Johnson and Robertson, two colored soldiers in the famous 15th New York regiment, received the Croix de Guerre. The division in which I am working goes up to the trenches at this particular section, so last week I took occasion to visit the hospital where these two wounded men were lying.

Henry Johnson is a tall, lean, muscular type of negro, black as coal, who a year or so ago drove a coal cart in Albany, N. Y., and he lies on one side of the room with his friend Robertson on the other side. The Croix de Guerre are pinned over their heads.

After inquiring about their condition and if I could do anything for them, I said, "Johnson, tell me what happened."

"Well," he said, "it was about 2 o'clock, sir."

"In the afternoon?" I said.

"No, sir, in the morning, sir. I was out there on the line and I could hear 'em and I could see 'em, too, cuttin' the wire, and I called on Robby, who was a little ways down the trench (hoarse whisper), 'Robby, they cuttin' the wire. Let 'em come through, let 'em come through; when they come through we'll take the hill.' (Just what 'take the hill means I do not know.) Then we just laid our hand grenades in a line along the trench and I kept saying to Robby 'let 'em come through.' Bye and bye the lieutenant came down and I told him, but he didn't believe nothing.

Got Him Second Time.

"We waited a little spell, and then sure enough they came through. First I used my rifle but I missed him first time."

"Missed who," I said, "the leader?"

"Yes, sir, the fellow who was leading, but I got him the second time, and he used just the same language what I did. He said: 'The son of a gun got me.' Then we let go with the grenades. We just threw them fast and they was throwin' them, too.

"Bye and bye Robby called out, 'Johnson, I'm hit, I'm down,' and I looked and sure enough Robby was down on the ground. I just clubbed my rifle and I stayed there swinging on it. I guess I slipped or somethin', or maybe it was my foot where I was hit, but I kind of tumbled down over Robby. I guess they thought we was both down, because then they came a jumping. I got up and then I pulled my bolo (big knife) and—Oh, boy!" (One should visualize the broad grin that stretched across his face and those shining white teeth.) "My hands got so slippery with blood that I had to keep grabbing up a handful of dirt to get a new grip.

"They kept carryin' their fellows off it seems, like that's the way they done. I chased one fellow down a trench and I certainly would like to get to that fellow. I sure would have killed him but he made the gate before I did and slammed it on me (trench gate) All the time I was hollerin,' 'Turn out the guard!'"

Were Over Twenty Huns.

"Robby, did they turn out the guard?"

Robby shook his head with an emphatic "No, no, sir."

"Did they hear you?" I asked.

"Some one told me next day they heard me. I was kind of leanin' up against a trench and a German picked up a fellow near to me as you and carried him off, but I guess I was done. After a long spell our fellows back of me shot up a rocket and I says to myself, Yes, after it's over they can shoot up rockets.'"

"How long did you wait there before help came?" I asked.

"About an hour. Bye and bye the lieutenant came down and I said, 'Robby's in the dugout there, sir, he's hurt.' Lieutenant says, 'Sh, don't talk so loud.' I says, 'Sh, hell! They been here and gone.'"

"How many of them were there," Johnson?"

"I know there was over twenty of 'em, sir."

"What are you going to do when you get well?"

"I don't know, sir, the doctor says he doesn't know whether my foot will be any good or not. I wouldn't mind having some more of it, sir."

Johnson does not say so, but what really happened was that when his friend Robertson fell wounded, Johnson left his position by his own hand grenades, stepped down and stood over his fallen friend, clubbed his rifle and fought them single-handed, and actually succeeded in driving every one of the Germans—whether there were twenty or whether there were six will never be known (some reports say there were twenty-seven)—back without their having taken a single prisoner.

COLORED TROOPS HOLDING THEIR OWN.

The Cleveland Leader
NOV 17 1918

By Special Correspondent.

Our Colored troops are going through an experience which is entirely new and which they are enjoying to the utmost. Their color is no barrier to whatever social opportunities the villages in which they are quartered afford. They associate freely with the French and the sight of a Colored trooper of inky hue escorting a French girl is as common as any other social event in any French village where Colored Americans are billeted.

Recently I stopped at an inland French village for dinner. In the dining room at a long table sat all the guests, a mixed society of civilians of both sexes and army officers. At one end of the table was a young French captain with a high-bred face, his left hand gone, and his breast covered with distinguished service medals. Sitting beside him was an American Negro captain. I sat beside a first lieutenant from a distinguished Mississippi family that had once owned slaves. He was taking his medicine like a man, but he didn't talk much. The Negro officer was doing a lot of talking and the French were encouraging him with their engaging courtesy, though they didn't understand him. The lieutenant from Mississippi ate quietly, speaking in low tones, but he made no remark about the presence of the Colored officer. Once he addressed to him a sharp, direct question as to what branch of the service he was in and received an answer in a tone so genuinely respectful in its quality that the French favored my southern friend with some glances of curiosity. But there was no subduing our Colored officer for any length of time, and it wasn't long until we had his history. He had been a policeman in what he termed the "bad ward" in Philadelphia, and when I left the table he was still talking about his service in that field of endeavor.

The experiment of officering Colored regiments with men of their own race is still in its infancy and it's too early to prophecy as to how it is going to work out, but there is no doubt as to the quality of these Colored troops. They are soldierly looking, well-set-up men, and if they are properly led, they will give an account of themselves which will be true to the tradition of Negro troops in the Civil War and at Santiago. And the expectation fo army men here is that the Negro officers are going to prove successful.

That American negro band which courteously halted its parade to introduce to the dwellers in Buckingham Palace genuine jazz music, astonishing all Londoners, awake or asleep, between Trafalgar Square and Rotten Row, probably had in mind the amiable purpose of finishing the American education of GEORGE and MARY. Their Majesties have rooted at American baseball games, informed their honorable palates of the goodness of hot buckwheat cakes with maple syrup, visited Yankee warships and heard Yankee Gobs assault heaven's dome with ragtime melodies, reviewed Yankee Doughboys on the march and marvelled at the distance between the soles of their shoes and the crowns of their heads, and are graduated at last by realizing how impossible it is to keep still the feet when the tympanum trembles with the savage syncopations of the jazz.

"15TH IS THE MOST ENVIED AMERICAN REGIMENT ABROAD"

The New York Age

Capt. Hamilton Fish, Jr., Writes to Father About Regiment

RETURNING OLD FLAG

May 11, 1918

Governor Whitman to be Asked to Put It With Other Old Flags at State Capitol—Colored Regiment Was the Second from New York State to Reach France

The old 15th New York Infantry, now the 369th United States Infantry, is the most envied American regiment in France, according to Capt. Hamilton Fish, Jr., a member of one of New York's oldest and welthiest families.

Captain Fish has written an interesting letter to his father about the regiment and the excellent showing the colored fighters are making. The letter follows:

"I hope you will forgive me for not writing oftener, but I am busy every moment getting my company ready for a tour of duty in the trenches. We expect to be ordered up in ten days. There is a lot of polishing up to be done, so that we can give a good account of ourselves on our introduction to the boche. After all our wanderings and experiences it is difficult to realize that we will be facing German bullets, and I hope, taking German helmets before you get this letter. I understand that helmets are the only things we are allowed to keep, and also to send home.

"Our regiment is the most envied American regiment in France, and has the greatest opportunity to make a wonderful record. We are with the French Army and have the incomparable advantage of the instructions and experience of the French. We are, to all intents and purposes, a part of the French Army, and supplied by them with all of our rifles, bayonets, helmets, gas masks, knapsacks, food, and ammunition. The men looked splendid in the American khaki uniforms and French leather equipment and brown helmets. I wonder what the Germans will think when they take one of our boys prisoner and find that he cannot speak French and comes from Harlem.

Says Regiment Will Make Enviable Record

"I am a great believer in the fighting quality of the educated American Negro. If the regiment does not make a splendid record, it will be the fault of the men. I believe (if the censorship regulations were abolished, the 15th New York (now the 369th U. S. Infantry), would be as well known as the Rough Riders were in the Spanish-American war, before peace is declared. We were the second New York regiment over here, following closely on the old 69th, and, I believe, the first colored regiment to land in France.

"Today we are the American Foreign Legion of France. We are sending back our old 15th New York Infantry flag to Governor Whitman, to be placed with the other old regimental flags in the State Capitol at Albany. It is quite appropriate that the flag should be returned to Governor Whitman, as the regiment was ordered during his administration, and owes its success to his personal interest and efforts in its behalf.

"We are billeted in a small village not very far from the front and are not bothered by German shells, but we can plainly hear the incessant rumble of the artillery. On clear nights the front looks like a Fourth of July celebration with rockets, flares and flashes of big guns. Most of the firing is now done at night time, because the artillery on both sides shell the lines of communication to prevent the bringing up of supplies and movement of troops. There are plenty of German airplanes hovering about, especially at night, and there have been several air flights in the vicinity of our village. One of our battalions has already gone to the trenches. It was an interesting sight to see our troops march out of the little French village while out band played the 'Sombre' and 'Meuse,' the 'Marseillaise," and our national anthem. There were no flowers and no good-byes, as our boys marched out to give battle, but just the same those of us who saw them go were greatly impressed by their martial appearance.

"I have given up all attempts to figure on the duration of the war, as it is a waste of time. We know less about the German offensive than you do in America, as we do not get the German bulletins and the allied communiques are closely censored. From the latest reports, the Germans have been checked in their attempt to take Amiens.

"Please do not worry about my being hit, as it will not do either of us any good. There is no such thing as dodging a shell or a bullet, as the one that hits is never seen. It is a good deal a matter of luck, or, as the French say—'bonne chance.' I am willing to take my chance with the rest of them.

"We went through the throwing of hand grenades without an accident, although one man dropped his and had the pluck to pick it up again and throw it out of the trench. Our boys already excel the French at grenade throwing on account of their baseball training. The hand grenade is one of the most important features of the present war and has taken the place of the rifle to a large extent in trench warfare. Several of our men can throw dummy grenades seventy-five meters, which is ten meters further than any of the French soldiers near here. Grenade throwing for distance, accuracy, and speed is the war sport of France, and has taken the place of football and other games.

"We declared war just one year ago and all reports indicate that America is aroused and enthusiastic for the prosecution of the war to victory. I am glad to hear that the nation has shaken off its shackles and destroyed the maggots of pacifism which feed on its carcass and lulled up into fancied security. I am confident that the farmers—the back-home folks, the plain people—whose sons are in khaki, will bend every energy and make every sacrifice to bring this terrible war to a quick and successful conclusion."

7 From New York And Vicinity Named On Casualty List

N Y C TRIBUNE

Lieutenant Who Wrote Family of Wounds Not Officially Mentioned

Brooklyn Negro Hurt

Honor Roll Includes the First Man of His Race From That Borough

Seven soldiers from New York and vicinity were named in yesterday's casualty list, including a former Yale professor who was a captain in the 11th Engineers that got its baptism of fire at Cambrai eight months ago, and a negro who is the first of his race from Brooklyn to be listed. There were two captains, a corporal and four privates in the New York list. A lieutenant, whose name is not on the list, informed his family he had been wounded. The New York men are:

Captain John Duir Irving, 11th Engineers, a direct descendant of a brother of Washington Irving and former professor of economic geology at Yale University, died from disease. He received his commission as captain of engineers at the Plattsburg training camp of 1916. At the time of his death he was an instructor at an army engineering school in France.

Captain Irving was born in Madison, Wis., August 18, 1874, and lived in New Haven, Conn., making his home when in New York with his brother, Dr. Peter Irving, 133 East Seventy-third Street. He was a member of the Geological Society of America, the New York Academy of Science, the Washington Academy of Science, the Mining and Metallurgical Society of America, the Engineers' Club of New York, the Columbia Club of New York, and the Graduates' Club of New York. A memorial service will be held at 5:30 p. m., Sunday, in St. Paul's Chapel, Columbia University, under the auspices of the American Institute of Mining Engineers, and the 11th Railway Engineers' Association. Professor J. F. Kemp, of Columbia, will deliver the address.

Private Everett E. Jones, Company F, 15th Regiment of the old National Guard, is the first Brooklyn negro to be named in the casualty list. He was severely wounded on May 26. He is twenty-two years old, and enlisted in the regiment when it was organized. In a letter dated May 2 he wrote to his father, Edward C. Jones, formerly of 14 Downing Street, Brooklyn, that he had been over the top twice, and had just been sent to a place behind the lines for a rest.

Second Lieutenant George H. Morgan, Company E, 18th Infantry, sent a cable message to his father, William Morgan, 122 Sterling Place, Brooklyn, saying: "Broken leg; nothing else; all right." The message was dated July 29. He is thirty years old, and was employed by the United States Steel Products Company when he went to the first Plattsburg training camp.

A commission as second lieutenant in the Quartermaster's Reserve Corps was given to Lieutenant Morgan, and he was assigned to Camp Wadsworth, at Spartanburg, S. C. After three months there he obtained a transfer to the line and has been in France since January.

Private Joseph Luskin, Company E, 4th Infantry, was wounded by shrapnel on June 16 while attempting to aid a companion who had fallen during an engagement. Writing to his brother Meyer, 166 Metropolitan Avenue, Brooklyn, under date of June 24, when he was in a base hospital, Private Luskin said:

"We got into a scrap with the Germans, and when we got through with them they were all killed, and I was injured trying to drag one of our fellows back to safety after he had been wounded." Luskin was drafted in December, and has been in France since April.

Captain George Walter Weserb, commanding officer of a machine gun company, was killed in action on July 22 by the accidental explosion of a hand grenade. Two days before this his sister, Mrs. Edward D. Thorpe, 14 Lewis Street, Perth Amboy, N. J., had received a letter from him saying he had become engaged to a Red Cross nurse. He was thirty-one years old and enlisted in the army ten years ago. He returned from the Philippines in February after three years' service there and went to France in May.

Corporal Emanuel Panoff, Headquarters Company, 38th Infantry, was wounded in action on June 7. His parents, who live at 41 Amboy Street, Brooklyn, had received a letter from him telling of his wound before the War Department notice arrived. He is twenty-three years old, an alumnus of Cornell, and was employed by the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce when he enlisted.

Private Abe Dworskey, severely wounded, lives at 200 West 111th Street and was a travelling salesman for the firm of Lewis & Rose, hat manufacturers, 721 Broadway, when he was drafted. His sister, Mrs. Samuel Lewis, with whom he lived, received a letter from him on June 8, in which he said that he had been slightly wounded, and another a few days later saying that his wounds were more serious than he had at first supposed.

Private Joseph Kaplan, member of a sanitary train, who was wounded July 15, lives with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harris Kaplan, 49 Broadway, Long Branch, N. J.

"THE BLACK AMERICANS"

Kansas City Star

"Americans including black Americans." This phrase is from the German official bulletin listing the troops that were found fighting against them on the Marne salient. "I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word." "Americans including black Americans"—no comma; the words all run together—is a phrase which should outlast the war. It is a deserved tribute to the spontaneity and bravery of the service of the Colored regiments now fighting in France, and a token of the oneness of their citizenship with all other Americans. These brave soldiers are not hyphenated; they may be black, but that word is only an adjective spelled with a small letter, like "white" or "young," or "tall" or "spry." It is also a token of the fact that other nations, including our enemies, recognize that the term "Americans" includes the brave black men on the same fighting basis as the white. We do not hear from any source whatsoever that the black Americans did any less well in the battle than their white brothers. Relatively to the task which the nation has in hand, the white soldier and the black soldier are one.

Aug 3 18

The devotion of these troops and their brave union with all the other self-respecting peoples in the world in resistance to the Prussian aggression is a full answer to those among the Colored people in this country who told them, not so very long ago, that this was not their war, and that it should be left to the white people to fight it out. The "black Americans" did not accept that view at all. They are proving their solidarity of sentiment and duty with all other Americans. Let them have full honor for it, and let it be remembered in the future to their credit.—Boston Transcript.

TALES OF WAR STIR YALE CLUB

Frederick L. Smith, Back from France, Appeals for Y.M.C.A. Workers at the Front.

N Y C AMERICAN
JULY 10, 1918

Fresh from the roar of the guns on the Verdun front, Frederick L. Smith, who has devoted his life to Y. M. C. A. work, brought a message to the hearts of 300 Yale and Princeton men at the Yale Club last night. He spoke at a rally held in connection with the association's drive for 4,000 war secretaries. Herbert L. Pratt, vice-president of the Standard Oil Company; former Governor George B. Carter, of Hawaii, and George S. Chappell were among the other speakers.

Mr. Smith said:

"Five weeks ago I stood under the guns at Verdun, and for nine weeks I was not outside of their roar at any time. I have visited eighty of the chief military centres on the western front, and I have stood at outpost positions and heard German soldiers talking in their trenches. I have stood beside 151 unfilled graves of American soldiers—boys who fell when two New England regiments were surprised by the Germans—as the fighting went on, their comrades too busy to fill their graves."

"I crossed the Atlantic and from the ship I saw a submarine just as visible as you are to-night. I could see the guns in the turret sweep over its wake and literally pepper the water for yards around with depth bombs. Coming back we encountered three submarines, one of which loomed up in a fog fifty yards from our ship, and I saw the men plainly at work in the turret. They were as much surprised at we. I saw depth bombs hurtled from our ship, and as our ship swung around the aft gun poked a hole in the side of the U-boat. And as clearly as I see you this moment the submarine trembled for a moment on its side and sank beneath the waters.

"As I swung around the bend in the trenches I passed some French soldiers, and just beyond, plastered with mud, were the colored boys of the old 15th of New York. They stood knee deep in the mire.

"One colored soldier said: 'Don't put your feet in that water,' pointing to a little pool. 'That is the cleanest place I have to sleep in.' Far out to the last mud wall a little colored soldier, covered with mud, walked up and down with his musket on his shoulder. That darky boy stood there as the outpost and guardian of civilization. As we approached him he dropped his musket splash into a puddle of water and threw up his hands and said, 'Good Lord, is that you, Mr. Smith. I was your iceman for three years.'

"Sure enough, that noble colored boy had carried ice to my home in White Plains for nearly three years.

"I was in the American trenches when those two Connecticut regiments were surprised by the Germans and swept back out of the first, second and third trenches, with 150 men killed and more than 400 wounded in the fighting. I was there when the gallant Colonel Parker rallied his men and drove the Germans back out of the third, second and first line trenches and over a crest and captured all back, including an important position which had long been sought.

Coloured Troops Just Relieved From Front Lines Asked to Be Sent Back

3 MONTHS WITH NO RELIEF

Corporal Foster Thanks Amsterdam News for Interest—Writes of Doings.

With the American Army on the Marne, July 17.—Coloured troops are helping to hold the line. They requested the favor of being permitted to take over a part of the line of attack, although they had been holding a piece of the French sector for the last three months without relief.

American Expeditionary Force.

Friend Cyril:

I read with much interest in the copy of the Amsterdam News of May 8 relative to the present disposition of the former 15th N. Y. Infantry in France and in behalf of my comrades I desire to thank the staff for allotting such a large space for the publication of Captain Fish's letter.

The order for a battalion of our regiment to move to trenches came unexpectedly and served as a surprise to almost every member of the regiment. Our training period was cut short and soon after the holy holidays we were ending our way up to the front to a sector near a well-known river.

The recent German offensive on the Allied lines has affected us to the extent that the officers and men are busy day and night defending the trenches occupied by them. Up to this date our defensive has been successful. The old 15th has repulsed several German attacks which were preceded by an enemy artillery barrage each time. When the raiders came over they found the boys at their posts and they retreated through the barbed wire under a shower of hand grenades and bullets. This regiment has won the praise of the French Commander who has seen fit to award the Croix de Guerre to some in our ranks. By this time you have heard about one small detachment's encounter with a German patrol. Nevertheless, the Huns apparently have not given up hope even though they have been for two months trying to smash through.

Our casualities are slight and those who succumbed fell bracely with honor as our predecessors at Carrizal and San Juan Hill.

Despite the grave danger I have faced, I have had time to scan the columns of The Amsterdam News and I am abreast with the sporting situation in New York. The basketball championship for the past season is a question which only specialized critics can answer. In my opinion the team who has made the highest percentage for the season on the 1,000 per cent. basis is entitled to the pennant.

Communicate a message of success from New York's Coloured sporting legion with the 369th U. S. Infantry in the first line trenches, throughout the athletic circles.

With continued prosperity and long life to The Amsterdam News, I remain, Yours in Sport,

Germans Afraid of the Colored Soldiers.---Start Vicious Propaganda

According to press dispatches, American colored troops in France participated in the American defense against the big German offensive this week. They held their lines well, and it is reported that where they were fighting better results against the Germans were shown.

The men, despite the fact that they had been on continuous duty at one sector during the past three months, begged to be allowed to get in the fray, and they saw their heaviest fighting since leaving America.

Their white commander was in a hospital receiving treatment for a broken ankle when he heard of the men being on the firing line. Against the advice of his doctors, he summoned an automobile and was soon on the firing line, where he assumed command. The men directed a heavy artillery fire at the Germans and their work showded more damage to the Huns than at any other point along the line. The men fought with a will and a disregard of danger that won the admiration of both French and American officers.

Several weeks ago American Negro troops were commended for proving their value as fighters on the line east of Verdun. The Germans attempted to bombard the sector where they were, throwing nearly 4,000 shells near them. In the midst of this heavy fire from Hun guns, the colored troopers cooly and bravery stuck to their posts, and kept up a galling and steady fire against the enemy from machine guns and automatic guns, thus greatly harrasing the enemy.

The colored troops from America are highly regarded as fighters, and they are constantly itching to get a chance at the Kaiser's men.

NEGRO TROOPS SCORE HUNS

The use of Negro troops against the Huns and their success in the past in aiding materially in thwarting some of the Kaiser's aims have made the German propagandists and Potsdam crowd resort to misrepresent the United States because of its use of colored troops. The German wireless at Nauen has been flooding neutral countries with the report that "America must be in a very bad way if she has to resort to the use of Negro troops."

The Germans, when only Russia, France and Germany were against them, were the first to protest against the use of Negro troops, declaring this to be a white man's war. The French colonials and the Negro troops of the British have proved their valor times without number on the battlefields of Europe. Indeed, many of the French colored troops have been decorated for their valor, and some have been advanced to high rank in the army. All of this has made the Germans bring out the color question.

The entrance of the United States into the war and the sending to France of a large number of colored soldiers, along with the whites, have given the Huns cause for alarm, as they know too well the fighting qualities of hte Negro soldier.

It may be added that wnile German leaders were protesting against the Allies using colored troops some of their agents were engaged in a vain effort to incite some American colored men against their country, mentioning the fact that the prejudical conditions surrounding the colored people should make them lukewarm in their support of their country. The answer of the colored people is indicated by the willingness with which thousands of colored young men have shouldered guns in order to help "get the Kaiser."

FILM OF GALLANT 369TH REGIMENT TO BE SHOWN

(Special to The Daily Herald)

Washington, July 31.—The War College (Division of Cheif of Staff) has recently had shown before it a motion picture showing the 369th Infantry organization, now on duty overseas, at work and play near the Western front. The 369th Infantry, National Army, is the old Fifteenth New York Infantry organization, Col. William Hayward, Commander.

When this picture was shown at the War College a day or so ago, Mr. Emmett J. Scott, Cpecial Assistant to Secretary of War, was invited to be present at this private showing. Afterward, upon consultation, it was decided to release this film at the earliest possible moment to the Committee of Public Information, that it may be shown throughout the country among the colored people, that they may be informed as to the splendid showing the men of their race are making on the "other side." All of the reports which come to the War Department indicate that these men are standing the shock of war admirably and are measuring up to the highest expectations of General Pershing and their military commanders.

The Committee on Public Information, recognising the value of this picture an its aid as an extremely effective piece of propaganda, has consented to whip it into shape at an early date, for showing in the various colored and white theaters of the country.

GERMANS FEAR OUR COLORED TROOPS

128

Negro Regiment 'Out After That Kaiser.'

N Y C EVE SUN
SEPTEMBER 10, 1918

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMIES IN FRANCE, Sept. 10.—In the Woevre, the German artillery fire has increased to the intensity of a barrage. This is the only activity on this part of the front, except for patrolling encounters in Alsace-Lorraine. All the German raiders were driven off.

American negroes recently held an important sector in the Vosges, swearing to get revenge for German barbarities during August. From refugees, our patrols learned that the Germans fear the negroes, as their officers have told the men the American colored troops always cut off their prisoners' ears.

The negroes first suffered from German trickery when a sergeant and three privates met a German patrol that cried "Kamerad." The negroes did not shoot, thinking the Germans were sincere, whereupon the Huns threw hand grenades at them, killing one and wounding another.

The two remaining drove off the Germans. As a result of this treachery, the negroes are full of the spirit of revenge, and in their own words they are "going out after that Kaiser."

BOSTON MASS C S MONITOR
JUNE 22, 1918

The Negro Soldier at the Front

ONCE more the attention of the public has been called to the signal service which the Negro troops of France have rendered to the cause of the Allies. Recently that service was made the subject of a complimentary resolution in the French Chamber of Deputies, and it is now announced that a Negro deputy from Senegal is traveling through French West Africa with a view to intensifying voluntary enlistment amongst the different tribes that people those vast territories. The announcement could not come at a more favorable time than the present, when the American newspapers are enthusiastically praising the Negro troops of the United States Army at the front for their bravery, self-abnegation, and exemplary bearing. Numerous battalions have been raised among the Negro race for service abroad, and the men who compose their ranks have manifested much the same enthusiasm and comprehension of the lofty task before them as their white comrades-in-arms.

The war, it is said, has revealed to the Negro a new world. As far as the French Negro forces, which number at least 120,000 men, are concerned, their conception of service has assumed a form of patriotism almost religious in its sincerity. The point to remember with regard to the employment of French black troops is that they are in a literal sense defenders of their territories against conquest by a ruthless foe. One of the distinct objects of Germany in attacking France was the capture of the French African colonies. This circumstance was brought out in the conversations between the German Chancellor and the British Ambassador in Berlin, on July 29, 1914, when Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg declared that he was quite ready, in return for England's neutrality, to promise that Germany would not annex any territory in France, but would not make a like promise with regard to the French possessions outside of Europe. France thus had no difficulty in achieving a magnificent response to her appeal to the natives of Africa and of Far Eastern colonies to rally to the defense of their land. If one may include the Arabs of Northern Africa under the same heading, then it may be literally said that hundreds of thousands of fighting men from Africa fell into line in the French ranks and fought on the western front. That rally was a magnificent tribute to the benevolent and fraternal policy of France in Africa which has secured for her such stout defenders among the people whom she has taken under her protection, and was the best possible answer to the hypocritical protest, which was heard in Germany's note to neutrals, against the employment of native troops in the Entente armies. This protest came with poor grace from a nation which had secretly worked to create a Holy War in Asia and Africa, and a "black peril" in Africa by fomenting a revolt against the white race in the French and English colonies. Barred from using its own native troops in Europe, Germany of the conscientious scruples did not hesitate to use them against the colonial troops detailed to wrest the German colonies from their unscrupulous owners.

On the occasion of Germany's most recent protest on the subject of the employment of black troops, the note, it is fair to assume, was intended to make a particular appeal to the "sense of humanity" of the American people whose population includes 10,000,000 and more Negroes. But once again Germany failed to gauge the sentiment of other nations, or the mettle of the Negro population of the United States. Speaking generally, if the prestige of the white race has suffered in this war, then it is not because, as was pointed out in the French Chamber of Deputies, of the employment of Negro troops in the mêlée, but because of Germany's crimes.

COLORED AMERICAN SOLDIERS PUSH HUNS FIVE MILES BACK, GERMANS AFRAID OF THEM

The Houston Observer

With the American Army in France, on the Aisne Front.—Today one of the stiffest battles of the year began, near Vesle river, with the colored divisions of troops hurling back the Hun line more than five miles. The advance of the colored troops was made by a heavy fire of machine guns. 9-21-18

From the plateau the black troops took up positions in the ravines and put up a continuous fire that put the enemy on the run. Although the Germans made every effort to check the sharp advance of these colored troops, so hot and lively was the unceasing firing that the enemy's line was forced to retire, allowing the colored soldiers to again capture several towns and ammunition. As the day wore on the attacks of the colored troops became more violent—dealing blow upon blow to the Hun line. Near the town of La Farge one of the hottest bayonet fights of the week-end was witnessed here in which the colored troops played a victorious part.

The enemy had prepared to put an end to the allies' advancing spell, but when the colored troops were called in to the front line to attack they began to storm the enemy's front line trenches, giving the war whoop as they reached Hindenburg's line, using the bayonet with deadly effect. They were soon within the gates of La Farge and the enemy pushed back four miles further.

in size from 67 to 340 millimeters. The bombardment was concentrated on small areas. Many of the shells made holes from ten to fifteen feet across.

In the midst of this inferno the negroes coolly stuck to their posts, operating machine guns and automatic rifles and keeping up such a steady barrage that the German infantry failed to penetrate the American lines.

The Americans miraculously sustained only two wounded.

"Dixie luck was a-workin' with us," explained one. "We all got knocked down lots o' times, but every man got right up."

Private Henry Gaillard, of New Yok City, under shell fire, took his automatic rifle from its place of concealment, placed it on the parapet and met hte attacking Boches with a rain of bullets.

Private Harry Brown, also f New York City, a member of the Signal Corps, found a telephone line was not working. Ignoring the barrage, he went out to repair the wire. He made twenty-five repairs.

During the attack the crew of a machine gun was bowled over by a minewerfer projectile, which made a fifteen-foot hole ten feet from them. They all got up, remounted the gun and continued shooting until it jammed. Then, despite the terrible bombardment, they fixed it and again turned it on the Germans. This incident was repeated twice.

Both French and American officers reported that the negroes performed like veterans. They obeyed orders promptly, took risky duties voluntarily and compared well with the best troops on the west front.

A German raid east of St. Dies in Alsaace, was repulsed by American machine gun and rifle fire Saturday, the enemy suffering heavy loss.

An American lieutenant and eight men successfully raided a German position in Fontaine Wood, near Montdidier, Saturday morning, capturing an officer and thirty-five men and inflicting heavy casualties.

In Lorraine, American airplanes today conducted several reconnaissance expeditions.

Shell Shock Victims Aided by Crispus Attucks Circle

Two negro veterans of the 301st Quartermasters Corps, which is a part of Pershing's forces, and who were invalided home because of shell shock, arrived in Philadelphia yesterday and are being provided for by the Crispus Attucks Circle.

The men were Charles A. Mackall, of Washington, and James C. Randall. Mackall was in the front line trenches, and as a result of shell shock was unconscious for ten days. Randall's suffering from exposure, as the driver of a water tank is believed to have permanently removed him from active military service.

"Buffaloes" Receive Colors From Whitman at Union League Club

Whole Regiment Sings Star-Spangled Banner

N Y C TRIBUNE
MARCH 24, 1918

The "Buffaloes," a regiment of the negro brigade that is training at Camp Upton, and is, officially, the 367th Infantry, marched up Fifth Avenue yesterday afternoon to the stirring strains of "Dixie" and received its colors, the gift of the Union League Club, from the hand of Governor Whitman. Since "Dixie" first was a tune to live or die by the Union League Club has presented stands of colors to negro regiments, and in times less stressful than these those regiments have made enviable records.

"I charge you by all that is sacred to defend this banner with all the strength God has given you," said Governor Whitman in delivering the colors to Colonel James A. Moss at the Union League Club. "Bring it back victorious, without 'one stripe dishonored, one star obscured.'"

"We will do it," replied Colonel Moss with soldierly brevity, and the crowd burst into cheers, which suddenly were stilled.

Sing National Anthem

Three thousand and more negro voices were singing "The Star-Spangled Banner," and singing it as Fifth Avenue probably never heard it before. The "Buffaloes" were singing, and they sang as though they meant it. There was a swing, a vim, a victorious note to their rendition of the national anthem that stifled cheers and put a lump in the most brazen throat. Hats were doffed with astonishing spontaneity, and up and down the avenue spectators in olive drab snapped to attention and the salute.

The "Buffaloes" can whip their weight in wildcats, their reticent commander avers, and do it singing.

The last note died away, and before the suddenly hushed avenue resumed its normal pose the "Buffaloes" crashed gleefully into "Over There," and sang it through to the end, while the busy thoroughfare still paused. Then:

"Southrons, hear your country call you!
Up, lest worst than death befall you!"

Came the tuneful summons from the "Buffaloes'" band, while the band of the old 15th, the negro National Guard regiment that has been in France for months, joined in the insistent notes.

Commands ran down the column as officers pivoted at the first note, and some 3,600 negro fighters for world democracy stepped out like one man. The route led past Central Park and into Lenox Avenue and the heart of Harlem's Little Africa. Past stately apartment houses, where some of them had been employed, past the loafing places of "the gang" and past intent little knots of watchers, who burst into a frenzy of cheers and waving handkerchiefs as familiar and beloved faces passed, the "Buffaloes" tramped with swinging stride.

Not a face in the solid, even ranks was turned aside, not an eye strayed at the enthusiastic reception that Lenox and Seventh Avenues accorded their own. In the past the "Buffaloes" may have run elevators or errands, shot craps and danced with the girls, but now they are soldiers, and when they were dismissed yesterday afternoon New York knew it from the Union League Club to "Gawge's place."

The negro troops reached New York on Friday night and were quartered in the armory of the 69th Regiment, whose members are now winning war crosses on the field of battle. They formed in front of the armory at Twenty-sixth Street and Lexington Avenue at 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and a few minutes later started the parade which is said to be the first of such proportions in New York in which only negro troops participated since the Spanish War.

Colonel Moss was at the head of his regiment with his staff, consisting of Captain Frederick Bull, Captain C. E. Appleton, Major Charles L. Mitchell, Major M. Burgee, Captain F. R. Norris and Captain John Scott. There were fifteen companies and the regimental sanitary corps in the column.

Mayor Hylan was at the reviewing stand, where the colors were presented, as were Brigadier General E. M. Johnson, acting commandant at Camp Upton; Brigadier General Mann, commanding the Department of the East, and Brigadier General Hay, commander of the negro troops at Camp Upton.

The negro soldiers were dismissed after the parade, with permission to go home for the night. This afternoon and evening 1,000 of the singers of the regiment will appear at the Manhattan Opera House in a programme of oldtime Southern melodies and late tonight the "Buffaloes" will return to the cantonment.

NEGROES' BRAVERY TOLD OF IN HOUSE

Tale of Heroism of Two Wounded Colored Troopers Read Into Record.

PAIR ROUTED HUN RAIDERS.

With Bolo and Grenade Decimated Many Times Number.

On motion of Representative Gould, the following letter from Col. William Hayward, former Public Service Commissioner, now commander of the 369th, formerly the 15th New York Infantry, concerning the bravery of Privates Henry Johnson and Needham Roberts, colored, now with that command in France, addressed to Johnson's wife, was recently read in the House of Representatives and afterwards printed in the Congressional Record:

France, May 18, 1918.

Mrs. Edna Johnson, 23 Monroe Street, Albany, N. Y.:

My Dear Mrs. Johnson: Your husband, Private Henry Johnson, is in my regiment, the 369th United States Infantry, formerly 15th New York Infantry. He has been at all times a good soldier and is a good boy, of fine morals and upright character. To these admirable traits he has lately added the most convincing proof of fine courage and splendid fighting ability.

I regret to say that he is at the moment in a hospital, seriously, but not dangerously, wounded, the wounds having been received under such circumstances that everyone of us in the regiment would be pleased and proud to trade places with him. It was as follows:

He and Private Needham Roberts were on guard together at a small outpost of a front-line trench near to the German lines, and during the night a strong raiding party of Germans, numbering from twelve to twenty (judging by the weapons, clothing and paraphernalia they left behind and by their footprints) stole across No Man's Land and made a surprise attack in the dead of night on our two brave soldiers.

We had learned some time ago from captured German prisoners that the Germans had heard of a regiment of black Americans in this sector, and the German officers had told their men how easy to combat and capture them it would be; so this raiding party came looking for he black Americans. They did not find them asleep, however, but, on the contrary, both Henry Johnson and Needham Roberts were very much awake and alert and attending strictly to their duties. At the beginning of the attack the Germans fired a volley of bullets and grenades, and both the boys were wounded, your husband three times and Roberts twice. Then the Germans rushed the post, expecting to make an easy capture. In spite of their wounds, the two boys waited coolly and courageously, and when the Germans were within striking distance opened fire, your husband with his rifle and Private Roberts, from his helpless position on the ground, with hand grenades. The German raiding party came on in spite of their wounded, and in a few seconds our boys were at grips with the terrible foe in a desperate hand-to-hand encounter, in which the enemy outnumbered them ten to one.

The boys inflicted great loss on the enemy, but Roberts was overpowered and about to be carried away, when your husband, who had used up all the cartridges in the magazine of his rifle and had knocked one German down with the butt end of it, drew his bolo from his belt. The bolo is a short, heavy weapon carried by the American soldier, with the edge of a razor, the weight of a cleaver, and the point of a butcher knife. He rushed to the rescue of his fallen comrade, and, fighting desperately, split open, with his bolo, the head of the German who was throttling Private Roberts, and turning to the boche who had Roberts by the feet, plunged the bolo into the German's bowels. This one was the leader of the German party, and on receiving what must have been his mortal wound, exclaimed in American English, without any trace of accent, "Oh, the son of a —— got me"; thus proving that he was undoubtedly one of the so-called German-Americans who came to our country not to become a good citizen of it but to partake of its plenty and bounty and then return to fight for the Kaiser and help enslave the world. He was doubtless selected as the leader of the party to speak English and perhaps fool my soldiers by calling to them in the darkness in English not to fire, that it was a friend.

Henry laid about him right and left with his heavy knife, and Roberts, released from the grasp of the scoundrels, began again throwing hand grenades and exploding them in their midst, and the Germans, doubtless thinking it was a host instead of two brave colored boys fighting like tigers at bay, picked up their dead and wounded and sluunk away, leaving many weapons and parts of their torn, cut and shot-riddled clothing, and leaving a trail of blood which we followed at dawn clear to their lines.

We feel certain that one of the enemy was killed by rifle fire, two by your husband's bolo, one by grenades thrown by Private Roberts, and several other grievously wounded.

So it was in this way the Germans found the black Americans!

Both boys have received the citation of the French general commanding the splendid French division in which my regiment is now serving, and will receive the Croix de Guerre (Cross of War). The citation, translated, is as follows:

——— Division. May 16, 1918.
Order No. ———.

The general ——— commanding ——— D. I., mentions in orders of the division the soldiers of the Three hundred and sixty-ninth Regiment d'Infanterie, United States.

1. Johnson, Henry (No. 103,348), private in Company C.

Being on double sentry duty during the night, and having been assailed by a group composed of at least a dozen Germans, shot and disabled one of them and grieviously wounded two others with his bolo. In spite of three wounds with pistol bullets and grenades at the beginning of the fighting this man ran to the assistance of his wounded comrade, who was about to be carried away prisoner by the enemy, and continued to fight up to the retreat of the Germans.

He has given a beautiful example of courage and activity.

2. Roberts, Needham (No. 103,369), private in Company C.

Being on double sentry duty during the night, having been assailed and grievously wounded in his leg by a group of Germans, continued fighting by throwing grenades, although he was prone on the ground, up to the retreat of the enemy. Good and brave soldier.

The general requested that the citation of the division commander of the soldier Johnson be changed to a citation in the orders of the army.

Some time ago the great French general, Gouraud, placed in my hands the sum of 100 francs, to be sent to the family of the first one of my soldiers wounded in a fight with the enemy under heroic circumstances. Inasmuch as these boys were wounded simultaneously and both displayed great heroism, I think it but fair to send to each one half of the sum. Accordingly I am inclosing New York exhcange for the equivalent of 50 francs.

I am sure that you have made a splendid contribution to the cause of liberty by giving your husband to your country, and it is my hope and prayer to bring him back to you safe and sound, together with as many of his comrades as it is humanly possible by care and caution to conserve and bring back to America. But it must be borne in mind that we can not all come back; that none of us can come back until this job is done.

My cordial respects go with this letter to the wife of Henry Johnson.

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM HAYWARD, Colonel.

Mr Henry Allen Boyd, Cor. Sec.
Nat. Negro Press Association,
447 Fourth Avenue, North,
Nashville, Tenn.

Dear Mr. Boyd:

As you know, in any country war gives rise to extraordinary conditions. The things that tend to pull men down are very prominent at such a time. Immorality, gambling and drink are among these. Many men give way to these things not because they prefer wickedness, but rather because usually the wicked things appear more attractive. The man who is far away from home and therefore, away from his parents, his sitser and brothers, his friends and acquaintances—away from the refining influences of his own fireside, too often becomes a victim of the things that are bad.

What the soldier, under war conditions, would do without the Y. M. C. A. is, to a great extent shown by what he is doing with it. Its tents and dugouts and huts are found everywhere over here, and the soldier seeks one of these places whenever he has leisure time. There he can get lemonade, coco, tobacco, doughnuts cakes, candy, be entertained with movies and with high class artists from both Europe and America, receive mental, physical and spiritual instruction and always get a smile, an encouraging word and the "glad hand." Every private and every officer knows and appreciates the worth of the Y. M .C. A.

Prof. J. C. Wright of Florida, who has been engaged here in the work, will arrive in the United States some time this month. He has been selected as one of those who are to assist in the coming "drive" in November. Of course we over here are proud of this recognition and hope our people over there will show a proper appreciation for it by giving him every possible assistance.

The Commander of this Camp, learning of the selection of Mr. Wright and appreciating our efforts here, gave me the following letter, which is, I am sure, a strong testimonial for the great work being done by the Y. M. C. A. in Europe and the Orient during this most extraordinary period. It is self-explanatory and is as follows:

"Headquarters Camp Montior,
Base Section No. 1.
Sept. 18, 1918.

Mr. Wm. Stevenson,
Sec. Y. M. C. A. Hut No. 2,

My dear Mr. Stevenson:

I understand that you are about to send a representative back to the United States to tell our people what the Y. M. C. A. is doing over here for our men and I take this opportunity to add to his information, the observation of a soldier, of your great and grand work.

I have seen the workings of your huts all along the line from the front line trenches to the Base Ports, and have been a personal recipient of the comforts afforded by them on many occasions.

I have always been impressed with the zeal with which the secretaries and others have prosecuted their work, with untiring energies and with their valor and bravery, for the work at the front cannot be done except by real red blooded men.

I have been particularly interested in the activities of your hut, devoted exclusively to the interests of our colored soldiers, since my assumption of the command of this Camp, and I congratulate you on the progress you have and are now making.

Besides the splendid athletics, social and canteen services offered by yourself and your assistants, I have been much impressed by your activities in the educational departments and have been much pleased to see many of our colored soldiers, who have had but few advantages of early education ,availing themselves of the advantages offered by you in acquiring a knowledge of the elementary branches of education.

Your thrift department is the means of many of our men saving their money and purchasing money orders to send back home thereby placing their money where it should be.

Wishing you every continued and further success in your good work,

I am faithfully yours,
(signed) W. F. Creary,
Colonel Infantry, U. S. A. Commanding.

I have recently talked with numbers of soldiers who went through the battles of the Marne and Chateau Thierry. They have told me how they appreciated the work of the Y men who brought them to bacco, newspapers, etc., to the front line and of their invaluable service and encouraging words in the trenches and dugouts; and every one with whom I talked told me that he was a better man than he was before the war.

An organization which can produce such men and women volunteers for every Y worker is a volunteer, soon working without pay, should receive unstintingly both the moral and financial support of every American citizen.

The Y. M. C. A. "drive" will, I am advised come immediately after the Liberty Loan and will be polled with six other organizations. We know the people over there have given freely both their sons and their money, but we sincerely hope not one of them will overlook the opportunity to contribute to the war work fund of the Y. M. C. A. for it is the one great organization that is looking after the mental, physical and spiritual needs of our boys over here. If space and time permitted I could quote from letters of soldiers in which they express deep appreciation for services rendered them by the Y.

I write in this way and at length because the subject is of tremendous importance, and because I feel that the people back home ought to be advised of the great work being done by the organization in question. Surely the soldiers of this war are receiving care and attention the like of which no other soldiers have ever received; and this is as it should be, for they are making better, the condition of the house in which their children and their children's children must live.

To fail to respond to the call would not only be unfair to these valiant men who are fighting for a true brotherhood, but it would make it impossible for this host of Y workers to continue their labor of love.

Hoping you are well and that I may hear from you soon, I am, with best wishes.

Respectfully,
Wm. Stevenson.

NEGRO SOLDIERS MAD TO FIGHT

N Y C GLOBE
OCTOBER 2, 1918

Begged for a Chance to Get In on the Fun and Show All the Others How to Do Things.

(Associated Press Correspondence.)

WITH THE AMERICAN TROOPS IN FRANCE, Sept. 21.—American Negro soldiers in France are a source of never-ending interest and amusement to the French, who do not tire of watching and listening as they wield picks and shovels, and chant as they work in a weird minor key.

They have shown a fearlessness amounting almost to utter indifference under white officers—a carelessness, where personal danger is involved, that is at once amazing and sometimes annoying to the officers, and a desire to fight that amounts to a mania.

The American Negro soldier, in the words of a colonel who commands a regiment of them and has for years known a great deal about their characteristics, is very close to a fatalist when it comes to fear. Repeatedly his own troops bandy remarks among themselves, the gist of which is about as follows:

"Don't worry about that shell, Rastus. It ain't got your number on it."

And as the shell screams by the Negroes, who believe it had not their number, stand idly around in an exposed position. The colonel frankly admits being afraid when big shells are flying about, and seeks cover.

The first regiment which went into action, long ago now, went in primarily because it threatened to decimate itself in inactivity. Razors and knives came more and more freely into play, and the men demanded so frequently and insistently of their officers why they might not get some ment in line in a quiet sector waited for them. They proved quite as strenuous fighters in the line as they had behind it.

It goes without saying that the Negro soldier is as boastful as any in a similar profession. The marines had just covered themselves with glory in the Chateau Thierry fight when a delegation from a Negro regiment in line in a quite sector waited on the commanding officer and asked if they, too, might not get in on the "fun."

"Let us go in, colonel," they said. "We are the only real fighters. The marines are all right, of course, but just let us have a whack at the boche. Then the marines won't be in it. And as for the rest, Lord! they don't count at all."

NEGRO TROOPERS ENJOY BATTLE ROYAL

BROOKLYN N Y CITIZEN
OCTOBER 21, 1918

It's a great old game, the battle royal. It used to be that boxing promoters would get a bunch of husky black boys to climb into a ring and battle for a $10 note, the note going to the boy who was on his feet last. They've made it a little different with some of our negro troops overseas. At a recent athletic carnival in England a bunch of troopers were blindfolded and sent in a ring with the above amusing result.

Taking "Pot-Luck" In Freight Car "Pullmans" On War Front Without Complaint---Wounds Fail To Blot Out Native Sense Of Humor---Determined To Keep Up With The Procession

By RALPH W. TYLER,
Accredited Representative of The Committee on Public Information.

Somewhere in France, November 10—In the battle raging today in the American advance towards Metz, the 92nd division, one of the Colored combatant divisions over here, played a big role. Not only was its black infantry and machine gun units up at the front—in the thickest of it, but its artillery, the 167th Brigade of field artillery was on the line, behaving like veterans, laying down a barrage for the infantry that was marvelously effective, and they established a reputation which has been made by but few, among French, British or Americans, of laying down a barrage that did not entrap, and fatally so, their own men.

This has been a glorious day for the black soldiers. The fighting is still on, and I have just received the intimation that the casualty toll may be heavy, depressingly so, for Metz, and the sector around about it, is strongly fortified by the Germans, and resistance determined. Metz is considered by experts to be the strongest fortified city in the world, almost, if not so, as impregnable as the fortifications of the Dardanelles. But the Americans are hammering away at it, and only the signing of armistice terms, by the Germans, by eleven o'clock tomorrow, will save Metz from falling. Even as it is, colored soldiers are now on German soil.

The husky invaders include the colored soldiers of the 92nd Division, embracing the "Buffaloes" or 367th, the 365th and 366th regiments of Infantry and the 167th Brigade of Field Artillery, composed of the 349th, 350th and 351st regiments and 317th Trench Mortar Battery, and all are conducting themselves with a fortitude and valor that have won for them high praise from their commanding officers every time they have been put to any test.

Freight Cars Look Like "Pullman Parlor Coaches" on War Front.

Somewhere In France—To many of our people back in "the States" who saw our boys embark on fine American railroad coaches and Pullman sleepers to cover the first lap of their hoped-for pilgrimage to Berlin, the coaches they must ride in over here would arouse a mild protest. I stood at the station at Vierzon, one of France's many quaint old towns, recently and saw a long train of freight cars roll in, enroute to some point further distant. In these cars, with but a limited number of boxes to sit upon, and just the floors to stand upon, were crowded some one thousand of our own colored soldiers from "The States." But a jollier crowd never rode through American cities in Pullman sleepers and diners than these one thousand colored troopers. They accepted passage on these rude box freight cars cheerfully, for they knew they were now in war, and palace cars, downy coaches and the usual American railroad convenience were neither available nor desirable.

The point I wish to convey to the people back home is that did they but know how cheerfully—even eagerly, our boys over here accept war time conveniences, they would not worry quite so much about how the boys are faring. They are being wholesomely and plentiously fed; they are warmly clothed; they are cheerful and uncomplaining, they know this is war and for that reason know exactly what they must expect. To a soldier, who must at times sleep with but the canopy of heaven as a covering, and the earth as a mattress, a box freight car that shields him from the rain and wind is a real luxury, and he accepts it as such. There need no be any worry back home as to the maintenance of our colored soldiers over here. They receive the same substantial fare the white soldier receives, and the white soldier travels from one point in the same box freight cars as affords means of passage for colored soldiers. In short, when it comes to maintenance and equipment and consideration for the good of the American soldier, to use a trite saying—"the folks are as good as the people." There is absolutely no discrimination, and the cheerfulness of these one thousand boys whose freight cars became, in imagination, Pullman palace cars, was the proof to me that the colored boys in the ranks are getting a fifty-fifty break.

Wounds Fail to Blot Out Native Sense of Humor.

Two more stories have come to me to prove that our colored soldiers reserve and radiate their humor everywhere shells and shrapnel fly thickest. A colored soldier slightly wounded

AMERICAN BLACK SOLDIERS TAKE AND GIVE NO QUARTERS; MOST REMARKABLE WARRIORS

Huston Observer Jan 10 18

Uncle Sam's Colored "Soldier Boys" are Winning New Triumphs Almost Daily—French General Kisses Two Black Soldiers for Conspicuous Gallantry—Fighting Hourly With White Comrades in Arms, Both French and American — Help Capture and Retain Several Towns and Villages — African Blacks Also Do Valiant Service — Sing Their Great War Song as they Advance— Kaiser Objects to Black Americans.

With the American Army in France.—That the colored American soldier is in the thickest of the fray, giving a good account of himself, is attested by high French officers, who have nothing but words of praise for the valorous conduct of their black brothers in one common cause. In a recent interview, Lieutenant James Black said:. "It is a mistake for the colored people of the United States to feel that their boys are being shoved to the front against their will. The fact is, it is hard to keep them from going too far. Only yesterday two colored troopers were called before the entire regiment while a prominent French general pinned crosses of honor on their breasts and kissed them on both cheecks. These men will be sent home on a furlough to tell their own story."

This is the French method of showing admiration for a great accomplishment.

The old 15th New York Infantry, now the 369th, has seen a deal of fighting, being the first colored regiment over here and their first man to fall in battle was Corporal William Stephens, who formerly resided at 52 West 139th street, New York City. This brave warrior lost his life in General Foch's great counter attack upon the Germans in the Soissons-Chateau Thierry salient. Lieutenant James Reese Europe, former band leader of the 369th regiment, has been transferred to the Machine Gun Company.

In the recent attack the French subject peoples, Algerians, Tunisians, Moroccans and Sengalese (black) were in the thick of the fighting and bore their part of the struggle. Sengalese battalions were distributed among the French divisions and stormed behind the tanks in advance of the white Frenchmen. Other black soldiers from Africa covered themselves with great glory in their charge, singing their war song: "If I go forward, I die, if I go backward, I die; better go forward and die." With this cosmopolitan army giving fight to them the Huns were unable to withstand the allied attack.

Here is the official record of Fako Doumbia of the 51st Sengalese battalion serving at the observation post of the trench: He was three times buried by projectiles, three times released himself and resumed his post with the greatest calmness and coolheadedness, continued on duty until relieved by the commander of the company.

In the Rheims sector the 370th (former 8th Illinois) Infantry, commanded by a black officer, Colonel Franklin A. Denison, has given a good account of itself and several of the men have been cited for unusual bravery. This regiment forms a part of the 92nd Division and its attacking strength played no small part in the recent allied victory. Americans, both black and white, Englishmen, and Italians, fought between the French in this great drive. The terrific fighting of these colored Americans has caused Kaiser Bill to emit an awful howl about "black men being employed by the allies to kill white men."

BUFFALO N Y TIMES

SIDELIGHTS OF BATTLE. NEGROES CONTRIBUTE. ITEM FROM THE FRONT, CARRIER PIGEONS ANOTHER.

Among the very many good things this war is destined to bring about, will be a greater understanding of one another among the peoples of the earth. This means races as well as nations. Never again will humanity be as provincial as it has been. Civilization has broken its shell, and stepped forth into a new existence.

The whole world is thinking. Everywhere petty considerations are being laid aside. Old prejudices are forgotten, or found to be false. In the necessities of the hour, a better standard of appreciation is evolved.

So with the colored troops, here and in France,—they are winning their way by sheer force of merit, and better still, this is recognized. In Gilson Gardner's special staff despatch from Washington, to The Buffalo TIMES, on May 31st, he says:

> Reports from France show that negro troops have been taken there in large numbers. Moreover, they have been given a chance on the firing line, and as generally expected have made good soldiers. Nobody accuses the negro of physical cowardice. What is more important, the black soldier has behaved well in his every day life. Official accounts agree as to this.
> To the Europeans the negro is a novelty and an object of great interest. His songs, particularly the genuine, old-fashioned plantation melodies, never cease to entertain.

This is not only race, but world advancement; for whatever elevates one people, raises the standard of civilization for all. The colored troops left a record of honor in the Civil War; and perhaps they may achieve heights of glory in this. At all events, they are on the upward path.

Another item of human interest, is the loving tribute paid to the indispensable work of the carrier pigeons. C. C. Lyon, The Buffalo TIMES reporter with Pershing's Army in France, has written this paper most entertainingly of what these birds are doing in the awful midst of battle. He confirms the general impression that "a pigeon can cover 500 miles much more quickly than the fastest railroad train." He further says:

> When telephone lines are shot away, when airplane signaling is impossible, and the delivery of messages by soldiers is stopped—the pigeon is always on the job. He seldom fails.

Pathetic, and wonderful, too, is the fact which Mr. Lyon records, that blind pigeons, aided only by instinct, can travel great distances with almost the same rapidity back to their lofts, as is shown by birds in full possession of their sight.

Somehow or other, these narrative incidents from the Front seem to draw us nearer to the actual realization of life in the war zone, than even the more studied accounts of the great military operations. We visualize the everyday scenes, and human appreciations are quickened. It is the "touch of nature" that makes the heart respond, even as greater things exalt the soul.

BROOKLYN BATTALION LOSES LEADER; NO INFORMATION IS GIVEN AS TO THE NUMBER OF MEN KILLED AND INJURED

The New Age (NY) 11/7/18

The old 15th Regiment from New York participated in the great offensive with the French, which started September 26, capturing several French towns and losing officers and men.

Twenty officers of the regiment are reported to have escaped death and serious injury. The number of enlisted men killed is not given. Major Cobb of the Brooklyn Battalion was killed. Major Lorillard Spencer was shot through both thighs, but will recover.

Ripont was captured by the colored fighters who were the first to cross the Dormois. Sechault was another town stormed and taken over by them.

The latest information relative to the important part the old 15th took in the offensive was conveyed in a letter just received by Fred R. Moore, editor of The Age, from Colonel William Hayward.

Colonel Hayward's letter follows:

Headquarters 369th Infantry, U. S. A.
American Expeditionary Forces—France.

October 10, 1918.

Dear Fred:

"Just a line to let you know that I am safe. The regiment participated in its French Division in the great offensive starting September 26. We were with the assaulting troops and had the hardest sector to attack anywhere along the line. We assaulted the stronghold of the enemy in Champagne.

"We were in the battle for twelve days and went forward about fourteen kilometres, over hills and ridges, over rivers and through acres and acres of barbed wire, always faced by heavy fire from German artillery and machine guns.

"Spencer's battalion attacked and captured Ripont and was the first unit to cross the Dormois. He was shot through both thighs but will recover.

"Cobb's battalion (the old Brooklyn battalion) attacked Bellevue Ridge. Poor Cobb was killed by a shell.

"Major Little's battalion stormed and captured the town of Sechault and pushed beyond in the vanguard.

"Our regiment and division, what were left of them, were finally relieved.

"You will be interested to know that Lieut. Colonel Pickering, Major Little, Captain Clark and I were four of the twenty officers who came through. We know nothing about future plans. Am very tired and very lame. Will write more when I get time.

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) "William Hayward."

NEGRO HEROES HERE TO HELP HOSPITAL FUND

Twenty Boys of 'Fighting 15th' Come Over From Lakewood Hospital

RELATE EXPERIENCES

PHILADELPHIA NORTH AMERICAN
SEPTEMBER 20, 1918

Twenty wounded negro soldiers from the hospital at Lakewood, N. J., here to assist in raising funds for the Mercy Hospital, were painfully getting off the train in the Broad Street Station yesterday afternoon. The first man off the train, his leg—what was left of it—braced with an iron rod, watched his comrades being assisted from the car steps, and then solemnly recited a prayer. A passing comrade said, "Amen." But that's all that was solemn about their coming.

Down Broad street, headed by 100 negro home defense reserves, under the command of Lieutenant C. H. Polk, the wounded heroes were taken to Equity Hall, 1024 Lombard street, where they were given a lunch and were told that they were the guests of the home defense reserves. Then they loosened up.

William Gantte, of 1430 Lombard street, was the one wounded hero from Philadelphia who was in the squad. He is a member of the 302d motor supply train, and is suffering from the effects of a Hun gas shell, received while he was helping fill a shell hole in a road in the Toul sector, so that his truckload of supplies could reach the infantry, further on.

"We first run into the Germans at Kemmel Hill last November," said Gantte, "and they're a rotten lot. We were up against the Brandenburgers and they look like a lot of half-grown boys. They're no good.

"One place we were going along just ahead of the British and we came to a well with a sign on reading, 'Good Drinking Water.' We stopped to get a drink and the British yelled at us to stop. They then fished a poisoned cat out of the well. The Huns had thrown it in and poisoned the water."

Gantte's father was a Frenchman and he was born in Nova Scotia. He worked for the Adams Express Company here before he enlisted last year.

"The Fighting Fifteenth" was the chief topic of the soldiers' conversation. This regiment is the 369th infantry, but "we don't know nothin' about no 369th," said one. It's the "Fighting Fifteenth," that's the way it's known. The regiment was formerly the Fifteenth infantry, New York national guard, and its ranks include many men from Pennsylvania. One of the stunts which earned it its name was related by Sergeant Albert Johnathan, of Brooklyn, who took part in it, and who as a result may never use his arm again.

"We were at the extreme right of the line at Chateau Thierry, said Sergeant Johnathan, and were hurried out at 11 o'clock at night. We were soon under fire.

"A machine gun was giving us a lot of trouble. It was in a shell hole, and two platoons were sent after it. We were under Lieutenant Toomey. I don't know what became of the first platoon, but were were called and we went and got the gun.

"A German hit me on the shoulder with the butt of his gun. There wasn't much room for anything, and I got back at him with my bolo, and I stuck him the best way I could. He's kicking the daisies now. The bolo is certainly the best weapon in the world. I got three Germans with mine before I fainted."

"Did you take any prisoners?" Sergeant Johnathan was asked.

"No, suh!" he replied. "Prisoners take too much grub. We don' like to take 'em. They make our grub short, because they must be fed."

"Rintintin" and "Annette" were in evidence, dangling from the crutches of Samuel Slocum, of Savannah, Ga., whose feet froze in a French train last winter. "Rintintin" and "Annette" are little manikins made of bright-colored yarns, and according to Sam, who got it from the French, they are charms to protect soldiers from air raids, and are very potent. Sam is getting a general education at Lakewood, and is glad of the chance.

Guy Rankin, of Pittsburgh, a member of the 371st infantry, said that he was gassed near Brie. He was in a squad fixing barbed wire at night, when a Hun patrol attacked them and was driven off.

"We captured three Germans and two captains," said Rankin, "and they sure looked like the devil. I sure would like to be back."

Last night the heroes were taken to the Academy of Music, where they were guests at a musical comedy. Afterward a reception was held for them in Musical Fund Hall.

DARING DEEDS IN WAR RECOUNTED

Thrilling Stories Officially and Briefly Told in Giving Out British Rewards.

CORPL. DAVEY WENT AHEAD UNDER FIRE.

Admiral of the Navy Who Was Retired Came Back to Service and Distinguished Himself.

N Y C WORLD
SEPTEMBER 22, 1918

(Special Correspondence of The World.)

LONDON, Sept. 1.—Thrilling stories of bravery are tersely told in the official announcement that King George has bestowed the much coveted Victoria Cross upon five Australian soldiers. The heroes from the island continent who performed these valorous deeds are:

Corpl. Philip Davey has already won the Distinguished Conduct Medal. While his platoon was consolidating Corpl. Davey moved forward alone in face of fierce point-blank fire from a machine gun, put half the crew out of action with hand grenades, returned for more, attacked the gun again and killed the reinforced crew of eight. He then used the gun against a severe counter attack, during which he was wounded.

In Enemy Stronghold.

Corpl. Walter Ernest Brown, Distinguished Conduct Medal—Hearing that an enemy strong post was to be rushed, he made a dash toward it on his own initiative. Forced to take cover by machine gun fire, he later reached the post, knocked down an enemy with his fist and brought back an officer and eleven other ranks under heavy fire.

Sergt. S. R. McDougall charged the enemy's second wave single handed with rifle and bayonet, killing seven and capturing a machine gun, which he turned onto them, causing many casualties and routing that wave. When his ammunition ran out he seized a bayonet and charged again, killing three men and an enemy officer, who was just about to kill one of our officers. He used a Lewis gun on the enemy, killing many and enabling us to capture thirty-three prisoners. His prompt action saved the line and enabled the enemy's advance to be stopped.

Lance Corpl. Thomas Leslie Axfor Military Medal—When a platoon w delayed by uncut wire and ene machine guns inflicted heavy c alties he threw bombs among crews, jumped into the trench a charged with his bayonet, killing ten of the enemy and taking six prisoners unaided.

Driver Henry Dalziel dashed at an enemy machine gun and with his revolver killed or captured the entire crew and gun. Although badly wounded in the hand he returned and served his gun until wounded in the head.

Proud of Their Uniform.

Proud of the uniform they wear, negro soldiers of the West Afri- Frontier Force have displayed ex- he bravery, enterprise and initia- ive. The Distinguished Conduct Medal has just been awarded to a number of them for performances in the face of the enemy of which the following are typical:

Sergt. Malemu—He displayed grea gallantry under fire when his platoon forming the advance guard to a con voy of ammunition which was bein sent through a column, was am bushed by the enemy. The thre British officers were wounded. Serg Malemu took charge at once, got hi men in suitable formation and replie to the enemy's fire. Through his ac tion the surprise of the enemy's am bush was quickly counteracted ar the enemy was driven off. Serg Malemu afterward helped to remo a wounded British officer under fire

Greatest Bravery Shown.

Gunner Modi, Artillery, Nigeria Regiment, behaved with the greatest bravery, working at his gun under heavy fire until the remainder of the gun team were either killed or wounded. Though wounded, he assisted in attempts to remove the breech block, when that had been put temporarily out of action. Again, when the infantry on the left of the gun had retired, he made two more attempts to remove the block, and finally damaged it so as to render it useless. He only left the gun when ordered to do so, despite the heavy fire and the close proximity of the enemy, who were within twenty-five yards of the gun.

Sergt. Yessufu Mamprusi, Gold Coast Regiment, displayed conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty. Although his officer was killed, and he himself wounded, he remained with and directed his men. While doing so he was wounded twice more.

Private Demball Kowball, Gambia Company, when his section officer had been wounded and his section sergeant killed, took command of the section and fought them until all ammunition was expended, when he withdrew them under very heavy fire in perfect order.

An Added Clasp.

Company Sergt. Major Sumana, who had won the Distinguished Conduct Medal and to it a clasp is added now.

When his company commander was hit and the company had retired, he assisted to get the officer on to his orderly's back and followed behind, protecting him from the enemy's fire with his body. He was himself badly wounded while doing so. This non-commissioned officer's conduct has always been deserving of the highest prais, and has been marked by courage of a very high order.

Equally daring deeds are being performed on the water, and a retired Admiral, who has re-entered the navy for the period of the war, distinguished himself very recently.

When an explosion occurred on board H. M. motor launch No. 64, Commodore Sir James Startin, Knight Commander of the Bath, R. N. R. (Admiral retired), proceeded alongside. The engine room was still burning fiercely, but learning that the engineer was below he sprang down the hatch without the slightest hesitation, and succeeded in recovering the body practically unaided. In view of the fact that the bulkhead between the engine room and the forward tank had been blown down, and that the fire was blazing upon the side and the top of the forward tanks, which are built of exceedingly thin metal, and were consequently liable to burst at any moment, his action showed the utmost possible gallantry and disregard of personal safety. For this brave deed the King has awarded him the Albert Medal which was instituted in 1866 and is a recognition of an act of gallantry performed by any person whatever.

Forward Tank in Flames.

Not long ago the forward tank of H. M. motor launch 356 burst into flames. The commander and some of the crew were blown overboard and the remainder were quickly driven aft by the flames and were taken off in a skiff. By this time the flames were issuing from the cabin hatch aft, and on the surface of the water. It was then realized by the crews of adjacent vessels that the aft petrol tanks and the depth charge were being attacked by the fire and might explode at any moment. Lieut. Com. Keith Robin Hoare, Distinguished Service Order, R. N. V. R., and Lieut. Arthur Gerald Bagot, D. S. O., R. N. V. R., jumped into their dinghy, rowed to the wreck, got on board and removed the depth charge, thereby preventing an explosion which might have caused serious loss of life among the crowd of English and French sailors on the quay. These officers have also been awarded the Albert Medal for their daring act.

NEGRO HEROES SEE WAR END IN SPRING

Twenty-one Convalescents Sure Germans Cannot Stand "Gaff"

PHILA. PUBLIC LEDGER
SEPTEMBER 20, 1918

Rollicking negro heroes, invalided home from the western front, were entertained by members of their race in Philadelphia yesterday, and to these folk the boys poured out their experiences and their beliefs as to when the war will end. The majority felt that the Germans could not stand "the gaff" beyond next summer at the latest and the end might come in the spring of 1919.

These soldiers, twenty-one in number, with William Gant, a Philadelphian, among them, have been convalescent at a hospital in Lakewood and were in transfer to a base hospital "somewhere in Virginia." Upon their arrival here they were escorted by a negro company of the Home Guard to New Equity Hall, where the Red Cross had a lunch ready for them. Later they appeared at a rally to raise funds for a base hospital for negro soldiers held in the Academy of Music. They slept last night in New Equity Hall.

Private Gant, who is a member of the 302d Motor Supply Train, lived at 1430 Lombard street. He went overseas in October, and while repairing a shell hole in the Toul sector was gassed by the Germans.

"I'll tell you one thing," he said, "the German prisoners you see over there are certainly a 'rotten' bunch. They come from Berlin and Brandenburg mostly, and they look like a lot of very thin, overgrown boys. We are not allowed to talk with them, but when we capture one we are allowed to do pretty much as we please with him, and you just bet we do."

Sergeant Albert T. Onathan, of Brooklyn, who went over there with E Company of the old Fifteenth Regiment of the New York National Guard, wears two gold wound stripes. His arm was in a sling, and he said he got it while capturing a machine gun at the Champagne near Chateau Thierry during the July drive.

"Lieutenant Toomey, a white officer and Irish, was in charge of us, and with that combination we just had to take the gun from those bush Germans. I went ahead with sixteen men of my detail, after two platoons had gone ahead. The order to us was to 'take that gun,' so off we started.

"We sneaked up on them and when we went after the bush Grmans one of them walloped me with his rifle butt on the shoulder and knocked my rifle out of my hand. But I had my bolo, man, I had my bolo, and that is just the sweetest little thing on God's green earth to use against those bush Germans. They don't like that cold steel nohow."

Guy Rankin, of Pittsburgh, who went to France with the 371st Infantry, a negro regiment which trained at Camp Lee, was stricken with mustard gas in the attack near Brie, where the regiment was brigaded with the Algerians.

"Those bush Germans didn't have it on us very long," he said. "We got three Germans and two captains, and they certainly looked like the regular devil to me. I don't think much about them."

"Are you anxious to get back again and fight?" Private Rankin was asked.

"Oh," was the reply, "I wouldn't mind fighting there in the summer at all, at all. But I don't think I'd like it in the winter over there fighting; it would be a bit too cold for me, I guess."

Throng at Hospital Benefit

At the benefit last night in the Academy of Music for the new Mercy Hospital and School for Nurses, at Fiftieth street and Woodland avenue, a musical comedy in two acts entitled "You Wouldn't Know," was a feature. The building was crowded from parquet to gallery.

The hospital will contain 200 beds and have a staff of colored physicians and nurses. It is expected the hospital, which will cost $150,000, will soon be clear of debt.

Pershing Denies That Negro Troopers Given Dangerous Work Over That of Whites

Teutonic Propaganda Promptly Met—Negroes Commended For Service, Aptitude For Training

WASHINGTON, June 21.—Formal denial of reports circulated in this country, presumably by German agents, that negro soldiers with the American expeditinary forces are being given more dangerous work than the white troops was cabled to the war department today by General Pershing. The message said the negroes were in high spirits and that their only complaint was that they were not given more active service.

General Pershing said he could not commend too highly the spirit shown among the colored combat troops, "who exhibit fine capacity for quick training and eagerness for the most dangerous work."

The General's cablegram, which was in reply to one of inquiry sent by Secretary Baker, said:

"The stories, probably invented by German agetns, that colored soldiers in France are always placed in most dangerous positons and sacrificed to save white soldiers, that when wounded they are left on the ground to die without medical attendance, etc., are absolutely false.

Losses Are Cited

"The following are the losses, as reported up to June 18 in the four colored combat regiments now in France: 369th Infantry, died of wounds 3, died of disease 8; severely wounded 2; 370th Infantry, died of wounds none, died of disease 3, severely wounded none; 371st Infantry, died of wounds none; died of disease 8; severely wounded none; 372nd Infantry, died of wounds none, died of disease 3, severely wounded none. These figures show conclusively that negro troops have not thus far occupied positions as dangerous as those occupied by white troops and that their physical condition is excellent.

"A tour of inspection just completed among American negro troops by officers of the training section of these headquarters show the comprehensively high degree of training and efficiency among these troops. Their training is identical with that of other American troops serving with the French army, the effort being to lead all American troops gradually to heavy combat duty by a preliminary service in trenches in quiet sectors. Colored troops in trenches have been particularly fortunate, as one regiment had been there a month before any losses were suffered. This was almost unheard of heretofore on the western front.

Win Croix De Guerre

"The exploits of two colored infantrymen some weeks ago in repelling a much larger German patrol, killing and wounding several Germans and winning the Croix de Guerre by their gallantry, has aroused a fine spirit of emulation throughout the colored troops, all of whom are looking forward to more active service. Only regret expressed by colored troops is that they are not given more dangerous work to do. They are especially amused at the most dangerous positions and all are desirous of having more active service than has been permitted them thus far. I cannot commend too highly the spirit shown among the colored combat troops who exhibit fine capacity for quick training and eagerness for the most dangerous work."

NEGROES HAPPY IN FRENCH PORT

Rattle of "Bones" and Jazz Strains Enliven the Camps.

ALONG THE AMERICAN LINES OF COMMUNICATION.—"The Chinese laborers insist that they must have gloves when they work," the lieutenant in charge of the working battalions was explaining to the colonel in command of one of the supply bases.

"To sell them gloves an act of congress will be necessary, but if it is a military necessity we can get around it by the scratch of a pen," replied the colonel.

"Handling the heavy packing cases, they scratch their hands, and they are very careful of their hands," explained the lieutenant.

SCRATCH HALTS WORK.

"Yes, when once they get a scratch they hold up the hand and say 'Je suis malade!' and think they can't work, and, what is more, don't work until after the doctor has looked them over," asserted the colonel. "It means we lose their time and the time of our medical officers is taken up. But if we sell them gloves does that mean we must also sell them overalls, shirts, shoes and other supplies? Just how much is included in their labor contract?"

With laborers from Indio-China, Spain, Portugal, Tunis and other countries, each working under different contracts.

In addition to these men we have our own working detachments brought from the United States.

FRESH FROM THE LEVEES.

A majority of them are colored workers from the south, part of the national army. When several hundred of these, all wearing khaki army shirts and blue overalls, either bareheaded or wearing the broad campaign hats, are seen unloading a ship in a base port, or stacking crates in the warehouses farther inland, one could easily imagine oneself in New Orleans or Jacksonville, instead of 3,000 miles away in France.

The colored laborers are contented. Officers who are in charge of them say that is one reason why they are the best workers the expedition has. They are well cared for. The government rations them, just as it does the soldiers. They have a camp of their own, which hums with music and song and the "rattle of the bones" when the day's work is over. In one city where the camp is some distance from the wharves, they ride to and from work in government automobiles.

NEGROES GOOD AT PATROL WORK

Seem to Have Some Peculiar Quality for This Task That Is Lacking in White Man.

CINCINNATI O TRIBUNE
OCTOBER 1. 1918

(By Associated Press.)

WITH THE AMERICAN TROOPS IN FRANCE, Sept. 30.—American negro troopers are regarded by their officers as exceptionally good at patrol work, as raiders and scouts. They seem to have some quality lacking in the white man which enables them to slink and crawl across No Man's Land in a way that defies detection.

But the negroes never lose their latent superstition and fear of the dark. Without white officers to support them morally their value is said to deteriorate quickly. They "see things" with ease.

The negro trooper's timidity at night is best illustrated by the experience of a Captain, who found one of his men at work after dark. The negro was talking violently to himself:

"Niggah, pick up that wheel barrow and push it over there!" "Now put that barrow down!" "Tip it over and empty it." "Now wheel it back and fill it up again!"

To all of which the negro answered "Yes, sah!" and suited the action to the word. He explained to the astonished Captain that he felt less lonely and scared in the dark if he pretended a white officer was there to give him orders.

Let the average negro soldier hal and be forced to lie down for a time and he goes to sleep almost immediately, unless he is forcibly kept awake. The leaders of at least one regiment have had to adopt a plan whereby al the members of a patrol when they lie down, join hands, with the white officer at one end. He keeps the squad awake by pressing the hand of the man next to him, who repeats the pressure to his right or left and receives an answering pressure as evidence that his companions are awake.

Nevertheless, the negroes are always ready for a fight. One regiment had begged its way into a portion of the line where action was assured in the last German offensive, and that action suddenly began. Five of the officers of that regiment alone were in hospital, but heard a few hours in advance of what was coming.

The Colonel left the hospital on crutches, two other officers were carried to the trenches on litters and two more hobbled in—so as to be with their men and be assured they gave a good account of themselves. They did.

In the main the negro troops are deeply attached to their white officers and will go thru fire and flood for them—or with them. In the main also the officers are attached to the men, take pride in them and father them no end. The negroes are punctilious in such details as saluting and deference to officers and superiors, tho lax in other matters of discipline which they do not understand.

DEAD HUNS PROVE NEGRO IS FIGHTER

Alabaman Shown Northern Colored Bunch Can Carry On

TACOMA WASH TRIBUNE
OCTOBER 11. 1918

By HERBERT COREY

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, Oct. 10.—"Whoo-ee," said Sergt. William Butler of somewhere in New York city. "Whoo-ee, you bush Germans. You wanna look out foh me—foh Ah'm comin'."

His colonel quoted Sergt. Butler in this statement. His colonel commented, smilelessly, that what Sergt. Butler said was perfectly true. The other men of Butler's platoon said, according to the colonel, that:

"Dat Mister Butler, he suttenly did come a foggin' and a-rarin' thoo that theah darkness."

It was on the night of August 17 that Capt. Joe Outwater's company had a cage barrage dropped over it. Outwater is from New York, by the way. Inside the cage the boche dropped a little gas. Not much, but enough to be unpleasant. The whole situation was as badly scrambled as dropped eggs. There were no pleasant, clearly outlined, definite trench lines bounding the position—a sort of formal garden of war in which the men might wander. The position was held by strong points, and old trench lines squirmed around No Man's Land like dusty and aged snakes. Patrol parties used to get lost in these old boyaus. Sometimes they got clear inside the other fellow's line.

In one of these strong points on Outwater's front sat Lieut. G. R. Jones. Jones is from Alabama. There was a time when he was not on the best terms with the colored privates of his platoon. It was merely a difference in manner, for in Alabama race relationships differ from those of New York. Latterly Jones and his platoon were on better terms, for each had discovered the fighting blood of the other. But they were not what you'd call chummy. Jones wanted to get back to his old regiment. Once he had been taken prisoner, and his old regiment had retaken him.

"They are the real old vatted stock," said Jones, fondly. "They are fighting men."

What Happened to Jones

Jones began to be worried at his strong point. The night was dark, and there was gas in the air, and the shelling indicated some concerted action by the boche. He tried to peer into the darkness over the parapet. Then he gave that up as hopeless, and stooped over to pick up a flare cartridge from the box at his feet. As he stooped a large boche leaped on his back, and Jones and the boche went to the dirt together. The boche's thick hands were about Jones' throat:

"Silenz!" hissed the boche. "Silenz!"

It was a perfect surprise raid, of the sort the Yanks themselves like to pull off. Seventeen Germans were in the surprising group, although it later developed that three other groups were wandering about in No Man's Land. A sufficient number of these Germans had jumped on Jones and the four men in his strong point to flatten them out. Not a man on either side spoke. There was a wordless wrestle in the darkness. Then the Yanks quit fighting when they felt the hard ends of pistols jammed against their short ribs.

"Come," said their captors. "On your way"—or the German equivalent for that phrase.

The five Yanks and the Germans noiselessly climbed out of the strong point and started off down a communication trench for the exit into No Man's Land. Somewhere down the line an inspired soul set off a flare. Its nasty green light showed to Sergt. William Butler a line of German figures. At the head of the line were set Lieut. Jones and his four men, to stop any bullets that might be sent that way. Mr. Jones and the Germans saw Sergt. Butler by the same flare. He used to be a Pullman porter in New York City. His eyes and teeth are very white. They made a grand effect against the dark background, under that nasty green light. Butler had his automatic rifle at the ready.

Butler Was Ready

"Don't shoot, sergeant," howled Jo "It's only me."

He doesn't recall just why he the statement in that obviously i form, but that he made it at all a testimony to his presence of mind. He furnished another evidence of this quality immediately, for before the astounded Germans could recover from this apparition of a wide white smile in the darkness, Jones had thumped his boche in the jaw and sprawled face flat. As he threw himself down he yelled to his four captured comrades and they flattened themselves likewise. Over on his side Sergt. William Butler took a long breath and issued that warcry by which he will remain famous.

"Whoo-ee," says he. "Look out foh me, you Bush Germans—foh Ah'm comin'."

Butler just paraded around that No Man's Land with his automatic rifle and of cartridges that night. They entered abris and cleaned them, and where they had no space to sweep with the automatic they used their pistols. Butler held true, too, for next morning one German was found with his stomach cut open, as by a knife, and another with his head sawed down by a stream of bullets and another with his arm literally chopped off. He believed in concentrating his fire, Butler did. Every now and then those in the strong points could hear him chant:

"You wanna look out foh me, you Bush Germans—foh Ah'm comin'."

No one knows just how many Butler and his pair of feeders got that night, for the Germans carry their wounded off when they can. But he got a-plenty. Next morning the regimental surgeon on his rounds found Lieut. Jones of Alabama binding up a shrapnel wound in his leg. He looked at the wound for a moment, and then said in that brisk, professional manner that is the especial curse of surgeons:

"Ah, Jonesie! We'll have to evacuate you for that."

Usually "evacuation," with its weeks of idleness and cleanliness and good food in a well cared for hospital, is a little touch of paradise. But Jones swore at the surgeon in his best Alabama style:

"You go to hell," said Jonesie. "I'm going to stay with the outfit. They're fighting men."

General Pershing Exposes a German Falsehood.

N Y C SUN
JUNE 23, 1918

General PERSHING has fortunately been able to refute with unassailable statistics the German propaganda lie which was circulated among negroes in this country to convince them that black soldiers were being sent into positions of unusual danger. The prompt publication of the casualty table prepared to show exactly what their losses had been has disposed of this falsehood among intelligent men, and it is their duty as good citizens to inform their less keen fellow countrymen of the truth. While this is being done we must be on the lookout for similar enemy attacks on our national morale.

It is to be expected, for instance, that in each religious sect in the country contributing importantly to the personnel of the army an effort will be made to establish the belief that unjust discrimination is exercised against its members at the front. Similarly, attempts will be made to impose on each race in our population the false belief that its members are being compelled to bear an undue share of the common burden. All such tales will be false in fact, malicious in origin and worthy only of dismissal with contempt.

England went through this sort of thing, the method of falsification being adapted to her situation. Throughout the period of the war before our enrolment among the belligerents reports were industriously circulated here and in the British dominions which falsely represented the British commanders as exploiting colonial troops to conserve English soldiers. These reports received no credence among informed men, but they persisted among the ignorant until the British Government gave out for the guidance of the world a table explaining the exact situation. This disproved in toto the absurdities fostered by German propagandists and confirmed the opinion that thinking men had held from the beginning, that so far as the British Army was concerned each contingent was doing all that it could and that nobody was being sheltered behind others.

The way to combat German lies is to impress on everybody understanding of the fact that the German agents are all liars, whose words cannot be taken unless they are supported by convincing and unimpeachable evidence. If what a German says is corroborated by an Englishman, a Frenchman, a Belgian or an American it may be believed; but the uncorroborated word of the German must always be regarded without confidence.

Roll Call After the Battle

The Houston Observer 10-12-

The above photograph, taken expressly for The Houston Observer, shows roll call in France after the "black devils," members of the 370th (8th Illinois) Regiment, had returned from a fierce and stubborn engagement with Huns in No Man's Land, where the enemy was repulsed with heavy losses of men, guns and ammunition. Besides the prisoners and booty captured, several towns also exchanged hands, the boches being on the minus end. To the left Band Leader George E. Dulf is seen directing the band, as they celebrated the victory with national airs of America and the allies. The French huts are also easily distinguishable and the whole situation has a martial aspect. Houstonians will remember several faces in the front line, as the members of the 370th Infantry were very popular while in training at Camp Logan. The French publication, Le Mirror, is the only other publication in the world that has carried this picture, one of the latest taken in sectors occupied by American black soldiers "somewhere in France."

MISSION WORKER H. W. DANSER RECEIVES LAST LETTER OF DEAD HERO.

COMMENDS Y. M. WORK

Mrs. Albert Scott, of 346 North Montgomery street, has received word of the death of her nephew, Private Mitchel Andrew Davis, of pneumonia on November 16. Private Davis was clerk of Headquarters company, 349, F. A., A. E. F., in France. While living in this city, Mr. Davis attended the Montgomery Street mission. The last letter he wrote to H. W. Danser, his Sunday school teacher, follows:

"Dear Mr. Danser:

"Your letter received a few days ago, and I was certainly glad to hear from you and from Trenton. I thought probably that you had no idea of my whereabouts. But rest assured I will always be found in that section where the presence of earnest men are needed. This is indeed a war for freedom and liberty of all oppressed peoples. We of the recent liberated sons of America feel the necessity of coming to the aid of the oppressed of Europe more than any other American faction. When this war ends all the oppressed of humanity will have reasons to look for the Star of Hope and a brighter future.

"Yes, we are quite conscious of the causes of our being here. The Y. M. C. A. is doing good work for the boys to keep up spirits, and we appreciate the same. Since our arrival we have made three moves, and now we are on the go again. Probably we'll be in Germany before long, ere the war will come to an end. We are expecting to put things through before Xmas. Of course, it will be some time before we will arrive home.

"My regards to all the folks in Montgomery Street mission. I suppose you are still holding the fort as a faithful soldier of Christ. We over here, on the whole, have come to appreciate the reality of religion more so than before. Many boys who lived in the cellar of life prior to their entry into the army will come back new men with a firm purpose to succeed along useful lines.

"I was surprised to learn that your son was over here, but he is doing what thousands of others are doing, viz., his bit for the cause of democracy. I know you miss him and wish him all the success a father wants a son to have.

"A letter from you will be appreciated at any time. Receiving letters from home is equal to pay day. I don't know which the boys appreciate more. Hoping to hear from you soon, I am

"Yours truly,
"M. A. DAVIS."

Mr. Davis was born in Warren county, N. C., in 1890. He came to Trenton when a small boy with his aunt, Mrs. Scott, and his grandmother, Mrs. Keeler. He was of a studious disposition and was graduated from both the grammer school and the high school, working before and after hours for his uncle, Albert Scott, an express man. Later, Mr. Davis went to Washington, D. C., and attended the Howard university. He took the law course and was graduated with high honors in 1915, working at a garage in his spare time to support himself. After his completion of the college course he went to Virginia and worked for the Virginia Tribune, a newspaper there. Previous to being called into the service he was writing a book on "The Negro Race," which he did not afterwards get time to complete.

MITCHEL A. DAVIS.

THE PIAVE ROUT.

With due allowance made for possible coloration and overstatements due to natural allied zeal, the reports from the Italian front indicate clearly that the Austrian retreat has developed into rout proportions—the most complete, chaotic and sanguinary rout any army has suffered since the war began almost four years ago.

It seems that the great army of invaders marched triumphantly forward, fighting the Italian defenders back step by step over mountain and plain and across the Piave, with Venice almost in its iron grasp. Then, with the bulk of the foe well across the river, the heroic defenders, fighting with the abandoned fury of fanatics, brought the foe to a halt.

ATLANTA GA CONSTITUTION
JUNE 26, 1918

The halt was quickly turned into a bloody retreat, and that into a pell-mell scurry for the cover of the far side of the river so recently crossed. But the stream meanwhile had become swollen to almost a torrential flood, and the bridges over which the hordes of Charles had advanced were no longer there to serve in retreat!

Attempts to construct others resulted for the most part in dismal failure, and, according to an official report from the field Monday night—

> The Piave is choked with enemy dead and the debris of their equipment. The attempt of the Austrian war office to represent the retirement as voluntary is false. In only a few scattered places could the river be forded, and these were under constant pounding by the Italian artillery and allied airmen.
> The handful of bridges also were pelted with shells and air bombs.

And the report goes on to say that "it is positively established that the enemy's losses are even greater in the retreat than as a direct result of the Italian counter offensive!"

Nor is there apparent now any likelihood that the Italian forces intend letting up until the invaders are either annihilated or taken into camp, and when that happens—whichever of the two possible eventualities it may be—it probably will mean practically the elimination of Austria as an efective enemy.

The food riots in Vienna; the constantly mounting dissatisfaction with the progress of the war; the ever-increasing demands for peace and the menacing situation evolving out of the south Slav question, even before this last Austrian offensive was launched brought the dual monarchy to a point where a renewed drive into Italy had to be made—and had to be successful—in order to preserve even a semblance of unity among the civilians of the interior.

Of the conditions in Austra-Hungary just before this last disastrous offensive was put under way, The Arbeiter Zeitung, an Austrian newspaper, declared that "a couple more months of such confusion as now prevails and those who speculate on Austria's collapse will be able to jubilate."

With the latest enterprise, upon which the kaiser and the Prussian war lords in control of Austrian affairs placed such dependence, a broken and shattered failure, that day when Prussia's foes "will be able to jubilate" will indeed be near at hand!

THE NEGRO UNDER FIRE.

In every war in which the United States has ever engaged, from the revolution down to the present time, the negro has played a part and played it well.

The colored race has every reason to feel pride in the past deeds of bravery and heroism of its members on the battlefield; and judging from all reports the negro troops now in France are measuring fully up to American military standards in point of gallantry and daring under fire.

In a cabled report to Secretary of War Baker a few days ago, General Pershing said of the negro soldiers under his command:

> "The exploits of two colored infantrymen some weeks ago in repelling a much larger German patrol, killing and wounding several Germans and winning Croix de Guerre by their gallantry, has aroused a fine spirit of emulation throughout the colored troops, all of whom are looking forward to more active service. Only regret expressed by colored troops is that they are not given more dangerous work to do. They are especially amused at the most dangerous positions and all are desirous of having more active service than has been permitted them thus far. I can not commend too highly the spirit shown among the colored combat troops, who exhibit fine capacity for quick training and eagerness for the most dangerous work."

The circumstance referred to by General Pershing was that in which two negro soldiers, Henry Johnson and Needham Roberts, though both severely wounded, beat off an attack by twenty Germans in a listening post, displaying signal courage and bravery. A French divisional commander said of Private Johnson, "he gave a magnificent example of courage and energy," and of Private Roberts, whose life Johnson had saved, "he is a good and brave soldier."

General Pershing's statement to the war department was written in reply to an inquiry regarding a report that recently gained some currency among negroes in this country to the effect that the colored troops are being discriminated against in favor of the white soldiers of the American forces in the war zone.

That such stories were utterly absurd and without semblance of veracity is shown by the American commander, who opened his reply with this bold denial:

> "The stories, probably invented by German agents, that colored soldiers in France are always placed in most dangerous positions and sacrificed to save white soldiers, that when wounded they are left on ground to die without medical attention, etc., are absolutely false."

It is very evident that the negroes themselves are not chafing under the treatment they are receiving, but, on the other hand that they regret only that "they are not given more dangerous work to do"—presumably due to their characteristic penchant for amusement!

Likewise it is evident that those negroes whom force of circumstances keeps at home will have no occasion to offer any apology for those who have gone or are yet to go.

HOW A COLORED SOLDIER SEES IT

[illegible] NOVEMBER 10, 1918

Henry T. Parsons, shipping clerk for Kelly & Borum, has received a letter from James H. Raby, colored, a former employe of the company, now somewhere in France with the Infantry Band section, Headquarters Co., 808 Pioneers, American Expeditionary Force. It is dated October 28 and reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Parsons:

While sitting on the sunny hills "Somewhere in France" I take great pleasure to drop you a few lines to let you and all the members of the company know that I am well. Hope that you all are enjoying the best of health.

"Somewhere in France" I am having a fine time. Don't have to worry about getting things that can make life worth while, get up when I feel like, you know this is some life to live when you are a long ways from home.

I would not take anything for this experience. The boys who stay home and don't get a chance at the Kaiser will miss all of his life. We who are over here are giving him what he did not expect from the khaki.

We are going to have a dinner party in the Kaiser's dining-room Christmas day, because it takes boys with the khaki uniform on to make the Kaiser lay his army down.

Our band is playing the "Liberty Bells" while we are going over the top, and the Huns, hearing that song, begin to retreat.

This is a fine place for fellows when they want plenty of rum to make him feel bright in the morning. You know that would be the thing that you all like.

Everybody over here is crazy about the boys in the khaki. If the people here are crazy what will the people at home do when we come back? That will be very soon.

I never thought that you could live so easy away from home, have plenty of money and cannot spend it. It is all the time something for nothing for the boy with the khaki uniform.

After the Stars and Stripes have sailed all over Germany then I will return home with plenty of history.

NEGRO SOLDIERS OFFER THEIR BLOOD TO SAVE WOUNDED OFFICERS

11-30-18

Wallace

(Special to the National Negro Press Assocaition from Somewhere in France, by Wm. E. Stephenson, special war correspondent—"These boys (the Negro soldiers) are the most wonderful I have ever seen. They never complain; they never say they are in pain; we ask some whom we know are suffering intensely how they are getting along: "Oh, pretty well," is the statement as is just handed out as coming from Major John W. Moorehead, eminent surgeon of New York City, in charge of the large Red Cross Hospital, and who was treating a number of soldiers who had participated in the great drive which the Kansas troops were a part. This is but one instance of the scores reported where our boys, knowing the flow of carnage and blood, knowing what they were facing for the folks at home, have, even though in pain, even though they be dying, or mortally wounded, displayed courage of which even the red men of yonder days would have been proud. The report further states that Major Moorehead went to a ward where several soldiers were suffering intensively from the effects of gas and he addressed them as follows, stating: "I got two officers who need blood. Is there any one here who will volunteer to give them some of their own blood?" Before the words had died out of the Majors, or before he had a chance even to realize that he had made a statement, with one accord there came, "Sure, we will give them all they want," and every man present bared his arm and offered it to the eminent surgeon for the extracting of of blood. Four of the volunteers were accepted, their blood was taken and the transfusion made. It is reported that the officers will recover. On another occasion he said that a Negro with a wound in his arm came rushing into the hospital alone and said: "Gosh my whole regiment is destroyed, only two left, me and another fellow coming along behind me." That seemed to be all the excitement that prevailed and it is said this same fellow was ready and willing to get back into the fray. Surely good must come out of such courage. The sons of America are exhibiting a heroism such as is born only of true patriotism. A new day is coming not only for the people of France or of the United States, but for all mankind. Through all the blood, through all the shot and shell, the gates of death, men are reaching out for higher things. I know this is true for numbers of them who have been through this earthly hell on the front line say that there they felt the power of God as never before. Let those whose loved ones have gone down in battle feel proud of the fact that they are fighting for a cause that which there is none greater, the brotherhood of man.

NEGRO TROOPS PROVE VALOR

Sustain Heavy Shell-Fire from Germans.

IN THE SECTOR EAST OF VERDUN

Boches Bombarded the Negroes for Hours with Calibers of All Dimensions, but the Colored Americans Stuck to Their Posts

BROOKLYN N Y CITIZEN
JULY 1, 1918

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMIES

July 1.—Negro troops proved their valor in the line East of Verdun on June 12, it is now permissable to state. The German attempted a raid in that sector but were completely repulsed by the negroes.

The Boches began a terrific bombardment at one minute after midnight, throwing over between 3,000 and 4,000 shells from guns ranging in size from 67 to 340 millimeters. The bombardment was concentrated on small areas. Many of the shells made holes from ten to fifteen feet across.

In the midst of this inferno the negroes cooly stuck to their posts, operating machine guns and automatic rifles, and keeping up such a steady barrage that the German infantry failed to penetrate the American lines.

The Americans miraculously sustained only wounded.

"Dixie luck was a-workin' with us," expalined one. "We all got knocked down lots o' times, but every man got right up."

Private Henry Gaillard of New York City, under shell fire, took his automatic rifle from its place of concealment, placed it on the parapet, and met the attacking Boches with a rain of bullets.

Private Harry Brown, also of New York City, a member of the Signal Corps, found a telephone line was not working. Ignoring the barrage, he went out to repair the wire. He made 25 repairs.

During the attack, the crew of a machine gun was bowled over by a minenwerfer projectile, which made a 15-foot hole ten feet from them. They all got up, remounted the gun and continued shooting until it jammed. Then despite the terrible bombardment, they fixed it and again turned it on the Germans. This incident was repeated twice.

Both French and American officers reported that the negroes performed like veterans. They obeyed orders promptly, took risky duties voluntarily and compared well with the best troops on the west front.

A German raid east of St. Die, in Alsace, was repulsed by American machine gun and rifle fire Saturday, the enemy suffering heavy loss.

An American Lieutenant and 80 men successfully raided German positions in Fontaine Wood, near Montdidier, Saturday morning, capturing an officer and 35 men, and inflicting heavy casualties.

In Lorraine, American airplanes today conducted several reconnaisance expeditions.

Colors Were Carried by the Boys in Champagne Offensive

Albany, Sept. 9.—The State flags of the 15th (coloured) Regiment of Infantry and the 22d Engineers, which were carried by them when they aided in repulsing the German offensive in the Champagne, will soon be unfurled in the Executive Chamber in the Capitol, having been returned to the State by these units. The flags are stained and show bullet holes.

In a letter to Gov. Whitman telling of the action, Col. William Hayward, former Public Service Commissioner, now commander of the coloured regiment, says:

"It was a tremendous party! We were proudly a part of that splendid French Army which stood and slew and stood and slew more, just as wonderful Gen. Gouraud told us to, with machine guns, heavy and light artillery, grenades, gas, mines, tanks and aeroplanes, until the Boche no longer came, and then we went forward and picked them out of the front trenches we had evacuated purposely and left full of trouble and death for them.

"Only the 15th and 69th were in it, and we were the only Negro regiment. So just imagine, if you can, our pride to read in the German communique, in General Ludendorff's petulant list of the Allied forces against him 'white Americans' and black Americans.' We were certainly happy to be 'among those present.'

"We are back in the front line again tired but contented. My officers were reduced to thirty-six at the time of the battle; four company commanders were carried through on stretchers. I was on crutches. The boys were splendid.

"Our boys are rich with booty now. Helmets by the score, haversacks, Mauser rifles (which, by the way, they are using because they are similar to the Springfield), and thousands and thousands of rounds of ammunition, overcoats and field glasses.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE: Negro troops from America already have established themselves in Europe as being cool and reliable fighters in the front line.

Up and down the line, after the test of a year's service, you hear no doubts expressed regarding negro doughboys. They have proved themselves cool and brave soldiers in the trenches, and gentlemen when back at rest in French towns.

It is interesting to see how these negro boys mix with the French inhabitants of the village, with whom the Americans are billeted.

The French folk like the negroes and felt highly honored at the way the latter learned French. The negroes are getting extremely fluent, and it fits entirely with their scheme of things to use all French forms of politeness.

WASHINGTON D C A & N REG

A TRIBUTE TO COLORED TROOPS.

(From "The Hatchet," a newsy little uplift sheet published on board the U. S. S. George Washington.)

Who are They, Our Friends Aft?

It is not hard to tell whose sons they are—these men of the largest unit aboard. Their dusky skins identify them. But they are more than merely members of a race; they are being tried and found true to every trust imposed. One of high rank has spoken of them as the "true and safe Americans." And what did he mean? Simply this: In the great confusion incident to the declaration of war against the great "world menace" it was hard to tell just who and what the stand of each American group would be. But in all this questioning there was never a doubt as to what the attitude and position of this group would be. Traditions and ancestry spoke for them. They were the scions of those sires who followed Washington at Valley Forge, who stood with Jackson behind the cotton bales at New Orleans, who answered the call of Father Abraham 200,000 strong, who saved the Rough Rider at San Juan, who stood with Captain Boyd at Carrizal. What could they be but true Americans?

But there is something more to be said of them: They are the pick of twelve millions of their kind. Their officers, from the grade of captain down, are practically all "blood of their blood and flesh of the flesh and bone of their bone." This fact lends greater inspiration to them; greater because they know them to be most competent. Because of this sympathetic bond, because of this confidence in their ability, these men are willing to go through the "Kaiser's kingdom" (hell) and back again for these officers.

These men represent the merging of the south and the north. They are principally from Pennsylvania and Tennessee. The emotion of the south with the reason of the north makes a combination hard to beat. The officers represent all kinds and grades of schools, from staid old Harvard to the humblest academy. But they represent more! Many of them are from the Regular Army, with from three to twenty-three years of experience with the "old machine." Here again is a merger—the academic power of the school with the power born of actual experience. This, too, makes a combination hard to beat.

One last word: They are men whose chief asset is their love of song and their ability to sing under any and all circumstances. The secret of their great optimism and cheerfulness lies in their ability to "mount on the wings of song to heights serene and beautiful." If you ever feel blue or despondent, find your way aft and listen to the cheerful songs of these natural singers and 'twill drive the blues away. These men are destined to make a name because a singing regiment is a regiment hard to beat.

Who are their K. O. and field officers? The best the Regular Army could give. "Nuff sed."

Lone Red-Haired Youth Directs Vocal Enthusiasm of 20,000 as Soldiers Pass

A CASUALTY. PRIVATE REVIEWING STAND.

9-23-18

The patriotism of New York city is rather a deep-rooted sentiment. Apparently it is felt long before it is echoed and an amazing development during the big parade yesterday gives purpose to the view. One man with the right spirit, a proper location and the assistance of some ten or twenty thousand metropolitan throats developed a periodical and thunderous ovation at Thirty-fourth street and Fifth avenue, which beggared all other demonstrations along the entire line of march.

New York

The head of the parade had passed and the perfectly marching columns had swept on for nearly twenty minutes. Not fewer than twenty thousand persons thronged Fifth avenue on either side of the thoroughfare between Thirty-sixth street and Thirty-second street. They watched the regular rows which passed them with eyes wide in admiration, but except for a sudden cheer from a small group here or there there was no sound from the deeply impressed throngs.

Herald

Calls for Cheers and Gets Them.

Suddenly a young man standing on the balcony of the Waldorf-Astoria's third floor uttered a great roar. He was tall, red haired and powerful of voice, and the thousands below or within sight of him saw him raise his hands above his head after the manner of a college cheer leader.

"Three cheers for the National Army-y-y!" he bellowed, and with a slow gesture he wound up for the big cheer, with perfect rhythm and volume there arose a cheer and another, and another. It seemed as if every voice for five blocks in either direction took up the roar, and astonishment at the sudden and tremendous outburst of enthusiasm was to be seen on the precise countenances of the marching troops.

Every time a new unit arrived from that cheer on the young man on the balcony wound up again and the big cheer surpassed its predecessors. The young man had suddenly become the sole controller of a vast supply of enthusiasm.

It was high time that newspaper reporters learned who this young man was, and so they hastened through the Waldorf and to the big room which led to the balcony. It proved to be a suite occupied by Colonel Benjamin B. McAlpin. One of the big cheers had just been accomplished when the young man was asked for and came out into the corridor, somewhat bewildered.

Flat Feet Causes Him to Hide Name.

He was told that he had done a remarkable thing, and he was asked if he had any connection with Camp Upton or with the army.

"No," he said slowly, "not yet. But I have been called for the draft, and here is my green card. I'm going next week." He took a small batch of letters from his pocket. "Funny," he said. "Look, I was turned down by the marines, the navy and the Army Intelligence Bureau. I've got flat feet. But now I've been called for the draft, examined and passed and without any further ado I'll go right into the army, where I've been trying to get."

"But your name?" asked his questioners, noting that he kept his thumb over the name on the green draft card.

The young man laughed.

"Say," he said finally, "if I give you my name after telling you about my flat tootsies the whole world will know about them and I'll be out of the National Army, too. I'd tell you in a minute if it wasn't for my feet, honest."

He bowed himself through the door and a moment later a big cheer rattled the windows of the Waldorf-Astoria.

And so all that is known definitely is that one of the most remarkable cheer leaders New York ever saw has at least two troubles of his own.

One patriot parked himself on the head of Admiral Farragut in Madison square. Others were draped about all sides of the statue. If the Admiral had forgotten himself and started to shake off the snow there would have been work for one of the emergency ambulances stationed near by.

NEGRO TROOPS PROVE WORTH BY FIRE TEST

Official Accounts Find Black Soldiers Brave and Reliable.

BY GILSON GARDNER.

Washington, June 3.—War has brought oportunity to the colored race. It has meant more money and a chance to show what they can do in other directions. As members of the draft army they have acquitted themselves, according to all accounts with great credit.

Reports from France show that negro troops have been taken there in large numbers. Moreover, they have been given a chance on the firing line, and as generally expected have made good soldiers. Nobody accuses the negro of physical cowardice. What is more important, the black soldier has behaved well in his everyday life. Official accounts agree as to this.

It was announced at the time the draft was first begun that negro troops would be used largely in construction work and as stevedores. Disappointment was expressed by intelligent leaders among the race who had hoped that compulsory military service would bring a certain measure of opportunity to serve in a military way. This disappointment has been removed. Colored troops have been used to a certain extent, as white troops have, for engineering, construction and other war work, but they have also received their share of military training and have likewise had their officers' training camps.

To the Europeans the negro is a novelty and an object of great interest. His songs, particularly the genuine old-fashioned plantation melodies, never cease to entertain.

To a great many negroes military life and opoprtunity for war work comes a new emancipation from slavery—nomic slavery. They have more m than they ever had in their lives.

By GILSON GARDNER

WASHINGTON, May 30.—War has brought opportunity to the colored race. It has meant more money and a chance to show what they can do in other directions. As members of the draft army they have acquitted themselves, according to all accounts, with great credit.

Reports from France show that negro troops have been taken there in large numbers. Moreover, they have been given a chance on the firing line, and as generally expected have made good soldiers. Nobody accuses the negro of physical cowardice. What is more important, the black soldier has behaved well in his every day life. Official accounts agree as to this.

Races Harmonize.

It was announced at the time the draft was first begun that negro troops would be used largely in construction work and as stevedores. Disappointment was expressed by intelligent leaders among the race who had hoped that compulsory military service would bring a certain measure of opportunity to serve in a military way. This disappointment has been removed. Colored troops have been used to a certain extent, as white troops have, for engineering, construction and other war work, but they have also received their share of military training and have likewise had their officers' training camps.

A correspondent in France recently told of a colored captain in whose organization there was a white lieutenant, the latter an ex-newspaper reporter on a New York paper. The instance was cited as showing the harmony in which the races were able to work even in such positions.

Carry Rifles.

To the Europeans the negro is a novelty and an object of great interest. His songs, particularly the genuine old-fashioned plantation melodies, never cease to entertain. One of the marching ditties of the colored division in France celebrates the fact that while they once were armed with spade and pick they now carry rifles.

To a great many negroes military life and opportunity for war work comes as a new emancipation from slavery—economic slavery. They have more money than they ever had in their lives. The freeing of the slave did not free him from his economic bondage, and for 50 years the black men and women have had few opportunities to serve except as household drudges and as hewers of wood and drawers of water. Many technical trades were closed to them and only by mean and close methods of living were they able to exist.

NEGROES, WITH TANKS, HELP HOLD CENTRE

Enemy Forced by Resistance There to Shift His Chief Pressure to the Eastward.

N Y C TIMES
JUNE 12, 1918

WITH THE FRENCH ARMY, June 11, (Associated Press,) (Noon.)—The strongest effort, made by the Germans last night and this morning in the course of their new offensive, was in the direction of the railroad connecting Estrées-St. Denis and Montdidier. The Germans met with such resistance that they renounced for the moment their attempts in this region.

Negro troops, supported by allied tanks, which did great execution, delivered a brilliant counterattack in this vicinity and recaptured the crest, running southwest of Marqueglise, between Perte Farm and Loges Farm.

Late last night the allied infantry re-entered the village of Mery, which had formed a protective point for the German advance through the valley.

Seeing their progress hindered on this side, the Germans turned toward the other flank, and nearly reached Ribecourt, to the north of which place the hottest encounters took place in the woods of Dreslincourt.

The enemy's possession of the height of Ecouvillon, below Thiescourt, enabled him to filter troops through the small valleys, making the position of the Allies, occupying the small hillocks, perilous and causing them to retire.

The whole countryside thereabout is dotted with these small hills, which are called mountains. These form a kind of bastions, but, when turned from one side or the other, they become absolute traps for the occupants. Most of the valleys between run toward the banks of the Oise.

Forced to Bring Up Fresh Divisions.

The enemy will be forced to debouch on the plain near the Oise, where he will find himself without the shelter of woods and will be subjected to a concentrated fire of allied artillery and machine guns.

The Germans have already found it necessary to bring forward more divisions to fill the gaps in their ranks caused by the terrific allied gunfire.

All through the area of the new offensive the difficulties confronting the enemy are very great from the nature of the terrain, which comprises sharp hills, deep valleys, and thick woods.

Where his most pronounced progress has been made, in the centre of the battlefield, the ground forms a sort of hollow through which runs the main road from Senlis to Roye and the Compiègne-Roye railroad.

The Germans apparently tried to increase the rapidity of their advance by ignoring the losses, their object being to gain as much territory as possible before the Allies were able to stabilize the front. Each division seemed to have received orders to go ahead, heedless of what the others were accomplishing.

While attempting to do this, the Germans came under the fire of the allied batteries and groups of machine guns, which possess accurate range of all points.

This fierce opposition offered by the allied troops seems to have disconcerted the German high command, which expected to be able to reduce the allied salient around Noyon much more easily.

The enemy guns were busy all day yesterday and last night, but were well countered by the allied artillery. In addition, the wind changed its direction, and tens of thousands of poison gas shells fired by the Germans did more damage to themselves than to the Allies.

The German losses under the direct fire of the French artillery have been horrible. Every time the Allies counterattack they find the ground covered with German dead.

An epic struggle took place near Plemont, where the small garrison of dismounted cavalrymen may still be holding out. French soldiers who managed to get through the German lines late yesterday asserted that, before they left, the Germans had delivered several terrific assaults, all of which had been repulsed with heavy losses for the enemy.

Several villages, including Mery, Belloy, and St. Maur, changed ownership a number of times yesterday. At no moment was it possible to say positively that this or that place was occupied by the enemy or the Allies, such was the terrific nature of the conflict. On the Belloy plateau fighting went on continuously for several hours, man tackling man in single combat.

THE BLACK BAYONET FIGHTERS.

Cleveland Advocate 8-17-18

With the pre-vision of a sheer, never more did Abraham Lincoln speak than when he foresaw the black American fighting with clenched teeth and glistening bayonet in the forefront of the battles for freedom.

The news dispatches, which, of course, come from French sources, but garbled as they are, bear the following eloquent testimony to the words of the sainted emancipator:

> "London, Aug. 7.—American Colored brigaded with the army of General Gouraud, east of Rheims, are doing such remarkable work in action with their bayonets that they are now said to excell all other men on the fighting front in their use of these weapons. It is said they are particularly fond of this style of fighting, and have broken all bayonet records on the western front. So pleased are French commanders with the work of these men from the United States that all Colored regiments arriving from America will receive hearty welcomes to the fighting lines."

When these troops of the allies drive those of the Huns back to Berlin, it will not be the American Marines—brave as their exploits have been, and heavy as has been their heroic death toll, and from whose ranks such black bayonet fighters as these the French glorify are excluded; it will not be the American aviators from whose death-defying battalions such martyrs as Quentin Roosevelt have given their last full measure of devotion, and from whose ranks, also, such soldiers as these French call "comrade" are barred by American color-phobia, but it will be by these black boys, denied an equal chance, who bayonet their bloody way into Wilhelmstrasse.

When the war is won, and the veterans of the Stars and Stripes have had their last bivouac "over there"; when they have marched past the President in final review down Pennsylvania avenue; when they have returned, such of them as are left, to their humble homes to greet such of their families and friends as are left, to take up again their humble places as hewers of wood and drawers of water in American industry, they will submit to lynching, disfranchisement, jim-crow cars and segregation NO LONGER as their just portion of victory.

They are going to demand—these brave black bayonet fighters—they are going to accept nothing less than an equal place in this Republic.

They are going to be equals, as declares the Declaration of Independence, in their inalienable right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

In the right to eat the bread, without leave of anybody, which their own hands earn; they are henceforth going to be equals of every living man, and see to it, as President Wilson pronounced that the laws are kept "inviolate."

NEW YORK TIMES ON PRIVATES BILL AND NEEDHAM.

Guardian 5-25-18

(New York Times, May 21, 1918.)

Mrs. Henry Johnson—she knows him only as Bill—had faith in the prowess of her husband, if nobody else thought that he was of much account. "Bill ain't big, nor nothing like that," she said, on being informed that he had won the French War Cross on the American front, "but, boy," she went on to the reporter, "he can go some." That must be the conviction of survivors of the German raiding party that tried to wipe out Private Henry Johnson and Private Needham Roberts of the old 15th Regiment of the New York National Guard—it seems but the other day that the proposal to organiize the Negro regiment was received with tepid enthusiasm.

The Germans were in force, the two Colored privates on sentry duty did not appear formidablle, or much of an obstacle. It is true that in the rush they were desperately wounded but the supply of hand grenades happily held out—Bill, as his wife called him, also brought a bolo knife into play, handier than a razor; and, shot, clubbed, cut and grenaded, the Germans soon had enough of Bill and Needham, leaving som dead men and fragments of others on the ground. Twenty-four to two, and the two at last in possession of the field, with three wounds apiece and the glorious feeling of victory.

Gold Palm Also for Johnson.

According to the divisional order of the day, Bill of Albany "gave a magnificent exhibition of courage and energy," and Needham of Little Old New York "continued to throw hand grenades, although fallen to the ground, until the enemy was forced to flee—a good and brave soldier." The French Croix de Guerre for both, and for Bill, who slashed in such a timely way with his bolo knife, the "Gold Palm," a much-coveted distinction. It is said that the whole regiment is now clamoring for bolo knives, Private Johnson's particular personal weapon having proved so handy. The Germans will have to find as apt a name for the American Negro fighters as they have given to the kilted Scots, whom they call "The Ladies from Hell. Something demoniac there certainly was about Bill and Needham.

15th Was Opposed by New Yorkers.

It was an excellent thing, after all, to organize the 15th National Guard Regiment of New York. A merger has effaced the name, but the Negro soldiers, whom General Foch speaks of as "very strong and stout-hearted and very rash," fight well under any numerical designation. It is now the 369th Regiment. France regards them, no doubt, as the American Chasseurs d'Afrique. "I am very proud of them," says Colonel William Hayward. "They are cleam, brave men, fearing nothing."

Tribute to the 24th—13 of Them Should Never Have Been Hung.

Which reminds us of the 24th Regulars in Cuba, a Negro infantry regiment. They belonged to that "heroic brigade" of which the other commands were the historic 9th and the brilliant 13th, both white regiments. The brigade lost heavily in the storming of San Juan Ridge. But the bigger thing was to come after. Troops were wanted to police the yellow fever camp at Siboney. General Shafter ordered the 24th down from its tented field, where it was catching its breath and "resting up." Then there was this scene and incident: the regiment lined up by Major Alfred Markley, ranking officer, and a lilttle speech to those tired and battle-stained Negro soldiers — "General Shafter has selected us to take charge of the fever camp at Siboney. Those who want to volunteer, one step to the front." And all that remained of the 24th fit for duty made one stride toward the Major.

Usual Service but No Benefits Accrue.

If any regiment in Cuba, white or black, made a better record than the Twenty-fourth, for bravery, for humanity, for discipline and duty, will some one speak up But it is an old story, the galllantry and staunchness of our Negro soldiers when the country calls in the hour of her need. New York may well be proud of the 369th infantry, which was the old 15th.

NEW YORK NEGROES HAVE WON WAR FAME

Many Are Officers and Physicians in Addition to a Host Serving as Fighters and Laborers

N Y C TIMES
NOVEMBER 17, 1918

THERE have been few wars in freedom's cause in which the negro has not played a prominent part, and, true to the fighting traditions of his race, he has won new glory as a most intrepid warrior in this war for world freedom. Announcement just made from Washington places the strength of the negro units in the United States fighting forces now at more than 870,000 officers and men. The United States has commissioned more than 1,200 negro officers. When the second draft is completed there will be about half a million or more negroes in the armed forces of our nation. A large percentage of these negroes are New York men, or, at least, adopted New York soldiers.

The negro has been a factor in the winning of every war into which the United States has entered. It is not surprising, therefore, that the negroes of the United States were ready to defend world freedom even before President Wilson sounded the call to arms a year and a half ago and the negroes of New York City were the first to volunteer. This first unit already has won for itself a meed of praise, and its doings, even to the tune which its jazz band plays, and its fighting are familiar to every newspaper reader.

Officially this unit is known as the 15th Regiment, United States Army, and is attached to the First Army. It was in action west of the Meuse, and it gave an excellent account of itself; it fought as its private dance or rest or do nothing at all, wholeheartedly, and after its periods in the first-line trenches, in the rest billets, the men of this unit gathered around the parks in the little French village where they were quartered, while their good old jazz band played songs of the Southland and freedom.

This regiment was organized by Colonel William A. Hayward, who is its commander. Its organization began in July, 1916, and after it was mobilized at Camp Whitman a year later it was sent to Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, S. C., for training. Later it was reviewed in New York City, and the next that the American people heard of the 15th it was in action in France.

In this fighting these negro soldiers have shown a fearlessness that has won praise not only from their white American companions in arms, but also from the French, masters of war. Not a few of them have won the decorations of honor. They have made good all that they promised in their regimental song, which their jazz band, headed by Europe, its colored leader, played as the 15th, on review, marched through Fifth Avenue:

When Europe goes to Europe wid that big coon band
Dere'll be somethin' startin' suddenly in the Kaiser lan';
Our Yanks, when dey hear it, will get lightnin' in der feet,
An' de busted ole Hun Army'll beat a thunderous retreat.
When Europe goes to Europe wid dat Army band,
How ole London'll cheer 'em as dey march along de Strand!
An' when off in de trenches a war concert dey begin,
Dey'll never quit a-playin' till dey're paradin' in Berlin.

136

New York City claims these negroes of the 15th, and it has even been ascribed to their origin that so few suffer from shell shock. Asked why the 15th withstood the noise of battle and shell shock so much better than African negro troops fighting with the other Allies, a New York negro private is said to have replied:

"Boss, dese babies was born right under de ole Sixth Avenue L. Dey's used to shell shock."

As a matter of fact, they are, with some exceptions, Southern negroes, New York City's adopted sons. They came from nearly every Southern State, but more especially are they Virginia, Florida, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana negroes.

Many thousands of negro troops are in the combat forces overseas. The French Croix de Guerre has been conferred upon several negro soldiers for exceptional deeds of valor, and in one case a whole regiment was cited for honors.

Official and unofficial reports from Washington and from France show that the negro is represented in practically every branch of the military establishment of this country—infantry, cavalry, artillery, engineers, signal corps, including wireless telegraphy; medical corps, sanitary corps, ambulance and hospital corps, and ground section of the aviation corps. Also he is found in the stevedore regiments, labor battalions, and in all the lines of essential work back of the front. Recently one stevedore regiment was awarded honorable mention for establishing a new record for unloading the cargo from aboard a large steamship engaged in war transport and for coaling the vessel.

Negro women of New York City have established a canteen at 6 West 131st Street, for the exclusive use of negro soldiers and seamen. This canteen is officially known as Canteen 5, of the Mayor's Committee of National Defense. Under the leadership of Mrs. E. C. Goode it is being run by negro women from contributions by their own people. There are here two Red Cross units, conducted by their women and girls, and many war relief organizations which care for the families of negro soldiers who may be in need as a result of illness or other misfortune.

3,200 'BUFFALOES' PARADE HERE; GET UNION LEAGUE FLAG

N Y C EVE WORLD
MARCH 23, 1918

Negro Regiment From Camp Upton Reviewed by Whitman on Fifth Avenue.

Col. James A. Moss paraded his thirty-two hundred "Buffaloes" of the 367th Infantry from Camp Upton on Fifth Avenue this afternoon. Proud as a lion was Col. Moss of his negro boys in khaki—line on line of them in perfect formation, heads up, eyes shining as they faced the reviewing stand before the Union League Club.

And New York showed by applause that preceded and followed the battalions up the broad street that it was proud of its "Buffaloes," too. Where the white regiments from Upton had trudged in the snow a few weeks ago the negroes stepped proudly out to-day.

The regiment, which came to town last night, assembled by companies on the streets adjacent to Union Square. Promptly at 2 o'clock a bugle blew the signal to advance and, with double lines of police in the lead, the first of the regiment swung into battalion formation and started up the flag decked avenue.

The "Buffalo" band was at the front. And that band sure could play! Hundreds of the soldiers' kinspeople lining the avenue just couldn't make their feet behave when that band swung into the lilting strains of "Where Do We Go From Here?"

At the reviewing stand before the Union League Club Gov. Whitman waited, with officers of the club and prominent men from the City Administration, to perform the little ceremony of the day to which every recruit's heart had leaped forward in anticipation.

With the leading companies of the regiment massed against the opposite curb, a bugle blared and the Regimental Color Sergeant, supported by guards with fixed bayonets, stepped to the centre. Then Gov. Whitman in a brief speech presented the regiment a new stand of colors—the gift of the Union League Club.

Then the regiment continued its march up to Harlem, where it got its greatest reception from the colored people. It broke march and disbanded at 125th Street and Seventh Avenue.

NEGROES GOOD FIGHTERS

BEHAVE WELL UNDER FIRE

How Colored Regiment Repulsed Heavy German Attack

ST LOUIS MO POST DISPATCH
SEPTEMBER 8, 1918

Correspondence of Associated Press
With the American Armies in France, June, 1918

One regiment of Negroes in the American army (number deleted by censor) has had its baptism of fire on the fighting fields of France and acquitted itself so well that the French commander of the sector has cited the whole regiment as worthy of receiving the war cross. This regiment's repulse of the enemy attack on the early morning of June 12 (possibly at Belleau wood or Bouresches) was briefly referred to in the official communique.

A later and official report of the engagement brings out interesting details and gives credit to the officers and men for fine fighting qualities displayed in their initial experience under shell and machine gun fire. The French commander of that sector has given the regiment the highest possible commendation for the results accomplished and the splendid fighting spirit shown by the American Negroes.

For several days preceding the attack there were evidences that the enemy was preparing to strike a blow. Two days before one of the main points held by the regiment had been subjected to a strong bombardment of nearly 100 shells, gas and shrapnel. Prior to the heavy enemy artillery barrage occurring on the morning of the 12th, our advance groups heard movements apparently of narrow-gauge track trains in the wood back of the enemy lines, indicating they were getting ready for an attack.

Every preparation had been made for meeting the move if it came. Besides the usual combat groups at the main points of the line, a special machine gun section occupied a specially chosen position on a small salient projecting into the enemy line. It was accompanied by a combat group detailed from reserve company and carrying rifle and hand grenades.

It was 2.15 on the morning of the 12th that the order to "stand to" was given and all combat groups and the machine gun section took their fighting position. The enemy artillery now opened a violent bombardment, engaging in a "box barrage" five of our main groups and the special machine gun position. The lines of this box barrage are well defined on the ground, showing its outer circuit, with a considerable scattering of hits inside. The shells were mostly 77's, with some 155's, gas, shrapnel and high explosives. One of our points received particular attention, probably by minenwerfer, the craters of which were two yards in depth and five yards in diameter. The artillery bombardment was extremely violent at the start and tapered off gradually until it stopped after 30 minutes.

Meantime under cover of the artillery the enemy infantry began its operations, adopting the infiltering process by which detached groups are thrust forward at a number of points instead of moving in mass formation. One group came on with two light machine guns, firing a rather intense fire into one of our positions. Another group was estimated to be about 25 or 30. At another point on our front a stationary enemy patrol took position, firing with two small machine guns. Now and then squads would dart forward from their gun positions. Eight Germans got up to the wire in front of one of our positions, and four others approached at another point. Besides these assault groups which reached our line there were undoubtedly additional enemy forces in assaulting columns and suporting columns which were unable to enter the field.

The special machine-gun group under command of Lieut L. E. Shaw was in one of the most exposed centers of the fighting, being under terrible artillery fire and the fire of two German machine guns. Lieut Shaw handled this very difficult situation with cool bravery. The enemy barrage was so close that it was impossible to stand up and Lieut Shaw controled his guns by rolling from one to the other. His two guns fired 5000 rounds.

Under this violent onslaught the men stuck to their posts, carried out every order without hesitation, often under galling fire, and showed a high degree of skill with their weapons and coolness and courage. Each machine gun jammed three times, was partly disassembled and cleaned under fire, continuing in action throughout the engagement.

One team fired 14 clips when the gun jammed. Reporting this to Lieut Shaw they were ordered to clear the jam. While under intense fire of artillery and machine guns they coolly dismounted the gun, remounted it and continued firing until ordered to cease. The fire of this machine-gun section was doubtless wholly unexpected by the enemy, and this fact coupled with the effective fire laid down was chiefly instrumental in causing the withdrawal of the enemy.

There were instances of individual bravery during the action. Private Howard Gaillard with a small rapid-fire piece was unable from his position to get a good fire to bear upon the advancing enemy groups, so he coolly and with entire disregard of danger, mounted the parapet, and while enemy bullets were flying around him, fired his rapid-fire piece from the hip, first at one group and then at the other. Privates Smithfield Jones and George Woods are especially mentioned for their coolness in the face of violent shelling when they dismounted the machine guns and then reassembled them and continued firing until the close of the action. Lieut R. C. Grame was in command of the group which received the brunt of the enemy fire which, besides the barrage, added a heavy fire of large minenwerfers. There was no flinching; the group always worked under perfect control, keeping all combat posts manned though three men were knocked down by the explosion of shells. Others commended for courage in the face of fire are Corporal Frank Harden, Private H. D. Brown, Corporal Bean, Sergeant G. A. Morton and Private Sanders.

From the elaborate artillery preparation, the size of the box barrage, and the extensive front occupied, the coup de main attempted by the enemy was clearly intended to be on a rather extensive scale.

Whatever may have been the object of the attack it was successfully frustrated. No enemy party succeeded in getting within assaulting distance or any part of the line except at one point and here they were quickly pressed back and then driven off. The shell-torn condition of the ground tells of the fierceness of the action. That the enemy suffered considerably in casualties is not doubted, as some of their groups pushed close into the machine gun fire, but as their men fell they were carried off. The casualties on our side were small and none of them serious.

The chief importance of the action was in bringing this American unit for the first time under fire and demonstrating the steadiness and fighting ability of the men.

The Negro Soldier

The parade of the negro troops last Saturday recalled history. It recalled Shaw at the head of the freedmen who were to seal their courage and soldierly devotion in the assault on Fort Wagner. It recalled the great experiment of the Sixties in making disciplined fighters out of men who had known nothing but the abjectness of slavery and who were still confusedly classified, not as men, but as contraband.

N Y C TRIBUNE
MARCH 25, 1918

The negro soldier proved his mettle in the Civil War. "The colored troops fought nobly" was more than a perfunctory phrase. It told an unvarnished truth. And the Spanish War brought added confirmation of the theory that the American negro yields rank to none in capacity to master the trade and acquire the virtues of the soldier.

He will show his worth again in this war—as great a war for human freedom as the one in which he fought in the armies of the North against disunion and for his own enfranchisement.

WHEN WE GET OVER THERE

Chicago Defender 7-13-18

A young recruit just arrived at training camp was talking over the recent German drive with several companions. "Yes," said he, "they drove the French and English back 28 miles. But when we colored fellows get over there, it will be different, won't it?" Naturally everybody agreed that it would.

There are various estimates of the number of colored Americans now in France, some of them as high as 50,000. On the other hand, a statement embracing the record of colored soldiers read into the Congressional Record last week by Representative Walter M. Chandler of New York, quoting a survey of Mr. John E. Bruce, shows 500,000 black and colored men fighting on the side of the Allies in Europe. The United States, according to Secretary Baker, has 700,000 soldiers in France. There are then nine times as many African black men at the front as American black men and within 250,000 as many African black men as Americans, black and white.

These black Africans, mostly six-footers, born fighters able to clear a fence their own height easily and doing 18 feet in a broad jump with no exertion, have already made a record on Europena battlefields. A dispatch to the London Times dated May 29th, quotes a British officer as saying: "I have never seen finer fighters than these French Colonials. Another dispatch of the Associated Press of June 6, states that these same troopers have won the respect of the Americans, which left-handed praise of course means they did something under fire that Americans were afraid to do.

The point to be made is this: This war cannot be won by sheer strength and force of numbers. If it could have been so won, Russia would have dictated peace from the beginning, Colored troops on European battlefields will not make it materially "different," that is to drive the Germans back 28 miles instead of themselves retreating that distance. The Allies have first got to have more men, more ships, more guns, more gas, more aeroplanes, and more genuine patriotic spirit, which is the same as saying more democracy at home.

NEW YORK TOWN TOPICS

THERE is not a colored man in New York who has not held up his head higher and imparted a suspicion of additional swagger to his walk since the arrival of the news from Europe of the heroism of a couple of privates of our city's splendid Negro regiment, the 369th Infantry, formerly the 15th, of the New York National Guard, and now at the front in France. The two men in question, though severely wounded, beat off an attack by twenty Germans, forcing them to flight. For this feat they have each been awarded the Croix de Guerre by the French Government, and have been extolled in General Orders not only by their own General Jack Pershing, but also by the Commander-in-Chief of all the allied forces, General Foch, in the Orders of the Day issued to all the armies now in France. Their white officers cannot speak highly enough about our Darkies of the 369th, so many of whom hail from Harlem. They are white, these officers, who include such men as former Public Service Commissioner Colonel William Hayward and Captain Hamilton Fish, 2d. It is necessary to emphasize this. For in order to prevent themselves from being picked off, as officers, by German snipers, they have taken to blackening their faces, with burnt cork, like so many colored minstrels, and are now hardly distinguishable at all from their devoted friends and comrades, the Darkies serving under their orders.

STEVEDORES INDISPENSIBLE TO A. E. F. SAYS WAR CORRESPONDENT. WM. E. STEVENSON, GIVES IMPRESSIONS ON CLOSING DAY OF HOSTILITIES.

11-29-18

"Somewhere in France," November 11, 1918. Mr. Henry Allen Boyd, Nashville, Tenn., Dear Sir—Of course everybody knows that hostilities came to an end today at eleven o'clock and, therefore I shall say nothing concerning the signing of the armistice. However, I cannot resist the temptation of giving you an idea of what happened here when it became known that Germany hand laid down her arms.

As I rode in a truck crowded with American soldiers, to a town a few miles away from here, all along the way children and old and wrinkled men and women waved their hands and greeted us with cheers of "La guerre est fini," "the war is ended," and Vive l'America," long live America.

It has been said that when you weep you weep alone, but that the world laughs with you. We know that the world has sympathized with France, but I believe, considering what I saw today, that its heart overflowed with joy. Every kind of whistle—steamship, yacht, factory, engine, automobile horns, etc., vied with each other in an effort to announce to the people that the brutal injustices done them by Germany had been avenged and that once more they were to be allowed to live in peace and harmony under their own vine and fig tree.

Great numbers of soldiers were relieved from their duties and the streets of the town were choked with thousands of people who yelled themselves hoarse as the parade passed. It was deeply impressive to see people from so many conutries, though speaking different languages, trying to understand each other. And they did understand, for actions speak louder than words; and the smiles and laughter constituted a language that all spoke.

A heavy burden had been lifted from the hearts of many by the valor and bravery of the Allied soldiers, and the feelings of the people were free rein; even the German prisoners wore a smile that wouldn't come of.

As I stood and watched this smiling, laughing, happy and surging mass of humans I could hardly realize that I was in beautiful France witnessing a celebration of the end of the greatest of wars; great no only because of the number of men engaged and lost but great also because it had been fought on the name of democracy, the effect of which all men should now feel.

In the parade bands of various nations competed with each other in the playing of American and the La Marseillaise, and the only Colored band in this vicinity so thrilled the crowd when it played "It's a Long, Long Trail," etc., that it sang the chorus with it.

As the shades of night fell and I wended my way toward my quarters with our good Chaplain (God bless him, he has worked harmoniously with us in our efforts), the populace seemed to be preparing for another celebration, the time of the end of which no man knew.

France, England, Italy, America, etc., have, suffered untold agonies—mental and physical and all are happy that this bloody conflict is ended. However, I am sure no nation so highly appreciates the victory as the French, for on her sail, for more than four years, his unprecedented war has been waging. The numberless women—young and middle aged, garbed in black which one sees everywhere, are a living testimony of the courage and patriotism of the millions of her dead. Their remains lie buried beneath the sod of the many beautiful cemeteries of France. Their bodies have been killed but their little white crosses which mark their last resting places proclaim to the world that might is not right but that justice must and will prevail.

According to a statement of one of the high officials of this country, France has lost 2,500,000 men, a fifteenth part of her population. He says further that—

"Three hundred and fifty thousand homes have been destroyed. To build them up again, buildings without their furnishings, 6,000,000 days of work will be required, involving an outlay of 10,000,000,000 francs, together with building material."

Speaking of the assistance the United Staes can render France, he says

"I tell you frankly what we expect from you. We want first immediate assistance in the matter of labor. We hope that your technical and other units in France will be able to co-operate in the effort."

The Colored men of the United States have made a great record over here, both as fighters and "hewers of wood and drawers of water." The stevedores, engineers and labor companies, thousands of the men of which are Colored, have done a big "bit" in winning the war. They have unloaded the ships, loaded the trains, built the warehouses, repaired the roads under fire, and kept food and other supplies always on the way to the front. I know of one Colored organization that made a record in the removal of freight, and I have been informed that there are others

Fighting has ceased it is true, but a stupendous job confronts the soldiers in the form of rebuilding the villages destroyed by the Germans. It will be necessary to furnish their spare time in a wholesome manner. This the Y. M. C. A. will do. Everyboy at home should do all he can do to assist in this work and I hope that every American citizen will consider it a privilege to continue to give liberally of his means to the Y. M. C. A. After a year's service with the "Y" both in America and in France, I think I am qualified to speak of its many benefits to the soldier. It not only caters to him physically and socially and administers to him spiritually, but it has put on foot, by request of the Army, an educational program of immense proportions. Surely it merits the support of at least every citizen whose boy is over here.

While America has lost men she has helped materially in the winning of a principle the benefit of which a great honor, one that cannot be effaced from her escutcheon; but even a greater one will come to her when she will have done her part in the rebuilding of the homes of the people which the Germans have destroyed.

France is free again. The eleventh month, the eleventh day and the eleventh hour will never be forgotten. As the United States now celebrates the anniversary of the declaration of Independence, so also, no doubt, will the nations of the world celebrate the eleventh of November as the day every country should reap. This is upon which they freed themselves from the menace of Militarism.

Before leaving the shores of America we sang "Over there, over here and we won't come back till its over, over there."

"We came, we saw, we conquered."

Respectfully,
WM. STEVENSON.

NEGRO SOLDIERS MARCHED INTO OCEAN—FOR A BATH

RAMSEY N J JOURNAL
NOVEMBER 28 1918

As the negro stevadores marched to work, winter and summer, rain or shine, night or day, they were always, whistling or singing as they marched, to the wonderment of French and English alike, writes W. L. Stidjer, in the Outlook. Their spirits never seemed to be dampened. They always marched to music of their own making. There was that baseball game when an entire company of negroes, watching their team at the climax of the game, when one negro boy had knocked a home run, ran around the bases with him, more than two hundred laughing, shouting, grinning, singing, yelling negroes, helping to bring in the score that won the game.

Then there was that Sunday morning when several white captains decided that their negro boys should have a bath. They took their boys down to an ocean beach. It was a bit chilly. The negroes stripped at order, but they didn't like the idea of going into that cold ocean water. One captain solved the difficulty. He took his own clothes off. He got in front of his men. He lined them up in formation. Then he said: "Now, boys, we're going to play that ocean is full of Germans. You stevedores are always complaining about not getting up front, and you tell me what you'd do to the Germans if you got up front. Now I'm going to see how much nerve you've got. When I say, 'Forward! March!' it is a military order. I'm going to lead you in military formation.

"Forward March!"

And into the surf that company of black soldiers marched, into that cold ocean water, dreading it with all their souls, but soldiers to the core, without a quaver, eyes to the front, heads up, chests out, unflinchingly, up to their knees, up to their waists, up to their chins, when the captain shouted, "As you were," and such a hilarious, shouting, laughing, splashing, jumping, yelling, fun filled hour as followed the world never saw. The geaming of white teeth, the flashing of ebony limbs through green water and under sparkling sunlight that Sunday morning was full of a fine type of fun and laughter that made the world a better place to live in, and certainly a cleaner place.

FURTHER PLANS TO HONOR NEGRO HERO

Mayor Names Committee to Arrange Reception For Neadom Roberts

Mayor Donnelly today announced the appointment of a Citizens' Committee to formulate plans for an appropriate reception to Private Neadom Roberts on the occasion of his homecoming. The famous negro soldier will return to his home in this city next week and it is proposed to hold the public reception in his honor next Wednesday evening.

Roberts, who is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Norman J. Roberts, 249 Church Street, received the French Cross of Honor and a personal citation from General Pershing for brave conduct on the battlefields. The Trenton boy, in company with another negro soldier, put more than a score of Germans to rout after they had been surrounded by the enemy on the west front. Both men were severely wounded during the melee.

Roberts has been convalescing at the soldiers' hospital at Cape May since his return to this country.

In appointing a committee on arrangements today, Mayor Donnelly announced that a Ladies' Auxiliary Commmittee would also be named later. The following is the personnel of the committee which the Mayor has appointed, and the first meeting will be held tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock in the District Court Chamber, City Hall:

THE NEGRO IN THE WAR

A WRITER in the Vigilantes, discussing the war as a great leveler, and a great educator in revealing the character of men, pays tribute to the patriotic black race of American birth. He says:

BAKERSFIELD CAL. CALIFN.
MAY 6. 1918

"There is a personage nearer home that we must be prepared to lose, Mistah Johnston, the Darktown Coon. He is no more. Gradually there has appeared in his place a stern young American, trained and alert, musket in hand. There is no hyphen to his name. His forefathers were Africans, but he is loyal United States.

When the colored troops marched down Fifth avenue for the last time before going to France, the newspapers reported that they were given a 'tumultuous ovation.' As a matter of fact there was little cheering. The dense masses that lined the side walks and filled the windows and overhanging balconies looked on in growing wonder. Here and there a patter of gloved hands or a 'bravo' was drowned in the beat of drums and the tramp of many feet. The sight of the long, long line of khaki-clad figures marching like clock-work; the strange grim faces that might have been cast in bronze—eyes straight ahead, with not a side-glance or a gleam of white teeth; company after company led by smart, soldierly colored officers, all on their way to the battlefront, was too awe-inspiring for noise. The crowds gave them the deeper homage of breathless surprised silence. They had come to applaud Mr. Johnston and beheld in his place a bold warrior who commanded their respect and admiration."

COLORED TROOPS BRAVE.

It does not need the splendid fighting of two colored soldiers, as reported by General Pershing, to remind us that the colored man under the Stars and Stripes is a worthy companion of his white brother in the battle for freedom. In fact, the colored man has always been a great fighter.

BRIDGEPORT CONN POST
MAY 21 1918

Britain has made the most of this fighting spirit, and France has not neglected it. Kipling has made it immortal in his famous reference to "Fuzzy-Wuzzy," the poor benighted heathen who broke a British square.

If the man of color could do that in his wild state, surely he is capable of greater things under the benign influence of civilization and freedom.

Hence it comes about that in the American communique just made public the names of Privates Johnson and Roberts, with the American Colored Regiment, are especially mentioned.

While on sentry duty these two men were attacked by twenty Huns. It was hand to hand fighting and the two held twenty until relief came and the twenty fled.

As an honest old citizen, long resident in Bridgeport, who came from the island of much trouble, said while viewing the parade on Saturday representing all nations, tongues and creeds, "How can they lick us?"

That is the spirit. In this war colored men fight for liberty as desperately as the most advanced whites. Britain has a million at it and France has half as many. America will have her share, too. And they will do their part well, that is certain, just as in our Civil War at Fort Wagner and other fields, and again in Cuba and the Philippines, twenty years ago.

FRENCH AWARD CROSSES

Major Spencer, on Crutches, Describes Bravery Shown Under Rain of Shells.

N Y C SUN
DECEMBER 4, 1918

Col. William Hayward, former Public Service Commissioner and now commanding officer of the old Fifteenth New York Infantry, tells of the experiences of the State's negro regiment in the great offensive in a letter just received by Gov. Charles S. Whitman. The letter, as given to the public yesterday with the permission of the Governor, said in part:

"There is so much to write about I feel like throwing down my pen and giving up, for to write one-tenth would fill a great book—and what shall I leave out?

"You surely have heard we're in the great offensive starting September 26. It expresses it mildly. At times it seemed to me we were the offensive. Twelve days and nights our division (French) fought on. We advanced fourteen kilometers (nine or ten miles).

"We had two weeks out for rest, then back in line in a sector the mere mention of which makes the Frenchman, officer and poilu, raise his eyebrows and shrug his shoulders. We lost a man an hour and an officer a day there for a while. It was from this sector we attacked on September 26, though all but two battalions of our division were out tuning up for several days before.

Into the Jaws of Death.

"At 5:25 we started and after that for twelve days it was inch by inch, foot by foot. German cannons and machine guns it seemed to me were just growing out of the ground. Poor Lorry (Major Lorillard Spencer, Whitman's military secretary) was hit six times by machine guns almost at the start.

"We had everything happen to us which ever happened to a regiment and a lot of things we got up for the first time, I'm sure. It was the most terrible experience, and yet perfectly fascinating and marvellous.

"I can't attempt to describe those days, the attacks against acres of barbed wire, trenches, ridges, ruined towns and the old Boche fighting like a tiger to keep each one. I saw shells fall on water and explode the same as if they had hit the ground. When we crossed the D—— River the Boche had our range and the water looked like a hailstorm was falling on its surface. We went across a cemetery which had been used up to the time of the attack in one town, a civilian cemetery. Our guns and theirs had literally blown the graves out into the open. The recently killed soldiers were by no means the most gruesome sight at that revolting place.

Vision of Terrible Fighting.

"We finally on the fourth day gained the heights overlooking the marvellous plain and valley and I saw what I'm sure has never been given to man to see before. I saw four divisions of our troops attack abreast (twelve regiments). The two artillery forces, ours and Boche, firing from behind, laid down terrible barrages on each other's infantry (the way artillery duels generally go—against each other's infantry and not each other). It was like a double belt of flame, smoke, tossed up earth, men and debris for four kilometers that I could see.

"Major Little's battalion was leading there and getting romped hard. The air was full constantly of battles between individual planes and whole escadrilles. We saw fifty-seven French planes go over together, but the Boche, it seemed to me, could always send a plane over us to indicate by rockets where our line was for his artillery to burn us up.

"Suffice it to say we got cited, the regiment will receive the Croix de Guerre for its colors and each officer mentioned by name personally, provided the Lieutenant or other officer at G H Q., A. E. F., decides the French are not making a hideous mistake in thus honoring an American regiment. Many 'missing' were wounded and evacuated through aid stations of neighboring units."

Bravery of Spencer's Men.

Resting on his crutches in the Union Club yesterday afternoon, Major Lorillard Spencer, commander of the Third Battalion of the Fifteenth New York Infantry, told of the bravery of those New York negroes who had an important share in the scrap that started when the Germans started banging the Allies' line last summer.

"I remember the worst fight early in June when the Germans launched a severe attack on my battalion, and the men stuck to their posts admirably, using hand grenades and machine guns to check the onslaught. Company M, commanded by Capt. David l'Esperance, bore the brunt of it, and Capt. Shaw, a New York insurance broker, had charge of the machine gun section, which was so placed that it surprised the attackers as they streamed toward our trenches and sprayed death among them. The Boche dropped 'minnies' around us, and these giant aerial torpedoes gouged big holes in the earth, burying some of my men.

"Even the first time they went out in the open under heavy shell fire they were unafraid. On July 15 they were ordered to take up front line positions, and the road was shelled continually. Some companies had only two officers, and in some cases units went up with only non-coms in charge. In the fight west of the Argonne, when we were brigaded with the Fourth French Army, these boys did nobly, and on one occasion when we were caught in a box barrage and fought the enemy without a man leaving his post, twenty-four were cited by the French General for bravery."

OLD FIFTEENTH USED AS SHOCK REGIMENT

Age 12-28-18

Francis S. Marshall, Sergeant-Major 1st Battalion, 369th Infantry, who is said to be the only colored employee of the Rockefeller Foundation with the American Expeditionary Forces, in a personal letter to the Editor of The Age, writes as follows:

Just a line to let you know that on the eve of Thanksgiving the hearts of the survivors of the old 15th New York Infantry are with the dear beloved folks at home. We have been a shock regiment since our entrance into action several months past, and for good work in offensives, where we held the honor post, we have received the highest honors of any American regiment in France. The flag has been awarded, the Croix de Guerre, and I might add that the regiment has surely earned every stripe in it. I have a wonderful story of the regiment, which I compiled during one year's battling, and it will bring your hair straight from the root to hear it—real live stuff.

First Negro Troops to Return Among Those Aboard Big British Ship—Royal Welcome from Crowds Along Water Front.

N Y C TELEGRAM
DECEMBER 18, 1918

The first negro troops from the war zone arrived here to-day on board the White Star line steamship Celtic, which docked at pier No. 60, North River, shortly after nine o'clock with 155 officers and 2,122 men. The transport was given a great ovation as she steamed up the North River after lying at anchor all night near Robbins Reef, off St. George, Staten Island.

The Celtic passed Quarantine late in the afternoon and started for her pier, but Captain Hambleton, who is in command, decided the troops could be landed more efficiently and with less confusion if he waited until this morning, so he dropped anchor off the reef.

The police boat Patrol, with Rodman Wanamaker, chairman, and other members of the Mayor's Committee of Welcome aboard, greeted the Celtic as she came into Quarantine, and again to-day went down the bay and accompanied the big transport to her pier.

Harbor Craft Shriek.

The same scenes of enthusiastic welcome in the harbor, along the Battery wall and at the pier on the arrival of previous transports, were again witnessed yesterday afternoon and this morning. Harbor craft shrieked a welcome with their whistles and horns and bells, while from the shore there came across the water to the big steamship the cheers of thousands of spectators, the shrill of sirens, the ringing of church bells and the music of bands.

Two more transports are expected to arrive to-day, the Henry R. Mallory, an American vessel that left Bordeaux December 8 with 45 officers and 1,436 men aboard, and the Dochra, also an American steamship, which carries, beside troops the number of which is not known, thirty-four civilians.

The Mayor's Committee of Welcome to Homecoming Troops greeted the soldiers aboard the Celtic from the Patrol shortly after five o'clock last night. The huge siren on the police boat screeched out the message that another contingent of Uncle Sam's fighters had reached their native shores. Passing Staten Island ferry boats loaded down with commuters homeward bound, while other bound for the Battery crowded with shipyard workers, took up the cue and soon they were followed by numerous other craft. There was a continuous tooting of whistles for nearly an hour.

The Fire Department Band on board the patrol when it reached the starboard side of the Celtic played airs which brought three mighty cheers from the boys on board. Many of them stretched out their arms appealingly and began to yell, "Take us off," and "Give us a look at the Bay White Way," "Oh, you cops, lock us up," and similar requests.

Acting Captain James W. Hallock, in command of the Marine Division of the Police Department, shouted that he thought they were better off on board the Celtic and that, anyway, a great reception was waiting for them on the morrow, which could only be given them by daylight.

Among those on board the Celtic are Lieutenant Thomas G. Carlin, commanding Company L, of the 105th infantry, of the Twenty-seventh division. He was was wounded and gassed at St. Souplet.

"On October 27," said Lieutenant Carlin, who lives with his wife at No. 50 Bay Thirty-second street, Brooklyn, before entering the service, "The 106th infantry, which is the old Twenty-third regiment, of Brooklyn, was in line with our Third battalion. We bucked their line so hard that we dug clean into the middle of it.

Pushed Back to River.

The Twenty-seventh division, with the Thirtieth division, made up of Tennessee troops, came in our right and began giving the Hindenburg line some great old kicking, then the pushing started. We pushed and pushed them to the river and then we drove them back head over heels to the Sambie Canal."

Lieutenant Gilbert P. Bogert, who makes his home in Glen Ridge, N. J., a member of the United States Army Air Service, carries two decorations awarded him by Italy for splendid work done there in connection with Italian air fighters.

One of Lieutenant Bogert's greatest achievements was his flight over the great Austrian naval base in Polar Harbor in a Camproni machine. He dropped bombs from a height of 250 feet, which resulted in wrecking two destroyers and the arsenal containing munitions and other supplies.

According to one of the other officers aboard, Lieutenant Bogert was the only American ace serving with the Italians. Lieutenant Paul Winslow, of River Forest, Chicago, a member of the United States Air Service, who flew in an S. E. 5 small scout machine, who was attached to the Fifty-sixth British Squadron, brought down five enemy machines.

Lieutenant Peter Campbell, of the Twenty-seventh division, lived with his mother at No. 14 Park place, Brooklyn, before he enlisted. He was a member of the Twenty-third Regiment National Guard, with which organization he saw service at the Mexican border. He was wounded at Flanders on August 31, when he was shot in his right arm.

Famous Negro Regiment.

There are five members of the Fifteenth infantry, Colonel William Hayward's famous negro regiment, on board.

Private Loe Vavanagh, of No. 139 Navy street, Brooklyn, a member of Company K of the 106th infantry, was gassed and hit by shrapnel in the Argonne Forest shortly after the "Lost Battalion" had been rescued.

Lieutenant John C. Donaldson, of Wyoming avenue, Washington, a son of Major General Donaldson, on General Pershing's staff, was another officer who acquitted himself in a heroic manner.

Through mix-up in the deliverance of service records along with the transfer and discharge of many of the boys who have been across, especially those who are hospital cases, army pay has been held up and many of these soldiers are in hospitals of New York and walking the streets of the city without a dollar in their pockets.

PAY TRIBUTE TO RACE TROOPS.

The Oakland Tribune 12-21-18

PARIS, Oct. 10.—The Negro will come out of the war with a great deal more respect for humanity and a great deal more of the respect of the American people.

This is a statement by Charles McCarthy after talking to French officers in charge of Negro troops and watching the activities of these troops in the second battle of the Marne.

The American Negro stands up in the whole work required in the army, particularly the fighting, better than the Negroes of any other nation. A great deal of doubt was expressed by French officers regarding the value of the Negro in the first line trenches, but after trying them out in every manner they were finally put in and stood up well against fire. They met not only the problems in their direct line of duty, but saw things not in their direct line of duty and went and did them and were rewarded with the Croix de Guere and other military decorations.

Dr. McCarthy was enthusiastic about the way the American Negroes have carried themselves in Europe.

WILL H. VODERY

Will H. Vodery, bandmaster of the 807th Infantry, in a personal letter to Alex Rogers, written in France, Nov. 22, has the following to say about the band:

The New York

"To begin with I am well and have been well ever since leaving the States, although there has been a lot of sickness all around me. The band has made over good; with a bunch of raw green material I have worked it up to the place that I can say I've got a real band. Headquarters has taken us away from the regiment and attached us to the headquarters as post band of the first army.

"Gulfport, Opal Cooper, Eddie Stafford, Grandstaff, Blackburn, with the assistance of about twenty good voices, have put on a knock-out show, and seem to please them everywhere. Charlie Thorpe, along with the rest of the bunch, wishes to be remembered. We were commanded to play for the President of France on the 20th at Verdun and he said, in his language, it is 'astounding to hear such wonderful music.' Well, those babies certainly did play. We have really done our bit and made good."

SOLDIER DIES IN FRANCE

Somewhere in France, Nov. 8.—Another star will shine in Benton Harbor's (Mich., U. S. A.) service flag honoring the memory of Sergeant Benjamin Shubert Baber, son of Rev. and Mrs. Wm. Baber, who died in the service in France. Lobar pneumonia was given as the cause of death. Sergeant Baber's death is a great shock not only to the family but to a large number of friends in the twin cities, where the young man had frequently visited. He was a member of the 809th Pioneers. Sergeant Baber was a talented musician. He was buried at Camp 1, Section 1, in France.

MOST DANGEROUS WORK NOT GIVEN TO NEGROES

Constitution 3-8

Gen. Pershing Formally Denies Reports Circulated in the United States.

Washington, June 21.—Formal denial of reports circulated in this country, presumably by German agents, that negro soldiers with the American expedition forces are being given more dangerous work than the white troops was cabled to the war department today by General Pershing. The message said the negroes were in high spirits and that their only complaint was that they were not given more active service.

General Pershing said he could not commend too highly the spirit shown among the colored combat troops, who exhibit fine capacity for quick training and eagerness for the most dangerous work."

The general's cablegram, which was in reply to one of inquiry sent by Secretary Baker, said:

"The stories, probably invented by German agents, that colored soldiers in France are always placed in most dangerous positions and sacrificed to save white soldiers, that when wounded they are left on ground to die without medical attention, etc., are absolutely false.

"The following are the losses as reported up to June 18 in the four colored combat regiments now in France: Three Hundred and Sixty-ninth infantry, died of wounds 3, died of disease 8, severely wounded 2; 370th infantry, died of wounds none, died of disease 3, severely wounded none; 371st infantry, died of wounds none, died of disease 8, severely wounded none; 372d infantry, died of wounds none, died of disease 3, severely wounded none. These figures show conclusively that negro troops have not thus far occupied positions as dangerous as those occupied by white troops and that their physical condition is excellent.

"A tour of inspection just completed among American negro troops by officers of the training section of these headquarters show the comparatively high degree of training and efficiency among these troops. Their training is identical with that of other American troops serving with the French army, the effort being to lead all American troops gradually to heavy combat duty to a preliminary service in trenches in quiet sectors. Colored troops in trenches have been very fortunate, as one regiment had been there a month before any losses were suffered. This was almost unheard of heretofore on the western front.

"The exploits of two colored infantrymen some weeks ago in repelling a much larger German patrol, killing and wounding several Germans and winning the Croix de Guerre by their galantry, has aroused a fine spirit of emulation throughout the colored troops, all of whom are looking forward to more active service. Only regret expressed by colored troops is that they are not given more dangerous work to do. They are especially amused at the most dangerous positions and all are desirous of having more active service than has been permitted them thus far. I cannot commend too highly the spirit showed among the colored combat troops who exhibit fine capacity for quick training and eagerness for the most dangerous work."

OUR NEGRO SOLDIERS' BRILLIANT WAR RECORD

N Y C TIMES
FEBRUARY 9, 1919

Saw the Hottest Fighting in the Argonne and Elsewhere—Entire Battalion Got Croix de Guerre for Heroic Conduct

NEGRO soldiers made a record as fighters in this war as they did in the Spanish-American and civil wars. Fighting for the first time on the soil of the world's most famous battlefields—Europe—and for the first time brought into direct comparison with the best soldiers of Germany, Great Britain, and France, they showed themselves able to hold their own where the tests of courage, endurance, and aggressiveness were most severe.

Colored troops fought valiantly at Château-Thierry, Soissons, on the Vesle, in Champagne, in the Argonne, and in the final attacks in the Metz region. The entire first battalion of the 367th Infantry—"Buffaloes"—was awarded the Croix de Guerre for heroism in the drive on Metz. Most remarkable of all, they received their baptism of battle in this attack; at the start they won honors which veterans of many conflicts have failed to capture.

In previous engagements of the war, for distinguished service, three colored regiments as units were awarded the Croix de Guerre, which bestows on each member the right to wear the coveted badge. When the fighting stopped the negro troops were nearest the Rhine.

Not until now has the story as a whole of the part played by our negro troops in France been available. The total number of negro combat troops was 42,000. These consisted of the 92d Division, commanded by Major Gen. Charles G. Ballou, and four regiments of the Provisional 93d Division. To describe the colored man as a fighter in a war which, because of the terrible weapons used, called for more pure nerve than any other war, three ways present themselves: to show the negro in individual exploits, then in a regiment, engaged separately with white troops, and finally, to show him in a battle in a division entirely composed of men of his own race.

Negro as Individual Fighter.

Here is an individual exploit:

The 368th Infantry, colored, fought in the Argonne. It became necessary to send a runner with a message to the left flank of an American firing line. The way was across an open field swept by heavy enemy machine gun fire.

Volunteers were called for. Private Edward Saunders of Company I responded. Before he had gone far a shell cut him down. As he fell he cried to his comrades:

"Some one come and get this message. I am wounded."

Lieutenant Robert L. Campbell of the same company sprang to the rescue. He dashed across the shell-swept space, picked up the wounded private, and, with the Germans fairly hailing bullets around him, carried his man back to the American lines.

For the valor shown both were cited for the Distinguished Service Cross, and Lieutenant Campbell, in addition, was recommended for a Captaincy.

Another single detail, taken from this same company:

John Baker, having volunteered, was taking a message through heavy shell fire to another part of his line. A shell struck his hand, tearing away part of it, but the negro, unfaltering, delivered the message.

He was asked why he did not seek aid for his wounds before completing the journey.

"I thought the message might contain information that would save lives," was the answer.

Under the same Lieutenant Robert L. Campbell, a few colored soldiers, armed only with their rifles, trench knives, and hand grenades, picked up from shell holes along the way, were moving over a road in the Château-Thierry sector. Suddenly their course was crossed by the firing of a German machine gun. They tried to locate it by the direction of the bullets, but could not. To their right, a little ahead, lay a space covered with thick underbrush; just back of it was an open field.

Lieutenant Campbell, who knew by the direction of the bullets that his party had not been seen by the Germans, ordered one of his men, with a rope which they happened to have, to crawl to the thick underbrush, and tie the rope to several stems of the brush; then to withdraw as far as possible and pull the rope, making the brush shake as though men were crawling through it. The purpose was to draw direct fire from the machine gun, and, by watching, locate its position.

The ruse worked. Lieutenant Campbell then ordered three of his men to steal out and flank the machine gun on one side, while he and two others moved up and flanked it on the other side.

The brush was shaken more violently by the secret rope. The Germans, their eyes focused on the brush, poured a hail of bullets into it. Lieutenant Campbell gave the signal. The flanking party dashed up; with their hand grenades they killed four of the boches and captured the remaining three—also the machine gun.

In the larger bodies of colored troops, from the regiment to the division, the participation of the negro soldiers naturally divides itself into two parts on account of the way they were sent over. The negro division, composed of drafted men, did not get into action until right at the last, but individual regiments did. The four regiments that went over first were composed of old National Guard units recruited up to the required quota. These were the 369th, 370th, 371st, and 372d Infantry Regiments, afterward organized into the Provisional 93d Division. Until just before the last days of the fighting, however, they were brigaded separately with French troops. Three of these regiments, the 369th, the 371st, and the 372d, have received the high honor of the Croix de Guerre from the French Government for distinguished service. Sixty-one officers and men of the 370th have been similarly decorated.

Fighting Beside the French.

Here is the fighting record of one of these regiments sandwiched among the French forces—the 372d. It was the first to go over. Practically all its line officers, as well as privates, were colored.

They arrived in France on April 14 and went into training with the French on April 28. On June 6 the 372d was sent to the trenches just west of Verdun, occupying the famous battle-swept Hill 304 and sections at Four de Paris and Vauquois. On Hill 304 thousands of French and German soldiers had fallen as the battleline swung back and forward, and that this hill was given to the negroes to hold shows that as soldiers they had already won the confidence of the French.

The regiment's first engagement was in the Champagne sector, with Montoir as its objective. Here came the real test; the colored men were eager to get into the fight. They cheered and sang when the announcement came that their chance had arrived—but the question was: back of their enthusiasm had they the staying qualities drilled into European troops through centuries of training in the science of warfare?

The answer was that some of the heaviest and most effective fighting of the day was done by the negro regiment. From June 6 to Sept. 10 the 372d was stationed in the bloody Argonne Forest. On the night of Sept. 25 they were summoned to take part in the Argonne offensive and were in that terrific drive, one of the decisive engagements of the war, from Sept. 26 to Oct. 7. In the nine days' battle the negroes not only proved their fighting qualities in an ordeal such as men have rarely been called upon to face, but these qualities, in deadly striking power and stubborn resistance in crises, stood out with such distinction that the regiment won the coveted Croix de Guerre.

During the battle they aided in capturing 690 prisoners, fifteen big guns, twenty minenwerfers, rounded up an enormous amount of engineering material, large supplies of artillery munition, and brought down three German airplanes. For these achievements they were at once cited for bravery and efficiency in the General Orders issued by their French commander. The casualty list of the 372d in this and the previous fighting carried 500 names of men killed, wounded, and gassed.

Another regiment's record—that of the 369th, formerly the 15th New York, commanded by Colonel William Hayward, ex-Public Service Commissioner—reflects as high a credit on the soldierly qualities of the negro race. The 369th was in the Champagne offensive as a part of the Fourth Army, commanded by General Gouraud, a few miles west of the Argonne Forest. These are Colonel Hayward's own words describing the drive that tried out his men:

"At 5:25 A. M. the assault was launched, an assault that kept assaulting so far as our division was concerned for twelve days, in which we crossed rivers, captured towns, cut and climbed through acres and acres of barbed wire entanglements, stormed bluffs, ridges, and hills for fourteen kilometers, all the way facing stubborn and terribly effective artillery and machine gun fire.

"When we crossed the Dormois River, where it widened into a swamp, the boche was shelling industriously, and it looked like a hailstorm on the surface of the water. I saw shells break from concussion when they hit the water the same as on the ground. Much of the time we had to lean over and shout into each other's ears to be heard.

"At the end of twelve days we came out with our division, what was left of us, which included twenty-officers."

At the very last the 369th won another distinction. The following is from The Stars and Stripes, the organ of the American troops in France:

"The furthest north at 11 o'clock (when the armistice went into effect) on the front of the two armies was held at the extreme American left, up Sedan way, by the troops of the 77th Division. The furthest east—the nearest to the Rhine—was held by those negro soldiers who used to make up the old New York Fifteenth, and have long been brigaded with the French. They were in Alsace, and their line ran through Thann and across the railway that leads to Colmar."

How Negro Division Fights.

Next, to see a negro division in action:

The 92d Division was composed of the 183d Infantry Brigade, consisting of the 365th and 366th Infantry Regiments and the 350th Machine Gun Battalion; the 184th Infantry Brigade, composed of the 367th and 368th Infantry Regiments and the 351st Machine Gun Battalion; the 167th Artillery Brigade, consisting of the 349th, the 350th, and the 351st Artillery Regiments; and the 349th Machine Gun Battalion, the 317th Trench Mortar Battalion, the 317th Engineers' Regiment, the 317th Engineers' Train, the 317th Ammunition Train, the 317th Supply Train, the 317th Train Headquarters, the 92d Military Police Company; the 317th Sanitary Train, comprising the 365th, the 366th, the 367th, the 368th Field and Hospital and Ambulance Companies, 600 of the officers of the division were negroes.

Soon after the 92d was thoroughly organized it took over the Marbache sector. Here their activity in trench raids on the Germans earned from the Germans the name of "Black Devils." By these raids they drove the Germans north beyond Erehaut and Voivrotte to Cheminot bridge. In the hope of putting a check on these attacks the boches tried to destroy the bridge and flooded the country.

Up to this time the 92d had never been in a battle. The only regiment in it that had seen a big engagement was the 368th Infantry, which took part in the action in the Argonne Forest. The division's chance came in the drive on Metz. They were notified at 4 o'clock Sunday morning, Nov. 10. The motto, "See it through," of the "Buffaloes," the 367th Infantry, trained at Camp Upton, echoed through the whole division.

They began their advance at 7 o'clock from Pont-à-Mousson. Before them was a valley commanded by the heavy guns of Metz and by nests of German machine guns. The negroes seemed to realize that here for the first time was the great opportunity to show their mettle—that for the first time they were going to battle as a division. A sense of race solidarity possessed them, uniting their purpose as no amount of drilling could, and they were literally a terrible foe as they plunged forward to Preny. So rapidly did they advance that the list of casualties, considering the rain of shells, was small. Their objective for the day was Bois Frehaut. Picked Moroccan and Senegalese troops of the French, striking for the same point—in an odd competition of colored races on this day—were the first to arrive. The "Buffaloes," commanded by Major Charles L. Appleton of New York, with colored company commanders and Lieutenants, was called upon to hold the Germans at bay while the hard-hit 56th retreated. Here, in confronting the enemy with an iron resistance, the "Buffaloes" won their Croix de Guerre.

A little later Bois Frehaut was taken by the 92d. The Germans directed against the place a more murderous fire, but there was no driving out the colored men. The Stars and Stripes said of this fight:

"Probably the hardest fighting done by any Americans in the final hour was that which engaged the troops of the 28th, 92d, 81st, and 7th Divisions of the Second American Army, who launched a fire-eating attack above Vigneulles just at dawn on the 11th. It was no mild thing that last flare of the battle, and the order to cease firing did not reach the men in the front line until the last moment, when the runners sped with it from fox hole to fox hole."

Numerous officers and privates of the 92d were commended for meritorious conduct by General Orders. During the final engagement of the war the negro division held the line of Vandieres-St. Michel-Xon-Norry. The 92d suffered a total of 1,478 casualties.

GERMANS FEAR NEGROES, SAYS MILWAUKEEAN

MILWAUKEE WIS JOURNAL
NOVEMBER 11, 1918

Chief Yeoman William Endrizzi, Just Back From France, Tells of Many Interesting Scenes "Over There."

"The negroes certainly deserve a lot of praise for the work they are doing over there," said William Endrizzi, chief yeoman of the U. S. S. West Ekon, just back from France, and who visited at the home of Mr. and Mrs. La Flex, 386½ South Summit-av, over the week-end. "They were constantly up for citation and the Germans were afraid of them.

"The first thing that impressed me when we landed in France was the number of mourners. In many instances even young girls of 12 were in mourning.

"At Nantes I had occasion to meet some of our soldiers who had been wounded at the front and were being taken to hospitals.

"We had many funny experiences getting around France without knowledge of French. When going in a restaurant we would haul out our little French dictionary, find the word for dinner, etc., point to it, and let the waiter pronounce it and get our meal. Even on the street it was amusing to see some soldier accompanied by a French girl carrying a little dictionary in his hand. It was all right to find the words in our dictionaries, but when it came to putting them together to make sentences, there was where the trouble began!

"We left New York in a convoy on Aug. 29, and were twenty-three days on the high seas. On our way back to the States we broke down twice, and we were many hours in midocean without protection, but nothing happened. Only thirty miles from us a ship was sunk, and there were S. O. S. calls all about."

Chief Yeoman Endrizzi has just received an honorable discharge after four years of service, but he re-enlisted for another term. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Dan Endrizzi, Hurley, Wis. A brother, Anthony, is also in the navy and is stationed on the U. S. S. Huron.

How the Negroes Beat the Foe

DECEMBER 27, 1918

The news stories from the western front often contained the note, "The negro troops fought valiantly," but just how the dusky Americans fought has not been told in full. Indeed, it will never be told in full until the complete history of the world war is written.

Survivors of the fighting on the western front who have been invalided to this country and discharged from active service have nothing but praise for the negroes. They proved their valor on countless occasions, and it is one of the common stories that Jerry feared the "smoked Yankees" more than any other troops he met

The negroes were, perhaps, the most proficient bayonet fighters in the American army. They simply doted on the cold steel, and their natural agility, improved by intensive training, made them troops to be feared at close quarters. It was not long before the fame of the negro bayonet wielders spread among the Huns, and it was seldom the German troops would hold out when the yelling, sweating negroes jumped into their trenches.
